Congressional Quarterly services are primarily for local newspapers and broadcasters at standard rates based on circulation and radio time rates respectively. Services are also available at standard rates to other media such as general magazines, group magazines, forums, political publications of all parties, civic groups, educational groups, veterans organizations, trade unions and trade associations. A school and library rate provides no publication or broadcasting rights. Written or oral use, direct or indirect, is strictly reserved for current clients who pay for such rights in their regular editions, broadcasts, newsletters, bulletins or other releases. Congressional Quarterly sources must be indicated if lack of credit jeopardizes any part of copyrights to any of its material.

Congressional Quarterly reserves second and subsequent rights in its services. Hence group publications and others—even though clients—are not entitled without special permission to use back tables and other charts in campaign supplements, handbooks, pamphlets or in any other way that would cause Congressional Quarterly News Features to lose its rights and values in its own material. Non-clients wishing to quote or use material from any of its services must obtain written permission from Congressional Quarterly News Features, 1156 Nineteenth Street, N. W., Washington 6, D. POLICY STATEMENT

"By providing a link between the local newspaper and Capitol Hill we hope Congressional Quarterly can help to make public opinion the only effective pressure group in the country. Since many citizens other than editors are also interested in Congress, we hope that they too will find Congressional Quarterly an aid to a better understanding of their government.

"Congressional Quarterly presents the facts in as complete, concise and unbiased form as we know how. The editorial comment on the acts and votes of Congress, we leave to our subscribers." Foreword, Congressional Quarterly, Vol. 1, 1945—Henrietta and Nelson Poynter, Editors and Publishers.

What Is Congressional Quarterly?

Congressional Quarterly is the term used to designate all the services performed by Congressional Quarterly News Features, a private enterprise devoted to producing penetrating articles and complete, authentic reference data on Congress.

These services include: Special stories and features for newspapers; a current reference document on Congress, CQ Weekly Report; and the permanent reference volume, Congressional Quarterly Almanac.

Congressional Quarterly is designed to help newspapermen and the public check on the Congress of the Untied States, one of the most complex organizations in the world whose official documents each year contain more than 15 million words, weigh a hundred pounds or more and occupy several feet of bookshelf.

Congressional Quarterly is the only news bureau devoting exclusive attention to the United States Congress. Reproduction and quotation rights are reserved for its editorial clients, which include daily newspapers, magazines, radio broadcasters, and publications of trade associations and unions.

Congressional Quarterly's staff organizes and indexes the vast stream of material pouring from Capitol Hill, from day to day, in session and out. Every week it reports to editors in CQ Weekly Report and at the end of the year it compiles the story of Congress in Congressional Quarterly Almanac.

To make the material easier to use, CQ has divided it into eight broad subjects, or categories — Agriculture, Appropriations, Education and Welfare, Foreign Policy, Labor, Military and Veterans, Miscellaneous and Administrative, Taxes and Economic Policy.

Every record vote is published. These are checked off on charts, with the Members of Congress listed by states.

CQ is complete in that it summarizes every public bill, except minor administrative and District of Columbia legislation, acted upon by either house. A summary of "Bills Acted On" accompanies each categorical section of the Almanac. In addition, a synopsis of debate and all amendments and their disposition are given on all major bills.

All public bills introduced, including those acted upon and those which received no action, are summarized on pages 546 to 683. The bills are listed under the names of their sponsors, alphabetically within categories.

Until Congressional Quarterly began publication in 1945, there was no way for an editor or an interested citizen to find out about Congress and his own Representative and Senators without great expense and professional research.

Editorial Policy — Congressional Quarterly is non - partisan and unbiased. It is complete, concise and convenient. To achieve pin - point accuracy all possible sources are consulted for Congressional action; and detailed records are kept of lobby source material.

Data is recorded, checked and rechecked. There is constant vigilance from first drafts through proofs and final production. Voting records occasionally differ from those in the official Congressional Record because many times a Congressman will rise days or weeks after roll call and ask that the Record be corrected to show he voted another way. If there is unanimous consent, and there usually is, the change is made in the text of that day's Record. But no change is made in the original tally of votes until the bound volumes come out a year later. Congressional Quarterly voting charts include all such changes.

In order to condense the facts, but maintain objectivity, Congressional Quarterly attempts to devote proportionately as much space to each issue as the Congress itself devoted to it in a committee and on the floor. To give a complete picture of Congressional action without bias, the facts must be included, but not just some of the facts, nor more than the facts. Reporting which includes some measures and omits others can be considered as biased as reporting which twists the facts. Congressional Quarterly, therefore, achieves objectivity by thorough coverage—no piece of legislation, no matter how small, is left out of the summary — and by proportionate reporting of all actions.

CQ Almanac is a condensation of acts, amendments, committee activities, debate, hearings, investigations, lobbies, party policies, pressures and a record of votes — all recorded votes and many unrecorded votes.

The 1951 volume also gives key votes that were cast in the past seven sessions — 1945 - 51. The complete record will be found in the back volumes of Congressional Quarterly Almanac on your library shelves. Thus for the first time a full - term record is available for Senators up for re-election.

The analysis of each major bill passed by the 82nd Congress summarizes the recent background of the issue and gives page references in back volumes of Congressional Quarterly for those readers interested in the complete details and past votes.

Congressional Quarterly keeps individual voting records on every member of the House and Senate on every record vote. Blank forms for recording the voting of members, in the 79th, 80th, 81st and first session of the 82nd Congresses are available to CQ subscribers They are keyed to the back volumes of the Almanac and easily can be filled in.

CQ Weekly Report — Tells the story of Congress as it happens from day to day. It reports regularly on the various phases of Congressional action covering:

Congressional Issues — Regularly, CQ takes an important major issue scheduled for early action and details the background, the past votes, the arguments for and against it. It digests the bills involved and, presents the stands of Congressmen on both sides

Pressures on Congress — CQ covers the continuing story of the pressures exerted on Congress. It presents summaries of the legislative programs of the key lobbies. It reports the stands taken by organizations on specific bills and problems. It lists all lobbyist registrations, salaries and expenditures and analyzes the issues for which lobby money is spent.

The Congressional Week—CQ Weekly Report summarizes the action of Congress every week. It charts every record vote, summarizes bills acted on and bills introduced. It reports on hearings, committee action and floor debate.

Index — Congressional Quarterly issues every three months a cumulative index, with cross references, to be inserted in the front of the spring - back binder. This provides a quick check for continuing reference as action occurs. At the end of the year the Weekly Report and its indexes are replaced by Congressional Quarterly Almanac, which organizes the material by subject, instead of chronologically, for permanent reference.

Special Features Of CQ Almanac

Congressional Quarterly Almanac presents charts and analyses of Congress not available from any other source. Here are some of its special features, which with the Glossary of Congressional Terms and the explanation of How A Bill Is Passed—both in this volume — will help you to understand some of the technicalities of the operation of the United States Congress.

Voting Charts — When record votes are reported in the Congressional Record, the names are listed without party designation or any indication of where the Member comes from. Congressional Quarterly supplies the party labels, and lists the names of members under each state, with Congressional district numbers for Members of the House of Representatives. At the top of each chart, the vote is broken down to show how Democrats and Republicans divided on each issue. This party breakdown is an important key to what happens in Congress, and the full record could not be obtained anywhere else without hours of work for each vote.

CQ Poll — When Congress is in session, Congressional Quarterly sends out ballots frequently asking the Members of Congress who were absent for important roll calls how they would have voted if they had been present. CQ Poll results are incorporated in the CQ Almanac voting charts.

Key Votes — Consolidated charts showing how each Representative and Senator voted on the most important roll calls of the year. This is for convenience in making a quick check of a Congressman's record, when the reader does not wish to go through all of the votes.

Back Votes — In order to provide a quick summary of a Congressman's record, key votes for the 79th, 80th, and 81st Congresses, and the first session of the 82nd Congress (1945-1951) are included in this volume. Since it is difficult to find information on major votes before Congressional Quarterly began publication, the 1949 Almanac also includes the votes of Members of the 81st Congress on key controversial issues from 1919 through 1944.

Party Unity Charts — On most controversial issues a majority of Republicans vote one way and a majority of Democrats vote the other, but individual Congressmen often cross party lines. Congressional Quarterly keeps a running record and prints a chart showing how many times each Representative and Senator voted with the majority of his own party when there was a party split, and how often he voted with the opposition. The charts in this volume give party unity percentages for the 80th, 81st and first session of the 82nd Congresses, 1945-1951.

Bipartisan Support — Congressional Quarterly also compiles percentages of bipartisan support for every Congressman. This shows how he voted on issues where the majority of both parties took the same side. Percentages for the 80th, 81st and first session of the 82nd are shown on the Bipartisan Support charts in this volume.

On the Record — These percentages show the number of times a Congressman's stand is known and unknown on all votes of the session. When he is absent for a roll call he can be paired for or against a bill, or announce that if he were present he would have voted for or against the bill. Then Congressional Quarterly polls Members whose stands are unknown to give them an additional chance to go "on the record." If a Member does not avail himself of any of these opportunities to make his stand public, a question mark is recorded opposite his name on the CQ voting charts. On - the - record percentages are computed from the number of times a Congressman's position is known or unknown on all record votes during the year.

Seniority — A Congressman's committee assignments, chairmanships, office space and a great many other perquisites depend on his seniority in his party. Charts on page 32 show the rank by number of Members of the House and Senate in the 82nd Congress for the Democratic and Republican parties. Congressmen with the same political experience sworn in on the same date have the same rank. Counted as political experience, in order of importance, are Senate services, Governorship, and House service.

Ages — The chart of facts and figures on Members of Congress shows their ages at the beginning of the second session of the 82nd Congress. All figures have been checked with the Congressmen, but when it is impossible to get exact data — some members won't tell their age — an approximate age is indicated, arrived at from school graduation dates, army army service and other available dates.

Professions—This chart also checks off the professions of Members of the 82nd Congress. When they have had two or three careers in different fields this is indicated.

Committee Coverage — Much of the real work of Congress is handled in committee, and is fairly cut and dried by the time it reaches the floor. In covering a new Congress, Congressional Quarterly lists the membership of Senate and House Committees, and gives a brief biography of the chairmen and ranking minority members including how they have voted in the past on issues of the type which their committees will handle, together with political and economic characteristics of the states and districts they represent. Changes in committee memberships are noted as they occur. CQ Weekly Report regularly covers the actions, hearings and reports of all committees.

CQ Boxscore — A chart of Programs vs. Progress, which shows the stand of Democrats and Republicans on the Administration program and just where it got in Congress. In addition to the chart in the front of this volume showing President Truman's program for the 82nd Congress and what was done about it in the first session, there is a chart comparing progress of the Administration's program in the first sessions of the 79th through 82nd Congresses.

Pressure Groups — As part of the real story of Congress, Congressional Quarterly reports on the stands of organizations exercising their right of petititon to Congress. Their opinions and recommendations on pending measures follow the running story on each bill where lobbies were active.

Lobby Registrations — Congressional Quarterly has listed all lobby registrations since the passage of the Lobbying Act. The list for the first year of operation will be found in Congressional Quarterly Almanac Vol. III for 1947 and is continued in 1948, 1949, 1950 and in this volume. Lobby lists are organized by categories and include organizations represented, individuals registered and salaries.

Lobby Expenditures — Congressional Quarterly provides the only analysis and complete, cumulative tabulation of lobby expenditures.

Political Data — Campaign issues for 1952, plus information on candidates and the outlook in states and districts, are included in this Congressional Quarterly Almanac.

How To Use CQ Almanac

This Almanac sets forth the complete record of the 82nd Congress at its first session. In addition, it covers key issues in the 79th thru 81st Congresses. Since more than two thirds of the Members of the 82nd Congress have served before, their past records have been compiled from CQ Almanacs 1945-51, in order to provide a clue to their future votes, and also as a means of matching campaign stands against performance in Congress.

How To Check A Congressman

1. To gauge his activity, locate his name in the index. Here are listed Congressional subjects and actions in which he played a signal role. Turn to the page indicated after each citation beneath his name in the index.

2. For a quick survey of his voting on the crucial issues that were before the first session of the 82nd Congress, check for his name in the charts entitled "1951 Key Votes" on pages 62-65.

3. For a complete record of his voting in any comprehensive field — such as Labor or Foreign Policy — check the voting charts which follow each Almanac category. CQ lists every record vote for every Member of Congress. All voting charts should be checked for a Congressman's complete participation in legislative business.

4. Check the issues and votes on which he did not commit himself (marked ? on the charts). The frequency with which he registered no stand can be determined by reference to his "On the Record" percentage in the chart at the front of the Almanac. This gives the percentage of times his stand is known, whether he voted, paired or announced for or against, or answered the CQ Poll, when he was absent or undeclared on a roll call.

5. Check the bills he introduced. To do this, refer again to the index. Bills he introduced will be listed under his name, together with the general field to which they pertained. For a summary of the bill's purpose, and the name of the committee to which it was referred, turn to the "Bills Introduced" pages at the back of the book and locate the Congressman's name. His bills accompany it. It is important to recognize that bills introduced by a Congressman may be enacted under another Congressman's name, particularly in the House.

6. Check his party unity. The number of times he supported his political leadership, the number of times he opposed it, and the number of times he hedged by pairing or answering "present" are tabulated on a percentage basis. The tables start on page 76. Ones which follow also indicate his support of bipartisan measures.

7. Check his flexibility. His current record can be compared with his previous record by looking up his votes in previous Congresses. Key votes 1919-45 start on page 100 of the 1949 Almanac. Those for 1945-51 start on page 723 this volume. Details on a Congressman's actions in the 79th, 80th, and 81st Congresses will be found in CQ Almanacs 1945-50.

8. Finally, evaluate your Congressman's activity in relation to his opportunities. This can often be determined by noting his official position —either in committee or in his party councils. His seniority also is given, as well as data on his age and profession, his campaign expenditures, and the majority by which he was elected.

How To Check On A Bill

Locate the subject, by name or description, in the index. The topic may be cross - referenced. For example, citations under the broad definition of "Controls" include the Defense Production Act, which itself has a separate index listing, more detailed. An alternative method of locating the subject is to examine the table of contents, where much broader classifications are given.

Turn to the pages indicated by the index. A complete history of the subject will be found beneath its name. Major bills are presented in the following sequence:

1. Official number of the bill, and the number of the law it became if the bill was enacted.

2. A short description of the bill or law, including a summary of the course of it's enactment, the date approved, the date it expires, if at all, and the final approving votes.

3. A point - by - point analysis of the measure's provisions.

4. House and Senate votes on the measure, with non - record votes listed if available. Pages are given where detailed voting charts may be found.

5. Analysis of whether the measure jibes with the platform professions of sponsoring political groups. Any Presidential requests or comments relating to the measure are given.

6. The background and past history of the measure, through previous Congresses if necessary. In this case, page numbers of back Almanacs are given for reference.

7. A summary of the bill's progress through the house of origin.

8. Summary of the bill as originally introduced by sponsors.

9. Committee action on the bill, including data on hearings, if held, and amendments and votes affecting the bill while in committee. Majority and minority reports issued when bill was returned to the chamber are summarized.

10. Debates on the bill before passage or rejection in the house of origin. Principal debaters and decisive votes are given.

11. Final action on the bill in the house of origin.

12. Amendments accepted.

13. Amendments rejected.

14. Summary of bill's course through chamber to which it was sent by the house of origin.

15. Committee action in this second chamber.

17. Final action.

18. Amendments accepted.

19. Amendments rejected.

20. Conference proceedings in the case of differing House and Senate bills on the same subject. Outstanding points in dispute, and how they were reconciled.

21. Law enacted, including the date of the President's signature, and any comments by him on the measure.

22. Lobbying in connection with the legislation involved, including names, techniques financing, arguments, and expenditures.

In adition, state tables and other relevant data are given on some bills on which they have bearing. Procedures involving vetoed bills are fully described.

How A Bill Is Passed

Note: Parliamentary terms used below are defined in the Glossary, Pages 22-25.

Introduced — Any House Member may introduce any one of several types of bills and resolutions by handing it to the clerk of the House, or placing it in a box called the hopper. A Senator first gains recognition of the presiding officer to announce the introduction of a bill. In either case, the bill is numbered, labelled with the sponsor's name, and sent to the Government Printing Office so that copies can be made for subsequent study and action. One bill sometimes carries several Senators' names; this practice does not extend to the House where each bill carries the name of one sponsor only. However, other Members may file identical measures.

Referred — Following introductions, a bill is referred by the House parliamentarian on the Speaker's order, or by the Senate President, to the appropriate committee. Sponsors may indicate their preferences for referral, although custom and chamber rule generally govern this. An exception is the referral of private bills, sent to whatever group is designated by their sponsors. Bills are technically considered "read for the first time" when referred to House committees.

Committee Action — When a bill is before a committee, it is under the sparpest Congressional focus. Its chances for passage are quickly determined — and most bills fall by the legislative roadway. For example, only 7.7 per cent of the 8,679 bills introduced in the 1st Session of the 82nd Congress became law. The others died beneath the press of more urgent measures pending, or through committee disapproval expressed simply by inaction.

Bills which are acted upon by committees, however, involve varying procedures. Committeemen may decide their course in closed or executive session, or they may hold public or private hearings to obtain testimony on the bill. An entire committee may officiate, or a subcommittee may investigate the measure, later voting on what its recommendation will be.

The full committee then votes on its recommendation to the House or Senate. This is called reporting the bill. A committee may favor a bill on reception, but amend it before reporting it. In this case, the chamber must approve, alter, or reject the committee amendments before the bill itself can be put to a vote.

Committee Report — Whenever a committee reports a bill with amendments, it explains its reasons, usually with a written statement, called a report, which accompanies the bill. Often committee members opposing a measure issue a dissenting minority report. Sometimes a committee refuses to act on a bill, equivalent to killing it. Then the group can be forced into action only by an organized committee majority insisting on it. Where a majority agrees on bottling up a bill, the measure can only be withdrawn from the group's purview by a discharge petition, requiring signatures of 218 House members on House bills, or by passage of a special resolution in the Senate. Discharge attempts rarely succeed.

After a bill is reported back to the House where it originated, it is placed on the calendar.

Debate — A bill is then brought to debate by varying procedures. If a routine measure, it may await the call of the calendar. If it is urgent or important, it can be taken up in the Senate by unanimous consent, or by a majority vote. In the House, precedence is granted if a special rule is obtained from the Rules Committee. Such rules often are debated and voted upon in the same fashion as regular bills. They are important because they specify how long the bill may be debated, and whether it may be amended from the floor. If floor amendment is banned, the bill is considered under a so - called gag rule which permits only committee members to alter its language, subject to chamber acceptance.

A bill debated under an open rule is fair game for friends and foes. Committee amendments are always taken up first, but may be changed, as may all amendments up to the second degree, i.e., a changed amendment can not be further altered. Substitute motions, however, are permissible.

Duration of debate in the House depends on whether the bill is before the Committee of the Whole or under discussion by the House proper. In the former, time for general debate is equally divided between proponents and opponents. At the end of this general discussion, the bill is read "for the second time," section by section, for amendment. Debate on each amendment is limited to five minutes. Persons debating bills considered in the House proper are allowed one hour apiece. This practice is infrequent. Senate debate is usually unlimited. It can be halted only by unanimous consent, or by "cloture" which requires a two-thirds vote.

Vote — Voting on bills may occur repeatedly before they are finally approved or rejected, coming in the House both on the rule for the bill, and various amendments to it. Voting on amendments often is a more illuminating test of a bill's support than the final tally. While many votes on subsections of bills are bitterly and closely contested, many of the losers often join the winners on passage of the bill itself "for the record." Often Congressmen approve final passage of bills after vigorously supporting amendments which would have scuttled them if adopted. The House and Senate vote both by untabulated voice votes, and a recorded roll call of their names, to which they answer Yea or Nay. The House also uses a standing vote, called a division, and a teller vote, when members file up the center aisle past counters.

After amendments to a bill have been voted upon, a vote may be taken on a motion to recommit the bill to committee. If carried, this vote removes the bill from the chamber's calendar. If unsuccessful, a vote is then held on reading "for the third time." This is generally perfunctory, although opponents of action on a House bill can delay this move by objecting, and asking for a full reading of an engrossed (formal) copy of the bill. One such demand suffices to do this. After the eventual third reading, however, the vote on final passage is taken. The action may be followed by a motion to reconsider the vote just taken, and this motion itself may be followed by a non-debatable, highest - priority move to lay it on the table. Usually the majority voting for the bill's passage votes for the tabling motion, consolidating and safeguarding the previous action. The bill has then been formally passed by the chamber.

Transmitted — After a bill is passed by either chamber, it is stripped of its sponsor's name, and henceforth is known officially by its initialed and numbered title. The approved bill is then sent to the opposite house. This body may then take one of several steps. It may pass the bill as is — accepting the other chamber's amendments. It may send the bill to committee for scrutiny or alteration, or reject the entire bill, advising the opposite house of its actions. Or it may simply ignore the bill submitted while it completes work on its own version of the legislation. Often the opposite chamber makes only minor changes, readily agreed to by the other house, and the measure has taken its penultimate step towards being law. But if the opposite chamber basically alters the bill submitted to it, or lays the measure aside until a differing version is prepared, an intervening step is required, and the separate bill approved by each house is "sent to conference."

Conference — A conference undertakes to harmonize any House bill and Senate bill which relate to the same subject, but which clash in their respective legislative provisions. The conference is staffed by interested senior members appointed by the presiding officers of the two houses, usually from the committees which managed the bills. This charges the members of one house most familiar with the bill with the duty of maintaining their chamber's position in the face of amending actions by the conferees of the other house. Theoretically conferees are not allowed to write new legislation in reconciling the two bills before them, but this curb is often by-passed. Many bills have been put into a palatable compromise form only after new language was provided by the conferees.

In most cases, the ironing out of difficulties in Senate and House bills requires time particularly on knotty appropriations measures. As a conference proceeds, conferees reconcile their differences, but generally they grant concessions only insofar as they remain sure that the chamber they represent will accept the compromises. Frequently uncertainty over this, or the positive refusal of a chamber to back down on a disputed amendment, will result in an impasse, and the two bills may die in conference, even though each was approved by its sponsoring chamber.

Conference Report — When the conferees have harmonized their bills, they prepare a conference report, explaining why they did — or did not — retain some amendments, and cut out others. The reports are the justifications, to their respective houses, of the actions of the conferees, and the explanations, in document form, must be submitted to each house. The conference report must be approved by each. Generally the compromises reached by the conferees are written into a new bill, which is printed in the conference report. Consequently, approval of the report is approval of the compromise bill worked out. The order of voting on conference reports is regulated. The chamber asking for a conference yields the other chamber the opportunity to vote first.

Signed — After a bill has been passed, either in its original form or its compromise form after a conference, it is enrolled on parchment paper and sent around the Capitol for various official signatures. The Secretary of the Senate signs it to certify that the printing is correct. The Speaker of the House then signs it, followed by the Vice-President in his capacity as 'presiding officer of the Senate.

The parchment document is then sent to the White House, where the President must sign it before it can become law. If he does not sign it within ten days (excluding Sundays) and Congress is in session, the bill becomes law without his signature.

Vetoes — However, should Congress adjourn before the 10 days expire, and the President has failed to sign the measure, it does not become law. This procedure is called the pocket veto. Occasionally a President vetoes a bill, refusing to sign it and returning it to the Congress with a message stating his reasons. The message is sent to the chamber which originated the bill. If no action is taken there on the message, the bill affected dies. Frequently, however, Congress attempts to override the President's veto. This requires a two-thirds vote to make the bill law, "the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding." The vote is usually taken the same day the message is received. Debate can precede this vote, with motions permitted to lay the message on the table, postpone action on it, or refer it to committee. If the President's veto is overridden by a two-thirds vote in both houses, the bill affected becomes law. Otherwise it is dead, and can be revived only by reintroduction and routing through the process all bills undergo.

When public bills are finally passed and signed, they lose their bill identification numbers and receive public law numbers.

Glossary of Congressional Terms

Act — When a bill is passed by either chamber, and sent to the other, its title changes from "A Bill" to "An Act". The sponsor's name is deleted but the number of the measure and the initials designating the house of origin remain unchanged.

Adjournment sine die — Adjournment without definitely fixing a day for reconvening; literally "adjournment without day." Marks the official end of a Congressional session.

Adjournment to a Day Certain — Adjournment under a motion or resolution which fixes the next time of meeting. Neither house can adjourn for more than three days without the concurrence of the other. A session of Congress is not ended by adjournment to a day certain.

Amendment — Proposal of a Congressman to alter the language or stipulations in a bill or act. It is usually printed, debated, and voted upon in the same manner as a bill.

Appeal — A Congressman's challenge of any ruling or decision arbitrarily made by the presiding officer of the Senate or House. The Congressman appeals to Members of the Chamber to override the decision. If carried by a majority vote, the appeal nullifies the chair's ruling.

Appropriation Bill — Grants the actual monies approved by authorization bills, but not necessarily to the total premissable under the ceiling set by the authorization bill. Technically, all appropriation bills originate in the House, and should await passage of authorization measures before enactment. In practice, however, rules to this effect are sometimes ignored or suspended. In addition to general appropriation bills, there are two specialized types. (See Deficiency and Supplemental.)

Authorization Bill — Authorizes a program, specifies its general aim and conduct, and puts a ceiling on monies that can be used to finance it. Usually enacted before appropriation bill is passed. (See Contract Authorization.)

Bills — Most legislative proposals before Congress are in the form of bills, and are designated as HR (House of Representatives) or S (Senate) according to the House in which they originate and by a number assigned in the order in which they were introduced, from the beginning of each two - year Congressional term. "Public bills" deal with general questions, and become Public Laws if approved by Congress and signed by the President. "Private bills" deal with individual matters such as claims against the government, immigration and naturalization cases, land titles, etc., and become Private Laws if approved and signed.

The introduction of a bill, and its referral to an appropriate committee for action follows the process given in "How a Bill Is Passed." (See Page 11.)

In addition to bills, other proposals receive similar action by Congress. (See Concurrent Resolution, Joint Resolution, Resolution.)

Bills Introduced — In the Senate, any number of Senators may join in introducing a single bill. In the House, no more than one Member's name may appear on a bill. The result is that in the House many duplicate bills are introduced, no more than one of which is passed. Thus, a Member may have his name on a bill introduced but not on an identical bill passed. In cases of multiple identical bills, introduced, the bill which is selected for passage is usually that sponsored by the chairman of the committee having jurisdiction, or the senior Member of the group of sponsors.

Many bills in reality are committee bills and are introduced under the name of the chairman of the committee or subcommittee as a formality. All appropriation bills fall into this category, as do many other bills, particularly those dealing with complicated, technical subjects. A committee frequently holds hearings on a number of related bills and agrees on a single bill which is then introduced under the chairman's name.

Bills Referred — When introduced, a bill is referred to the committee which has jurisdiction over the subject with which the bill is concerned. The appropriate reference for bills is spelled out in the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946. Bills are referred by the Speaker in the House and the Presiding Officer in the Senate. Appeals may be made from their decisions.

Budget — The document sent to Congress by the President in January of each year estimating government revenue and expenditures for the ensuing fiscal year and recommending appropriations in detail. Congressional opinion on it is expressed by joint resolution. (See Legislative Budget.)

Calendar — An agenda or list of pending business. There are varying types of calendars in each house.

In the Senate, all legislative matters reported from committee go on a single calendar. They are listed there in order, but may be called up irregularly by the majority leader either by a motion to do so, or by obtaining the unanimous consent of the Senate. Frequently the minority leader is consulted to assure unanimous consent. Only cloture can limit debate on bills called up out of the order in which they appear on the calendar. (See Consent, Discharge, Executive, House, Private and Union Calendar.)

Calendar Wednesday — In the House, on every Wednesday, committees are called in the order in which they appear in Rule X of the House Manual, and may call up any of their bills from the House or the Union Calendars, except bills which are privileged. General debate is limited to two hours. Bills called up from the Union Calendar are considered in Committee of the Whole. Calendar Wednesday is not observed during the last two weeks of a session, and may be dispensed with at other times — by a two - thirds vote. It usually is dispensed with.

Call of the Calendar — Senate bills which are not brought up by a motion or a unanimous consent agreement are brought before the Senate for action when the calendar listing them in order is "called." Bills considered in this fashion are usually non - controversial and debate is limited to five minutes on each.

Chamber — Meeting place for the total membership of either the House or the Senate, as opposed to the respective committee rooms.

Clean Bill — Frequently after a committee has finished a major revision of a bill, one of the committee members, usually the chairman, will assemble the changes plus what is left of the original bill into a new measure and introduce it as a "clean bill". The new measure which carries a new number, is then sent to the floor for consideration as though it had never been amended. This often is a timesaver, as committee - recommended changes do not have to be considered one at a time by the chamber.

Cloture — The process by which debate can be limited in the Senate. A motion for cloture can apply to any measure before the Senate except a proposal to change the chamber's rules of procedure. It requires 16 Senators' signatures for introduction, and 64 votes for passage — 2/3 of the Senate membership as required by the Constitution. The motion is voted upon by a yea - nay roll call one hour after the Senate meets on the second day following introduction of the motion. If voted, cloture limits each Senator to one hour of debate.

Committee — A subdivision either of the House or the Senate which readies legislation for action by the parent chamber. There are several types of committees. (See Standing, Select or Special, and Watchdog.)

Committee of the Whole — The working title of what is formally "The Committee of the Whole House (of Representatives) on the State of the Union." Unlike other committees, it has no fixed membership. It is comprised of any 100 or more House members who participate — on the floor of the chamber — in debating or altering legislation before the body. Such measures, however, must first have passed through the regular committees, and be on the calendar.

Technically, the Committee of the Whole considers only bills directly or indirectly appropriating money, authorizing appropriation, or involving taxes or charges on the public. Actually the Committee of the Whole may consider any type of measure, and often does. The reason is twofold. Because the Committee of the Whole need number only 100 Congressmen, a quorum is more readily attained, and business is expedited. Secondly, none of the group's votes can be roll calls which require yeas and nays for the record.

When the full House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole, it supplants the Speaker with a "chairman." The measure is debated or amended, with non - roll - call votes as needed. When the Committee completes its action on the measure, it dissolves itself by "rising". The Speaker returns, and the full House hears the erstwhile chairman of the Committee report that group's recommendations. The full House then acts upon them.

Concurrent Resolution — A concurrent resolution, designated H Con Res or S Con Res, must be passed by both houses but does not require the signature of the President and does not have the force of law. Concurrent resolutions generally are used to make or amend rules applicable to both houses or to express the sentiment of the two houses. A concurrent resolution, for example, is used to fix the time for adjournment of a Congress. It might also be used to convey the congratulations of Congress to another country on the anniversary of its independence.

Conference — A meeting between representatives of each house to reconcile differences between the two houses over the provisions of a given bill. The members of the conference committee are appointed by the Speaker and the President of the Senate and are called "managers" for their respective houses. Conference reports must be agreed to by a majority of the managers for each house, and cannot be amended by either house. They must be approved by both houses. Elaborate rules govern the conduct of the conferences.

Congressional Record — The daily, printed account of proceedings in both House and Senate chambers, with expressions reported verbatim. Committee activities are not covered, excepting their reports to the parent body. Highlights of legislative action are embodied in a Digest section of the Record, and Congressmen are entitled to have their extraneous remarks printed in its appendix. They may edit and revise remarks made on the floor, and frequently do, so that quotations reported by the press are not always found in the Record.

Consent Calendar — Members of the House may place on this calendar any bill on the Union or House calendar which is non - controversial. Bills on the consent calendar are normally called on the first and third Mondays of each month, but consideration of any bill may be blocked by the objection of any Member. If there are three objections, the bill is stricken from the consent calendar but remains on the Union or House calendar.

Contract Authorizations — Found in both authorization and appropriation bills, these authorizations are stopgap provisions which permit the federal government to let contracts or obligate itself for future payments from funds not yet appropriated. The assumption is that funds will be available for payment when contracted debts come due.

Correcting the Record — Rule prohibit Members from changing their votes after the result has been announced. But frequently, hours, days, or months after a vote has been taken, a Member announces that he was "incorrectly recorded" and requests — and almost always gets — unanimous consent to have the vote corrected in the permanent edition of the Congressional Record. This occurs more frequently in the House than in the Senate. Errors in the text of the Record may be corrected in the same manner.

Deficiency Appropriation — An appropriation to cover the difference between an agency's regular appropriation and the amount deemed necessary for it to operate for the full fiscal year. Regular appropriations normally are passed in one fiscal year for the ensuing fiscal year. Deficiency appropriations are for use in the same fiscal year in which they are passed.

Dilatory Motions — A motion, usually made upon a technical point, for the purpose of killing time and preventing action on a bill. The rules outlaw dilatory motions, but enforcement is largely within the discretion of the presiding officer.

Discharge a Committee — Relieve a committee from jurisdiction over a measure before it. This is rarely a successful procedure, attempted more often in the House than in the Senate. If a committee does not report a bill within 30 days after having the bill referred to it, any member of the House can file a discharge petition. This petition needs the signatures of 218 members. After the required signatures have been obtained, there is a delay of seven days. Then, on the second and fourth Monday of each month, except during the last six days of a session, any Member who has signed the petition may be recognized to move that the committee be discharged. Debate on the motion to discharge is limited to 20 minutes, and, if the motion is carried, consideration of the bill becomes a matter of high privilege.

In the Senate, motions to discharge a committee are made in the form of Senate resolutions which can be called up on motion, just as are other matters of Senate business.

Discharge Calendar — The calendar to which motions to discharge committees (see above) are referred when they have the necessary 218 signatures and before they are acted on.

Discharge Resolution — In the Senate, a special motion any Senator may introduce to relieve a committee from jurisdiction over a bill before it. Senate approval is required. In the House, a discharge resolution is introduced by the chairman of a committee whose bill is blocked in the House Rules Committee. If the chairman's resolution is approved by the House, the Rules group loses jurisdiction over the bill before it.

Division Vote — In either House or Senate, Members in favor stand and are counted by the presiding officer. The Members opposed stand and are counted. Individual votes are not recorded. In the House, the presiding officer announces the numbers for and against. In the Senate, only the result is announced.

Enacting Clause — Key phrase in bills saying ". . . therefore be it enacted that . . .". A successful motion to strike it from legislation kills the measure.

Engrossed Bill — The final copy of a bill, with the text as amended and certified to by the Clerk of the House or the Secretary of the Senate. Before becoming a law, a bill is sometimes engrossed, always is enrolled. (See below.)

Enrollment of Bill — The act of preparing a bill for the signature of the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate and for transmission to the President. An enrolled bill is printed on parchment. In modern times, Congress has ignored the warning of Thomas Jefferson and older English parliamentarians that "when the bill is enrolled it is not to be written in paragraphs, but solidly, and all of a piece, that the blanks between the paragraphs may not give room for forgery."

Executive Calendar — This is an additional, non - legislative calendar, in the Senate, on which Executive Documents such as treaties and nominations are listed.

Executive Document — A document, usually a treaty, sent to the Senate by the President for consideration or ratification. These are identified for each session of Congress as Executive A, Executive B, etc. They are referred to committee, remaining there until acted upon or withdrawn by the President.

Executive Resolution — A Senate resolution dealing with executive business rather than legislative, i. e., with the handling of a treaty or nomination. A motion to discharge a committee from consideration of a nomination would be made in an Executive Resolution, whereas a motion to discharge a committee from consideration of a bill would require an ordinary Senate Resolution. The Executive Resolution is not used in the House of Representatives.

Executive Session — Meeting of a Senate or House committee which only the group's members are privileged to attend. Frequently witnesses appear before committees meeting in executive session, and other Congressmen may be invited, but the public and press are not allowed.

Expenditure — The actual expenditure of money as distinguished from the appropriation of it. Expenditures are made by the disbursing officers of the Administration; appropriations are made only by Congress. The two are rarely equal in any fiscal year; expenditures may represent money appropriated one, two or more years previously.

Filibuster — An effort by a minority to prevent a vote on a bill which probably would pass if brought to a vote. Members filibustering attempt to consume time. The most common method is to take advantage of the Senate's rule for unlimited debate, but other forms of parliamentary maneuvering may be used. The stricter rules in the House make filibusters more difficult, but they are attempted from time to time through devices such as repeated demands for quorum calls.

Fiscal Year — Financial operations of the government are carried out in a 12-month fiscal year, beginning on July 1 and ending on June 30. The fiscal year carries the date of the calendar year in which it ends.

Floor Manager — A Member, usually representing sponsors of a bill, who attempts to steer it through debate and revision to a final vote in the chamber. Floor managers are usually chairmen of the committees endorsing the bill and seeking its enactment, or ranking committeemen. Managers are responsible for apportioning the time granted supporters of the bill for debating it.

Frank — A Congressman's facsimile signature on envelopes, used in lieu of stamps for his official outgoing mail, thus postage-free.

Germane — Pertinence to the subject of a bill of any amendments offered. All House amendments must be germane to the bill. The Senate requires that amendments be germane only when they are to general appropriation bills, or to those being considered under cloture.

Hearings — Most bills are not reported out of committee until interested persons are given a chance to be heard in support of, or opposition to the legislation. The committee announces its hearings, from one day to many weeks in advance, and may invite certain persons to testify. Persons who request time to testify may be turned down by the committee but most requests are honored.

Hopper — Box on House Clerk's desk where bills are deposited on introduction.

House — The House of Representatives, as distinct from the Senate, although each body is a "house" of Congress.

House Calendar — Listing for action by the House of Representatives of public bills which do not directly or indirectly appropriate money or raise revenue.

Immunity — Privilege of Congressmen to make verbal statements on the floor and in committee for which they cannot be sued or arrested for slander or libel. Also, freedom from arrest while traveling to or from sessions of Congress or on official business. Congressmen in this status may be arrested only for treason, felonies or a breach of the peace, as defined by Congressional manuals.

Joint Committee — A specified number of members of both House and Senate are named to joint committees to consider many matters of importance. Usually a joint committee is investigative in nature. There are a few standing joint committees such as the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy and the Joint Committee on the Economic Report.

Joint Resolution — A joint resolution, designated H J Res or S J Res, requires the approval of both houses and the signature of the President, just as a bill does, and has the force of law if approved. There is no real difference between a bill and a joint resolution. The latter is generally used in dealing with limited matters, such as a single appropriation for a specific purpose or the granting of Congressional approval for executive actions — for example, international executive agreements. Joint resolutions also are used to propose amendments to the Constitution. These do not require presidential signature but go to the Secretary of State to be transmitted to the states for ratification.

Journal — The official record of the proceedings of the House and Senate. The Journal records the actions taken, but unlike the Congressional Record, it does not include the views expressed. Rules of both Houses provide for the Journal to be read and approved at the beginning of each legislative day. This is a matter of highest privilege and no other business can intervene except by unanimous consent, or, in the House, a successful motion to suspend the rules.

Law — An Act which has been signed by the President, or passed over his veto by the Congress. Laws are listed by number; for example, the Housing Act of 1949 (S 1070) became Public Law No. 171.

Legislative Budget — The opinion of Congress, expressed in a concurrent resolution, on the over-all totals of the Federal budget. The resolution is reported jointly by the House and Senate Appropriations Committee. It includes, among other things, the estimated over-all Federal receipts and expenditures for the ensuing fiscal year, and a recommendation for the maximum amount to be appropriated for expenditure in the fiscal year, with a reserve for deficiencies. According to the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, the legislative budget must be reported by Feb. 14, but a later date may be set by Concurrent Resolution.

Legislative Day—The "day" extending from the time either house meets after an adjournment until the time it next adjourns. Because the House normally adjourns from day to day, legislative days and calendar days usually coincide. But in the Senate, a legislative day may, and frequently does, extend over several calendar days.

Lobby — Group seeking to influence the passage or defeat of legislation, usually for pay and on a full-time, organized basis. Elaborate definitions of what constitutes lobbying are set forth in the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946.

Majority Leader — Officer of the nominally controlling party in either house who is virtually program director for that chamber, speaking for its majority.

Majority Whip — One member of the majority party in both House and Senate is selected as "whip". In effect he is an assistant majority leader. His job is to help marshal the majority forces on matters of interest to the majority.

Manual — The official handbook in each house prescribing its organization, procedures and operations in detail. The Senate Manual contains standing rules, orders, laws and resolutions affecting Senate business; the House Manual is the equivalent for the lower chamber. Both volumes contain previous codes under which Congress functioned and from which it continues to derive precedents. Committee powers are outlined. The rules set forth in the Manuals may be changed by elaborate chamber actions also specified by the Manuals.

Marking Up A Bill — Going through a measure, usually in committee, taking it section by section, revising language, penciling in new phrases, etc.

Writing a new bill: Recopying in final form for submittal a bill that has been heavily "marked up." Sometimes this means abandoning a greatly revised bill and beginning anew. (See "clean bill.)

Minority Leader — Chief strategist and floor spokesman for the numerically inferior party in either house.

Minority Whip — The minority whip performs the same duties for the minority party in each house as the majority whip (see above) performs for the majority party.

Morning Hour — The time set aside at the beginning of each legislative day for the consideration of regular routine business. The "hour" is of indefinite duration in the House, where it is rarely used. It lasts two hours in the Senate where it is used more frequently. The morning hour can be terminated earlier if the morning business has been completed. This business includes such matters as messages from the President, communications from the heads of departments, messages from the House, the presentation of petitions and memorials, reports of standing and select committees and the introduction of bills and resolutions. During the first hour of the morning hour in the Senate, no motion to proceed to the consideration of any bill on the calendar is in order except by unanimous consent. During the second hour, motions can be made but must be decided without debate.

Motion — Request by a Congressman for any one of a wide array of parliamentary actions. He "moves" for a certain procedure, or the consideration of a measure, or a vote, etc. Only one motion can be made at a time. The precedence of motions, and whether they are debatable, is set forth in the House and Senate Manuals.

Nominations — Names of persons appointed to office by the executive branch of the government. The Senate is required by the Constitution to confirm, or withhold confirmation from, these persons. Sometimes Senators object to appointees as being "personally obnoxious" to them. Usually other Senators then join in blocking the appointment out of courtesy to their colleagues.

One Minute Speeches — Addresses by House members at the beginning of a legislative day. The speeches may cover any subject, but are limited strictly to one minute's duration.

Override a Veto — A two-thirds vote is required to override and the yeas-and-nays are required by the Constitution. The form of the question is, "Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?"

Pairs — Frequently Congressmen are either unable to attend a roll call vote, or do not wish to be recorded officially in its final tally. They resort to the device of pairing, an opponent of the measure coupling with a proponent. Pairs do not affect the announced totals of roll call votes. "General" pairs between two Members are in effect until mutually suspended. Other pairs apply to specific votes only, and reveal the position of each person pairing.

Another device for registering opinion on a bill without recording a vote is for a member to "announce" or "declare" — after the roll has been called — what his vote would have been.

Pocket Veto — The act of the President in withholding his approval of a bill after Congress has adjourned. When Congress is in session, a bill becomes law without the President's signature if he does not act upon it within ten days, excluding Sundays, from the time he gets it. But if Congress adjourns within that ten-day period, the bill is killed without the President's signature.

Point or Order — An objection raised by a Congressman that the chamber is departing from rules governing its conduct of business. The objector cites the rule violated, the chair sustaining his objection if correctly made. Order is restored by the chair suspending proceedings of the chamber until it conforms to the prescribed "order of business". Often a point of no order — noise and disorderly conduct in the chamber — is similarly made and treated.

Previous Question — In this sense, a "question" is an "issue" before the House for a vote and the issue is "previous" when some other topic has superseded it in the attention of the chamber. A motion for the previous question, when carried, has the effect of cutting off all extraneous debate and forcing a vote on the subject originally at hand. If, however, the previous question is moved and carried before there has been any debate on the subject at hand and the subject is debatable, then 40 minutes of debate is allowed before the vote. The previous question is sometimes moved on a non-debatable question in order to prevent amendments. The motion for the previous question is a debate-limiting device and is not in order in the Senate.

Private Calendar — Private bills dealing with individual matters such as claims against the government, immigration and naturalization cases, land titles, etc. Two Members may block a private bill, which then is recommitted to committee.

Privilege — Privilege relates to the rights of Congressmen, and to the relative priority of the motions and actions they may make in their respective chambers. The two are distinct. "Privileged questions" concern legislative business. "Questions of privilege" concern legislators themselves.

Privileged Questions — The order in which legislative measures may be considered by Congress is governed by strict priorities. Other things being equal between two bills, for example, the one with the higher precedence according to chamber rules is considered first. It is considered more "privileged" than the other, perhaps because of its nature. Motions are similarly ranked. A motion to table is more privileged than a motion to recommit. Thus a motion to recommit can be superseded by a motion to table. Even if the recommital-move were before the chamber for action at the time, it would be eclipsed by the more privileged tabling-move, and a vote would be forced on the latter motion only. A motion to adjourn, however, would take precedence over this one, and is thus considered of the "highest privilege."

Questions of Privilege — These are matters affecting members of Congress individually or collectively. Congressmen singly involve questions of "personal privilege." A Member rising to a question of personal privilege is given precedence over almost all other proceedings. An annotation in the House Rules points out that the privilege of the Member rests primarily on the Constitution, which gives him a conditional immunity from arrest; and an unconditional freedom of debate in the House.

Questions affecting the rights, safety, dignity and integrity of proceedings of the House or Senate as a whole are questions of privilege of the House or Senate, as the case may be.

Quorum — The number of Members whose presence is necessary for the transaction of business. In the Senate and House it is a majority of the membership (when there are no vacancies, this is 49 in the Senate and 218 in the House). A quorum is 100 in the Committee of the Whole House. If a point of order is made that a quorum is not present, the only business in order is either a motion to adjourn or a motion to direct the Sergeant-at-Arms to request the attendance of absentees.

Readings of Bills — Ancient parliamentary law required bills to be read three times before they were passed. This custom is of little modern significance except in rare instances. Normally the bill is considered to have its first reading when it is introduced and printed, by title, in the Congressional Record. Its second reading comes when consideration begins, and its third reading when action has been completed on amendments. Amendments are not in order after a bill has been engrossed and read for the third time, though debate may — and in the Senate frequently does — continue on the bill itself before passage.

Recess — Distinguished from adjournment in that a recess does not end a legislative day and therefore does not interfere with unfinished business. The rules in each house set forth certain matters to be taken up and disposed of at the beginning of each legislative day. The House, which operates under much stricter rules than the Senate, usually adjourns from day to day. The Senate often recesses.

Recommit to Committee — A simple motion, made on the floor after deliberation on a bill, to return it to the committee which reported it. "Recommittal" is considered a death blow to the bill if approved. In the House a motion to recommit can be made only by a Member opposed to the bill, and in recognizing a Member to make the motion, the Speaker gives the minority party preference over the majority.

Recommit with Instructions — A motion to recommit may include instructions to the committee to report the bill again with specific amendments or by a certain date. Or the instructions may be to make a particular study with no definite deadline for final action.

Reconsider a Vote — A motion to reconsider the vote by which an action was taken has the effect, until it is disposed of, of suspending the action. In the Senate the motion can be made only by a Member who voted on the prevailing side of the original question, or by a Member who did not vote at all. In the House it can be made only by a Member on the prevailing side. A common practice after close votes in the Senate is a motion to reconsider followed by a precedence - taking motion to table the motion to reconsider. On this motion to table, Senators vote as they voted on the original question to enable the motion to table to prevail. The matter is then finally closed and further motions to reconsider are not entertained. As a routine precaution in the House, the Speaker announces after every vote that "without objection, a motion to reconsider is laid on the table." Motions to reconsider must be entered in the Senate within the next two days of actual session after the original vote has been taken. In the House they must be entered either on the same day or on the next succeeding day the House is in session.

Record Vote — This is a roll call of the entire chamber membership, to which each Member must answer Yea or Nay. The Constitution requires yea-and-nay votes on the question of overriding a veto. In other cases, they can be obtained by the demand of one-fifth of the Members present. In the House, the yeas-and-nays are required automatically whenever a Member objects to a non-record vote when a quorum is not present if the question is one which requires a quorum. The yeas-and-nays are not taken in the Committee of the Whole.

Report — Both a verb and a noun. A committee which has been examining a bill referred to it by the parent chamber "reports" its finding and recommendations to the chamber when the committee returns the measure. The process is called "reporting" a bill. A "report" is the document setting forth the committee's explanations of its action. Most reports favor a bill's passage. Adverse reports are occasionally submitted, but more often, when a committee disapproves a bill, it simply fails to report it at all. When a committee report is not unanimous, the dissenting committeemen may file a statement of their views, called Minority Views and referred to as a Minority Report.

Rescission — An appropriations bill rescinding, or cancelling, funds previously appropriated.

Resolution — A simple resolution, designated H Res or S Res, deals with matters entirely within the prerogatives of one house or the other. It requires neither passage by the other house nor approval by the President, and does not have the force of law. Most resolutions deal with the rules of one house or the other. They also are used to express the sentiments of a single house, as condolences to the family of a deceased member or, in the Senate, to give "advice" on foreign policy.

Rider — A provision tacked on to a bill, and sometimes originally a separate bill, which its sponsor hopes to get through more easily by including it in other legislation. Riders become law if the bills embodying them do. Riders providing for legislation in appropriations bills are outstanding examples, though technically banned.

Rule — A rule may be either a standing order governing the conduct of House or Senate business and listed in each chamber's Manual, or a decision made by the House Rules Committee as to how a specific measure shall be considered on the floor. The House group may determine under which rule in the House Manual a bill shall be considered, or it may provide a "special rule." In its most common usage, such a rule is in the form of a Resolution introduced by the Rules Committee. If adopted by the House, the resolution becomes a temporary rule as valid as any standing rule. The special rule lapses only after action has been completed on the measure to which it pertains.

A special rule provides the maximum time for general debate. It may also waive points of order against provisions of the bill in question or against specified amendments intended to be proposed to the bill. It may even forbid all amendments or all amendments except those proposed by the legislative committee which handled the bill. In this case it is known as a "closed" or "gag" rule as opposed to an "open" rule which puts no limitation on floor action, thus leaving the bill open to alteration.

Select or Special Committee — A committee set up for a special purpose and a limited time by resolution of either House or Senate. Most special committees are investigative in nature.

Senate President — Presiding officer of the upper chamber, normally the Vice - President of the U. S. In his absence, a President Pro Tempore (President for the time being) presides.

Speaker — The presiding officer of the House of Representatives, elected by its members.

Special Session — A session of Congress after it has adjourned sine die, completing its regular session. Special sessions are convened by the President of the U. S. under his Constitutional powers.

Standing Committee — A group permanently provided for by House or Senate rules. The standing committees at present are specified by the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, which broadly defines their respective jurisdictions. Hard-to-classify bills are referred to the appropriate committee at the discretion of the House Speaker or President of the Senate.

Strike From The Record — Remarks made on the House floor may offend some Member, who moves that the offending words be "taken down" for the Speaker's cognizance, and then expunged from the verbatim report to be carried in the Congressional Record.

Strike the Enacting Clause — Each bill before Congress starts off with the phrase: "Be it enacted by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That. . ." A Member wishing to kill a bill frequently will move from the floor to "strike the enacting clause" — that first sentence — from the bill. If the action carries and the enacting clause is stricken, the bill cannot, of course, be enacted into law.

Strike Out The Last Word — A move whereby House Members are entitled to speak for a fixed time on a measure then being debated by the chamber. A Member gains recognition from the chair by moving to strike out the last word of the amendment or section of the bill then under consideration. The motion is perfunctory, and customarily requires no vote.

Substitute — A motion, an amendment, or an entire bill introduced in place of pending business. Passage of a substitute measure kills the original measure by supplanting it. A substitute may be amended.

Supplemental Appropriation — An appropriation supplemental to the regular apropriation, but not a deficiency. Supplemental appropriations normally are passed after the regular appropriation, but supposedly before the fiscal year to which they apply. Deficiencies are passed in the same fiscal year to which they apply. This distinction is not always adhered to.

Table a Bill — The motion to "lay on the table" is not debatable in either house, and is usually a method of making a final, adverse disposition of a matter. In the Senate, however, different language is sometimes used. The motion is worded to let a bill "lie on the table," perhaps for subsequent "picking up." This motion is more flexible, merely keeping the bill pending for later action if desired.

Teller Vote — In the House, Members file past tellers and are counted as "yea" or "nay" but not recorded individually. The teller vote is not used in the Senate. In the House, tellers are ordered upon demand of one fifth of a quorum. This is 44 in the House, 20 in Committee of the Whole.

Treaties — Executive proposals which must be submitted to the Senate for approval of two thirds of the Senators present. Before they act on such foreign policy matters, Senators may refer them to committee for scrutiny. Treaties are read three times and debated in the chamber much as are legislative proposals.

"Unanimous Consent" — Synonymous with "Without Objection." (See below.)

Union Calendar—Bills which directly or indirectly appropriate money or raise revenue are placed on this calendar according to the date reported from committee.

Veto—Disapproval by the President of a bill or joint resolution, other than one proposing an amendment to the Constitution. When Congress is in session, the President must veto a bill within 10 days, excluding Sundays, after he has received it; otherwise it becomes law with or without his signature. When the President vetoes a bill, he returns it to the House of its origin with a message stating his objections. The veto then becomes a question of high privilege.

Voice Vote — In either House or Senate, Members answer aye or no in chorus and the presiding officer decides the result.

Votes — There are several methods by which Congressmen may register approval or disapproval of matters before them in committee or in their respective chambers. These include record (roll call), division, teller and voice votes.

Watchdog Committee — Several special committees informally called "watchdog" committees have been set up by Congress to make a continuing check on the administration of a particular program authorized by Congress. Some watchdog committees have joint House - Senate membership. They cannot act on legislation, but can make reports and recommendations.

"Without Objection" — Used in lieu of a vote on non - controversial motions, amendments, or bills, which may be passed in either the House or the Senate if no Member voices an objection.

Column 1 shows the age of the Member, column 10 his seniority in his party, according to total years served in Congress (but not necessarily consecutively). Both are as of Dec. 31, 1951. A check mark (✓) in column 9 indicates that the Member is a war veteran. Check marks in columns 2 through 8 indicate prior professions of Members, based on data from official records and on information supplied by the legislators. The summary below gives the designations applying to each column:

1. Age
2. Agriculture
3. Business or Banking
4. Medicine or Dentistry
5. Civic Service or Politics

Committees of the 82nd Congress

SENATE

To prepare bills for consideration by the upper chamber, the Senate has 15 standing committees. The largest of these is the 21 - member Appropriations Committee. All other groups have 13 members.

Under the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, majority Senators are entitled to serve on two committees, plus either the Expenditures in the Executive Departments Committee or the District of Columbia Committee. Minority senators are entitled to serve on any two committees.

As in the House, commitee chairmanships go to Senators with seniority in point of view of their committee service. Committee assignments are made by the Democratic Steering Committee and the Republican Committee on Committees. The selections are submitted to the respective party conferences for approval, after which the majority and minority leaders present their resolutions to the Senate, naming the members and designating the chairmen of the committees. Senate floor action is taken by simple majority vote.

Each party has a policy committee, called a "conference." All Democratic Senators automatically belong to the Democratic Conference, and all Republicans belong to the Republican Conference.

HOUSE

The House has 19 standing committees, ranging in size from the nine-member Un-American Activities unit to the 50-member Appropriations Committee. Most groups were enlarged in 1951 and now range from 23 to 35 members.

The majority party's members always outnumber the minority members. The ratio established between them frequently changes from Congress to Congress.

Under the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, members of the majority party are entitled to one committee post, or two, if one is the District of Columbia, Expenditures, House Administration or Un - American Activities Committee. Members of the minority party are entitled to serve on one committee, or two, if one is the District of Columbia unit or Un - American Activities group.

Each party's Committee on Committees submits resolutions of appointments for each standing committee. The resolutions ordinarily pass the House by unanimous consent.

The majority member with greatest seniority on the committee automatically becomes chairman.

Subcommittees are formed from the total committee memberships, have their own chairmen, and are usually autonomous while executing their functions. However, their reports and findings must be acted upon by the full parent committee before submission to the House.

In addition to standing committees, the House has select and special committees, set up by special resolution for a definite, and renewable, duration. They are usually investigative in nature. They deal with specific questions. Chairmanships usually go to members best acquainted with the field in which the group will function.

Besides the foregoing categories of committees, each party has its political committees. These include the groups on policy, the direction of legislation through the House, and campaign matters, as well as the Committees on Committees and caucus groups. Each party's caucus group includes all members of that party in the House.

JOINT COMMITTEES

Joint committees draw upon both parties and both houses of Congress for their members. Members are assigned in the same fashion as they are to standing committees. Most joint committees or commissions are set up to examine special and specific questions. Their studies may be continuing, with the committees' existence being periodically renewed.

Joint committees deal with legislative matters primarily. Commissions relate to more general matters, and usually include members of the Executive or Judiciary branches of the government, as well as figures prominent in public life.

Following is a list of Congressional committees, with a brief outline of the function of each. Also shown are the names of the chairman and the ranking Republican member, as of adjournment on Oct. 20, 1951.

82nd CONGRESS--
WHAT IT COST
TO ELECT IT

What It Cost To Elect 82nd Congress

LAW REQUIRES REPORTS

One of the first surveys that a new Congress makes is a study of how much was spent to elect it, and whether laws governing campaign expenditures were violated.

Of such laws, the principal one is the Federal Corrupt Practices Act. Under the Act, every national political committee is required to file a report quarterly on money received and spent as well as two preliminary election reports 10 or 15 days before and five days before a general election. A cumulative account is due at the end of each year.

A political committee is defined as an organization which attempts to influence the election of Senators, Representatives, Resident Commissioners, and Presidential and Vice Presidential electors in two or more states, or which is a branch or subsidiary of a national political committee.

The reports call for a "detailed and exact account" of all contributions and expenditures, including the name and address of every person who contributed over $100, and a detailed breakdown of all expenditures over $10. Committees also are instructed to include totals of all receipts and expenditures.

$3 Million Limit

Under the Act, a political committee may receive amounts totaling not more than $3 million annually and may spend a similar amount.

In practice there is great discrepancy between the reporting methods of the political groups. The lack of uniformity in the reports adds to the difficulty of systematic analysis.

The total contributions and expenditures are no more than an indication of the actual amount of money received and spent. Among those reporting there is often duplication of money expended. The same money is often reported by several organizations; national committees contribute to state and local groups and vice versa.

Many state and local organizations are not certain of their status under the Act. Local groups who are not actually required to report file, as do branches of national committees.

How Much May Be Spent?

The Corrupt Practices Act also requires reports from all Congressional and Senatorial candidates on their campaign expenditures and sets spending limits. These are:

Senate — $10,000 limit or three cents a vote for all votes cast in last Senatorial election but in any case not over $25,000.

House — $2,500 or three cents a vote for all votes cast in the Congressional district in the last election, but in any case not over $5,000.

A candidate must report:

1. Contributions — Amounts as well as sources of all contributions given to him or for him with his knowledge and consent.

2. Expenditures — All expenditures made by him or for him with his knowledge and consent. Unitemized expenditures on which only totals need be reported include state fees, personal traveling or subsistence, postage, stationery, phone, and telegraph and printing, except newspaper and billboard advertising. Only the itemized expenditures come under the legal limit, as outlined above.

A candidate does not have to report:

1. Primary election spending.
2. Campaign committee spending (if not authorized).
3. State and national committee spending in his campaign.
4. Detailed expenditures on direct mail or campaign tour costs.

Limitations Criticized

Some Members of the 82nd Congress have criticized the Act's limitations on spending. Ceilings on campaign expenditures have not been changed since 1925. Inflation has increased the price of every means of political publicity. Radio costs were not even considered when the law was passed.

Since the limit is not an actual one, a candidate could spend any amount without having to itemize it, if he used a direct mail campaign instead of billboards and newspaper advertising, or if he traveled to all parts of his district instead of speaking on the radio.

Individual Contributor Reports

The Corrupt Practices Act also provides that all individuals making expenditures of $50 or more in connection with political campaigns in two or more states, other than contributions to political committees, shall file reports with the House Clerk.

Following the 1950 election campaign, Mrs. Ruth McCormick Miller of the Washington, D.C., Times-Herald was the only person who filed such a report. She listed contributions of $5,000 to the John Marshall Butler Fund, and $100 to Everett Dirksen. The listed items were accompanied with the statement: "Submitted herein is a report of political contributions in the primary and general elections of federal elective officers made by the undersigned in the current year as of December 31, 1950."

Senator Butler's report on file with the Secretary of the Senate listed Mrs. Miller as an unpaid obligation.

State Laws

While the Federal Corrupt Practices Act limits and regulates contributions that may be made to political campaigns, most states have their own statutes. They govern election and campaign situations peculiar to the states themselves, and handle local questions not covered by the federal Act. Enacted by state legislatures, the state laws hold with the federal law. If there is conflict between the ceiling set by the state law and the limitation imposed by the federal law on campaign expenditures, the federal law prevails, but only where candidates are running for federal office.

State limitations vary markedly in all the 48 states. Limitations on expenditures range from $100,000 maximum in the primary and general election campaigns for U. S. Senator in New Jersey to no limitation on expenditures in 11 states. In eight states, candidates for federal office must limit expenditures only in their campaign for nomination. California limits their campaign expenditures only in the general (or special) elections. Twenty-seven states control campaign expenditures in the primaries and the general (or special) elections.

Require Financial Data

The requirement of filing a statement of receipts and expenditures is the most universal feature of the states' corrupt practices acts. It is law in all but two states (Illinois and Rhode Island).

In Massachusetts, New York, North Carolina and Ohio (the latter in referenda campaigns only) the candidate must stipulate the address as well as the name of the contributor or payee.

The greatest weakness of the corrupt practices statutes lies in the difficulty of adequate enforcement. In 18 states such provisions are entirely lacking. The majority of the states leave the initiative of the enforcement of their corrupt practices acts to private individuals, either the defeated candidate or a number of qualified voters.

Thirty-six states prohibit contributions by corporations. Individual contributions are limited to $1,000 in Massachusetts and Nebraska. New York and Oregon stipulate that all contributions must be in the name of the actual donors. Two states (Montana and Nevada) specify that a duplicate of the expense account be given the treasurer of the opposing candidate.

SPENT – $10 MILLION

A spending total of at least $10 million for the election of the 82nd Congress is shown in the combined 1950 reports of political committees and Congressional and Senatorial candidates on file with the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate.

A survey by Congressional Quarterly of individual expenditure reports by candidates for House and Senate seats in the 1950 election campaign shows a total amount declared — within and outside the legal limit — of $2,767,264. This total includes $1,861,789 reported by 808 Congressional candidates for 437 seats (435 Representatives, two Delegates) and $915,475 by 75 Senatorial aspirants for 36 seats.

The reported spending actually is far below what it cost to elect many candidates for contested seats. Candidates do not have to report what committees and friends spend, unless they personally authorize it. Nor are committees and friends required, under the Corrupt Practices Act, to report what they spent.

Another part of the 1950 campaign spending picture is the $8,118,666 total reported by 75 political groups to the Clerk of the House. Fourteen Republican groups top the group spending with a total of $3,176,205; 12 Democratic committees report $2,971,213. Thirty-one labor groups spent $1,618,623 and 18 other organizations report expenditures of $392,625. These group totals are also incomplete since they include only national committee spending and a few scattered local groups who submitted reports to the House Clerk.

Contrast to 1948 Spending

The 1950 political group total of over $8 million falls short of the 1948 total of $13,563,878 reported by 144 organizations. Individual campaign reports in 1948 included a total for spending of $1,777,376 for 618 candidates for 435 House seats. The 1948 total included less money than reported by candidates in 1950 but the average expended per candidate was greater in 1948.

Candidates for 33 Senate seats reported a total of $1,203,476 in 1948. The 1950 Senatorial candidate spending total fell short of the 1948 total in both average and total terms.

The 1948 campaign spending was, of course, stimulated by the Presidential election. Spending figures for the 1946 election which would be more comparable to 1950, are not available.

Senate Races

Expenditure reports filed by Senatorial candidates with the Secretary of the Senate showed a greater total amount was by losers than by winners and by Republicans than by Democrats. Losing candidates reported a total of $481,664; winners a total of $433,811. Republicans candidates reported spending $560,935 while Democrats spent $349,903. Senatorial candidates from other parties spent only $4,637.

Contributions as reported by the Senatorial aspirants were $881,787. These include a total of $409,531 given to winners and $472,256 to losers. Republican candidates received a total of $527,727; and Democrats, $351,180. National political committee contributions, as listed by reporting candidates, included a total of $66,750 to Republican candidates by Republican national organizations and $49,000 to Democratic candidates by Democratic national groups.

National and local labor groups gave $18,522 to losing candidates and $6,073 to winners. This total is an approximation of labor contributions since it includes only amounts actually listed as received by the candidates or committees reporting in their behalf.

In six Senatorial contests, the combined spending in the campaigns of the two major party candidates totaled more than $50,000. Republicans won in four of these costly contests. Democrats in two. With only one exception the losing candidates in these expensive campaigns reported spending more than the winners.

The exception was in the Butler-Tydings campaign in Maryland in which Butler reported spending $90,603 in contrast to Tydings' total of $21,823. The combined spending in this contest was $122,426.

Dirksen—Lucas Race Costly

The most costly campaign was the one waged in Illinois between Everett M. Dirksen (R) and Scott W. Lucas (D), with a combined spending total of $184,849. Lucas' reported total of $102,741 was the largest sum reported spent in any one candidate's campaign. Dirksen reported spending $82,108.

Other campaigns reportedly costing more than $50,000 included:

The Warren G. Magnuson (D) vs. Walter Williams (R) battle in Washington totaling $95,604. Williams reported spending $51,658 while Magnuson spent $43,946.

Connecticut — William Benton (D) vs. Prescott S. Bush (R), totaling $68,916. Benton reported $2,205; Bush, $66,711.

California — Richard M. Nixon (R) vs. Helen Gahagan Douglas (D), totaling $52,557. Nixon reported $8,300, Douglas, $44,257.

Oregon — Wayne Morse (R) vs. Howard Latourette (D), totaling $51,013. Morse reported $48,170 (but stated that part of it was spent in the primary) and Latourette reported $2,843.

Of those candidates who reported spending any money, E. J. Seaman, a States Rights Democrat of Iowa, reported the smallest amount, $2.

The six candidates reporting no contributions or expenditures in their final election campaign were all from the South or New England, or were minor party candidates. These included: Lister Hill (D Ala.), J. William Fulbright (D Ark), Russell B.

Long (D La.), Olin D. Johnston (D S.C.), and George D. Aiken, (R Vt.)

Harry O'Brien (D N.D.) was the only Senatorial candidate supported by a major party who did not file a report.

House Races

In contrast to the Senate expenditure figures, House seat winners spent more than losers, with respective totals of $1,087,450 and $774,339.

As in the Senate races Republican candidates spent more than Democrats, $961,815 compared to $870,144.

Contributions reported as given to Congressional candidates or their personal campaign committes totaled $1,635,304. Winners took in $978,397, losers $656,707.

In the House races Democratic national political groups gave $226,400 in contributions, according to candidates' reports. National Republican groups offered $154,417 from their party coffers.

Losing candidates received more labor financial support than winners in House as well as Senate races, with a total of $70,743. House winners reported labor contribution totals of $48,909.

A combined total of over $15,000 was reported as the cost of 11 House races. Seven of these campaigns took place in urban areas. In these same 11 districts where the most money was spent, Republicans won eight of the contests. The other victors were an Independent, a coalition candidate supported by the Democrats, Republicans and Liberal Party in New York, and a Democrat. In all instances winners reported spending the most money.

Costly House Campaigns

Candidates in these 11 districts are listed below — winners first. An asterisk indicates that the amount reported includes expenditures made by a candidate's campaign committee.

California — 1st dist. Hubert B. Scudder (R) vs. Roger Kent (D), total $36,019. Scudder spent $19,951*; Kent, $16,068*.

Chicago — 3rd dist. Fred E. Busbey (R) vs. Neil J. Linehan, total $26,211. Busbey spent $10,971; Linehan, $5,340.

Chicago — 9th dist. Sidney R. Yates (D) vs. Maxwell A. Goodwin (R), total $17,139. Yates spent $12,705; Goodwin $4,434.

Nebraska (Omaha) — 2nd dist. Howard Buffett, (R) vs. Eugene D. O'Sullivan (D), total $24,100. Buffett spent $12,819*, O'Sullivan, $11,281*.

New York (N.Y.C.) — 18th dist. James G. Donovan (D R Lib.) vs. Vito Marcantonio (AL), total $49,598. Donovan's campaign cost $46,314*, Marcantonio, $3,284*.

Ohio (Toledo) — 9th dist. Frazier Reams (I) vs. Thomas H. Burke (D) vs. Homer A. Ramey (R), total $20,820. Reams campaign cost $12,007, Burke spent $5,775, Ramey, $3,048.

Ohio — 17th dist. J. Harry McGregor (R) vs. Robert W. Levering (D), total $15,129. McGregor's campaign cost $9,707; Levering's, $5,422.

Ohio — At Large. George H. Bender (R) vs. Stephen M. Young (D), total $18,217. Bender's campaign committees spent $17,389. Young spent $828.

Oregon — 4th dist. Harry Ellsworth (R) vs. David C. Shaw (D), total $28,029. Ellsworth's campaign cost $14,155; Shaw's, $13,874.

Pennsylvania (Pittsburgh) — 29th dist. Harmar D. Denny Jr. (R) vs. Harry J. Davenport (D) total $15,595. Denny spent $9,658; Davenport, $5,937.

New York Race Heads List

The campaign of New York coalition candidate James G. Donovan who succeeded Marcantonio is the 29th district was reported as the most costly, with a total of $46,314. Most of this amount was reported by three campaign committees operating in Donovan's behalf.

The lowest expenditure was reported by Benjamin G. Roberts (Prohibition candidate) who reported spending 45 cents.

Aproximately 30 per cent of the Congressional candidates who submitted reports to the House clerk listed no expenditures. Of the 251 who reported no money, 200 were Democrats or Liberal, 12 were Republican, and 39 were affiliated with minor parties.

Most of the no-expenditures reports came from the South. In fact, most southern Representatives who did report expenditures were those who listed such items as ballot fees or who ran for contested seats in the final election.

Candidates representing the minor parties also for the most part reported few or no expenditures.

57 Fail to File

Fifty-seven candidates affiliated with a major party or receiving over 10 per cent of the votes for House seats had not filed reports with the House Clerk as of March 15. Compliance in filing expenditure reports with the House Clerk was thus about 93 per cent at the deadline for filing.

There were also 14 candidates from New York city whose expenditures were entered in the ledger kept by the House File Clerk, but for whom there were no reports available. All 14 were running in districts in New York city and were supported by the Democratic and/or Liberal Party.

Candidates who did not file reports with the House Clerk include 33 Democratic, or Liberal candidates, and 14 Republicans, 3 American Labor Party members, and 1 Independent.

The State of New York had the least compliance with 14 Congressional candidates failing to file reports with Congress, in addition to the 14 New York candidates whose spending figures were in the ledger but whose reports were not on file with the House Clerk. Other states with several non-compliers included Pennsylvania with six, Massachusetts with five, Michigan, four, and Ohio, four.

SOURCE OF FUNDS

Where did the money come from to finance the 1950 Congressional campaigns?

At least a partial answer is to be found in official records. National political committees are required under the Federal Corrupt Practices Act to file reports with the Clerk of the House on their receipts and expenditures during a year (due in February, May, August, November and December). These reports included lists of contributors of $100 or more, with their names and addresses.

Grand totals of 1950 receipts by Democratic and Republican political committees reported to the House Clerk included contributions below $100, as well as those above $100, which were tabulated and listed by Congressional Quarterly. The total 1950 figures are as follows:

Twelve Democratic groups received $2,781,452 during 1950. These included six national committees, totaling receipts of $2,351,643 and six branches or local groups, totaling $429,809.

Fourteen Republican groups received $3,006,766, including $1,405,377 contributed to four national Republican groups and $1,601,389 to ten branch or local committees.

These totals are considerably more than those of the contributions listed below by CQ for the year 1950, since the contribution lists include only gifts of $100 or more.

Major Sources

Five states and the District of Columbia provided the source of the major portion of contributions to both Democratic and Republican political groups: New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Michigan, California, and Washington, D. C.

Approximately 80 per cent of Democratic contributions came from these six and from Missouri, Ohio, Virginia and Florida. The same percentage of Republican contributions came from these six and from Delaware, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Texas.

The areas of concentration, and amounts from each are given below, for contributors of $100 or more:

Areas of Concentration

Received, Spent By Candidates In 1950

The following charts contain total contributions and expenditures of Congressional and Senatorial candidates during the 1950 campaign as reported to the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate.

1. Winners are listed first. Chart includes all Democratic and Republican candidates, all other candidates who filed reports or received 10 per cent of vote.

2. Total contributions include all money given to candidate's campaign as reported either by candidate or campaign committee operating in his behalf.

3. Party sub-totals indicate the amount given to candidate's campaign by national party committees as reported by candidate or candidate's committee.

4. Labor sub-totals include any contributions from national or local labor groups as reported by candidate or candidate's committee.

5. The difference between party and labor sub totals and the total amount of contributions is equal to contributions made by individuals or local party groups.

6. Expenditures totals include both itemized and unitemized expenditures, if the candidate or his campaign committee reported both (that is, both those expenses which are limited under the Federal Corrupt Practices Act, and those which are specifically excluded from the spending limitation.)

7. Party symbols appearing after names of candidates represent the following parties:

D- Democratic
R- Republican
Lib.- Liberal
P- Progressive
D-FL- Democratic-Farmer-Labor
AL- American Labor
S- Socialist
Pb- Prohibition
SW- Socialist Workers
S-D- Social-Democrat
I- Independent
Ind. R- Independent Republican
IPC- Independent People's Choice

MAJOR ACTIONS OF FIRST SESSION

Congress Adjourns After Breaking All Records For Peacetime Spending and For Conducting Investigations; Details On Accomplishments

SUMMARY

The first session of the 82nd Congress appropriated more money than any peacetime Congress, raised taxes to the highest peacetime levels, extended price, wage, rent and priorities controls, and conducted a whale of a lot of investigations.

Under the spur of the costly Korean war, Congress appropriated about $91 billion, of which more than $60 billion was earmarked for the military. To help finance the high national expenditures, Congress finally passed, after a House balk, a $5.7 billion bill. This was the third tax boost in two years, and brought taxes to a new peacetime high. President Truman wanted a $10 billion tax increase.

Congress passed two defense production measures this session, after much pulling and hauling. The President wanted "stronger" legislation than in 1950, and some new powers. Congress, however, passed a measure with fewer controls than before. Each blamed the other for increased inflation.

This Congress was greatly concerned about foreign policy. It authorized $7,483,400,000 for military and economic aid to friendly nations and a $190 million emergency loan to India. It extended the President's authority to enter into reciprocal trade agreements and gave him authority to cut off U.S. assistance to nations shipping war weapons to Red-dominated countries. Congress spent months discussing troop commitments, the dismissal of Gen. Douglas MacArthur and conduct of the Korean war.

Congress authorized a $5,864,000,000 military construction program and a $2 billion naval construction program. It set a limit of 5 million men for all branches of the armed services. It passed the first Universal Military Service bill in history. It authorized $1,635,000 in federal aid for defense housing.

Increased railroad retirement benefits, higher pay for federal employees, and higher postal rates were approved by this Congress. It amended the Taft-Hartley Labor Relations Act of 1947 for the first time. It extended aid to the flood-ravaged Midwest.

The investigating first session of the 82nd Congress did almost as much investigating as legislating. It undertook approximately 150 investigations during the session, including probes into crime, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Bureau of Internal Revenue, internal security and Un-American Activities.

The President ran into opposition on several controversial nominations, but Chester Bowles was confirmed as ambassador to India.

AGRICULTURE

SUGAR ACT -- (HR 4521). Legislation extending the 1948 Sugar Act with minor amendments until Dec. 31, 1956, passed Congress in August with relatively little debate. It gave the Secretary of Agriculture authority to determine annual U.S. continental requirements, set quotas and buy sugar (and thus indirectly fix prices) for a period of four years from Jan. 1, 1953 to Dec. 31, 1956. It also fixed "subsidies" for producers who comply with the quotas and meet certain other conditions. The bill passed a year before the 1948 act was scheduled to expire Dec. 31, 1952, because the industry and the executive departments wanted to avoid the uncertainties accompanying last-minute legislative action.

MEXICAN FARM LABOR ACT -- (S 984). Congress passed June 30 legislation authorizing the U.S. government to recruit Mexican workers to work in areas with a farm labor shortage. The entire program was placed under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of Labor, to remain in effect until Dec. 31, 1952. It detailed the procedures under which the alien labor was to be transported and hired and the U.S. government was made guarantor of performance of the contract by both employers and the Mexican laborers. As the legislation carried no provision to penalize those using "wetbacks," the President asked that Congress also pass such legislation when he signed the Farm Labor Act July 12. Congress did not act on his request, however.

PEANUT ACREAGE -- (HR 2615). Congress completed action April 4 on a bill authorizing an increase in the 1951 peanut acreage. It authorized the Secretary of Agriculture to allot at least 1,868,860 acres of peanuts this year instead of the 1,771,117 previously scheduled for the crop, with most of the increase going to edible-type Virginia and Valencia-type peanuts, and a smaller share to oil nuts. Allotments to the various states from the total acreage was made on the basis of acreage harvested in 1947.

TOBACCO ACREAGE -- (HR 4475). In October Congress approved legislation increasing tobacco marketing quotas and acreage allotments to meet higher marketing demands.

FARM TENANT -- (S 684). An amendment to the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act to make a "more effective" distribution of mortgage insurance on loans for the purchase and improvements of farms was approved by Congress in August. Under the new legislation loans were to be made in accordance with applications received as well as on the basis of farm tenancy and population. In addition, it increased the limit on loans for farm operation.

BALER TWINE -- (HR 1005). In last-minute action Oct. 20 the Senate cleared for the President's signature a bill repealing the duty on imported baler twine. This gives baler twine the same treatment as binder twine, which was already on the free list.

EDUCATION AND WELFARE

DEFENSE HOUSING -- (S 349). Congress authorized $1,635,000,000 worth of federal aid for housing in critical defense areas in a measure approved in August. It also relaxed credit restrictions on low-cost homes.

The President asked in January for a $3 billion program specifically providing that (1) private construction of rental housing for defense workers be encouraged and (2) publicly financed housing and related facilities be provided where necessary.

Both houses balked at authorizing the President's program. As the legislation was finally approved, it authorized $1.5 billion for Federal Housing Administration mortgage insurance on privately constructed housing, $50 million for government-constructed housing, $60 million for community facilities and services, $15 million in loans to prefabricated housing builders, and $10 million for land condemnation in isolated areas.

SOCIAL SECURITY -- (HR 2416). The Senate completed action July 19 and sent back to the House (where it was referred to the Ways and Means Committee) a measure providing for increased public assistance payments. The increases amounted to $3 a month to the aged, blind and totally disabled and $2 a month to dependent children. As originally proposed by Sen. Ernest W. McFarland (D Ariz.), the increases would have been $5 to the aged, blind and disabled and $3 a month to dependent children. The President called July 18 for an increase in old age and survivors insurance benefits if there was to be a boost in public assistance payments, but the Senate rejected this proposal; the House Ways and Means Committee did not act on the Senate amendment.

PUBLIC HEALTH CENTERS -- (S 445). The Senate passed March 16 by a 38-35 Party Unity vote and sent to the House legislation authorizing federal grants to states for establishing and expanding local public health centers. The grants would be made on the basis of population and financial need. The bill was before the House Commerce Committee at the close of the session.

MEDICAL SCHOOL AID -- (S 337). The Senate considered and recommitted Oct. 4 legislation which would provide grants to medical, dental, osteopathic and nursing schools to help them meet costs of instruction and to encourage increased enrollments through scholarships. Sen. John O. Pastore (D R.I.) moved for recommittal of the bill Oct. 4 because he feared that it might otherwise be defeated. Sen. Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) stated that the program would be too expensive to operate and that it was objectionable to certain medical school heads.

FLOOD RELIEF -- (H J Res 292). Congress completed action Aug. 1 on a measure permitting the use of a $25 million emergency flood appropriation to furnish temporary shelter to persons who lost their homes in the floods in the Midwest during the summer. It also allowed the Federal Housing Administration to guarantee mortgages up to 100 per cent of the value of the houses built to replace those destroyed by the flood. In last-minute action Congress approved another measure (H J Res 341) appropriating an additional $5 million for flood relief, $48 million for Department of Agriculture rehabilitation work in the flood area, and increasing RFC loan authority $60 million.

FOREIGN POLICY

TROOPS FOR EUROPE -- (S Res 99; S Con Res 18). The Senate engaged in a bitter, three-month "great debate" early in the session over the question of the President's Constitutional powers to send troops to Europe. The debate came to an end April 4 when the Senate finally agreed to two resolutions which did not have the force of law. They expressed approval of "present plans to send four additional divisions of ground forces to Western Europe," but stated that it was the sense of Congress that "no ground troops in addition to such four divisions should be sent to Western Europe... without further Congressional approval."

The House failed to take similar action. An unsuccessful attempt was made March 13 to write a provision into the lower chamber's draft bill which would have prohibited the assignment of troops overseas without Congressional approval.

Leading the demand for Congressional consent to the dispatch of U.S. troops to Europe was Sen. Robert A. Taft (R Ohio), chairman of the GOP Senate Policy Committee, who outlined a foreign policy himself which opposed the creation of a large land army and proposed a large Air Force and Navy. Taft accused the Administration of formulating foreign policy from 1945-51 "without consulting Congress and the people."

XUM

President Truman took the position that he would consult Congress, but could not be legally bound by its decision, on the policy of furnishing U.S. divisions for service abroad.

The "great debate" caused the return of Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower from Europe to report to Congress on the progress of the army which he is building for the North Atlantic Treaty Organization nations. Secretary of Defense George C. Marshall, in order to quiet fears that this country would furnish a large ground army, disclosed that the United States planned to send four divisions to Europe. Five weeks of hearings were held on the troops-to-Europe resolutions by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and the Senate Armed Services Committee.

MacARTHUR CONTROVERSY -- When President Truman removed Gen. Douglas MacArthur as Supreme Commander of the Far Eastern Command April 11 he set off a lengthy, searching Senate investigation of this nation's Far Eastern policy. MacArthur's dismissal brought him an invitation to address a joint session of Congress and to testify before Congressional Committees. MacArthur found his champions primarily among the Republicans. His correspondence with House Republican Leader Joseph W. Martin, Jr. (Mass.) was one of the factors precipitating the President's action. Sen. Robert S. Kerr (D Okla.) was the most vigorous defender in Congress of the President's ouster of the famed commander.

MacArthur outlined his views in his address to Congress April 19 and later before the Senate Armed Services and Foreign Relations Committee which held joint hearings for eight weeks on the conduct of our Far Eastern foreign and defense policies. MacArthur favored an all-out war including the use of Nationalist Chinese troops and air strikes against Manchurian supply lines. The Joint Chiefs of Staff favored a "restricted" military operation in Korea.

The Committees voted 20-3 on Aug. 17 not to make a formal report of the lengthy investigation. However, eight of the 12 Republican members of the Committee stated Aug. 20 in a report that the testimony revealed the only positive plan for victory in the Korean war was "advocated by Gen. MacArthur." Sen. Wayne Morse (R Ore.) disagreed; he held that MacArthur's removal was "necessitated by his misconduct."

FOREIGN AID -- (HR 5113). Congressional action on the Mutual Security Act of 1951 was concluded Oct. 8. The measure authorized $7,483,400,000 in foreign aid for the 1952 fiscal year, $1 billion less than the President had requested. The legislation carried $5,997,650,000 for military aid and $1,485,750,000 in economic aid. It abolished the Economic Cooperation Administration and shifted ECA functions to the new Mutual Security Administration.

Its purpose was to stimulate European armament and to supply equipment to allied fighting forces while continuing economic aid on a reduced scale. Although the legislation had the strong backing of the Defense and State Departments, Chairman Tom Connally (D Tex.) of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and Chairman James P. Richards (D S.C.) of the House Foreign Affairs Committee both favored limited cuts in the Administration estimate. Further cuts were voted on both the Senate and House floor.

RECIPROCAL TRADE -- (HR 1612). The 17-year-old reciprocal trade agreements program was extended in June for another two years by the passage of the 1951 Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. Congress restored the "peril points" provision which had been put in the extension legislation in the 80th Congress and repealed in the 81st. It also added an escape clause to safeguard American industry from serious injury due to increased imports and strong provisions designed to bar Communist countries from benefits of the trade program.

RED TRADE BANS -- (HR 4550). Congress completed action Oct. 11 on legislation providing for cutting off all U.S. economic and military assistance to any nation which ships weapons of war to the Soviet and its satellites. It also provided for cutting off U.S. aid to nations shipping items useful in war making, but provided that the President might let this trade continue if he deemed it in the best interests of Western security to do so. The Administration supported this measure after Sen. James P. Kem (R Mo.) tacked a rider to the Third Supplemental Appropriation Act of 1951 which cut off American economic aid to any country selling materials of war to the Russian Communist bloc.

Congress passed a resolution (H Con Res 140) in August calling for the suspension of trade relations between the United States and Czechoslovakia until Associated Press correspondent William N. Oatis is freed from a Czech prison on espionage charges.

EXPORT CONTROLS -- (H J Res 197). In May, Congress completed action on a measure extending the President's authority to control exports to June 30, 1953.

SOVIET FRIENDSHIP -- (S Con Res 11). The Senate gave final approval June 18 and the House June 26 to a resolution declaring the friendship of the American people for the people of all nations, including the Soviet Union. The President sent the resolution to the Russian government July 7, and it was subsequently publicized in Russia, thereby opening "at least a crack in the Iron Curtain," Mr. Truman said.

GERMAN WAR TERMINATION -- (H J Res 289). President Truman asked Congress July 9 to adopt a joint resolution ending the state of war with Germany. The House approved the resolution without a dissenting vote on July 27, although Rep. Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) said he thought the action was premature. The Senate approved the measure Oct. 18.

Although this nation concluded a peace treaty with Japan at San Francisco in August, the Senate took no action toward ratifying the treaty before the end of the session. Only Sen. William F. Knowland (R Calif.) urged immediate ratification.

COPPER DUTY -- (HR 3336). Congress on May 10 took final action on a bill suspending the existing two-cent-a-pound import duty on foreign copper until Feb. 15, 1953, or until the end of the national emergency. Congress suspended also the taxes and import duties on scrap metal until June 30, 1952 (HR 3181). Similar legislation suspending the duty on lead (HR 4948) passed the House Aug. 13, and on zinc (HR 5448) Oct. 19.

DISPLACED PERSONS -- (HR 3576). Because of the delay in processing applications for the admission of displaced persons into the United States under the Displaced Persons Act of 1948, Congress granted a six-month extension of the time on June 28, only two days before the deadline for processing applications, June 30.

INDIA AID -- (S 872). Congress authorized a $190 million emergency loan to India in June to alleviate famine in that nation. President Truman had asked Congress Feb. 12 for authority to give 2 million tons of grain to India at an estimated value of $190 million. Congress was slow to act on the President's request, and it decided to grant India a loan instead of a gift because major differences between the two nations developed over diplomatic moves in the United Nations, and Prime Minister Nehru stated that India would not accept food from any country if it had "any political strings attached to it."

CHINESE COMMUNISTS -- Both the Senate and House adopted resolutions (S Res 35, H Res 77), calling upon the United Nations to declare Chinese Communists aggressors in Korea. Each chamber also went on record opposing the admission of Communist China to the United Nations (S Res 36, H Res 96).

LABOR

UNION SHOP -- (S 1959). Congress completed action in October on legislation validating some 4,600 union shop elections which the Supreme Court recently declared invalid because they were held before top officers of the CIO and AFL had complied with the provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act requiring filing of financial statements and non-Communist affidavits. In cases affected by this bill the union officers had complied with the Taft-Hartley provisions, but the officers of the parent CIO- and AFL organizations had not. Now both groups comply. The measure also dispenses with the requirement under the Taft-Hartley Act that an election must be held before a labor organization and an employer may enter into a union-shop agreement. Sen. Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) and Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) were co-sponsors of this legislation which was the first amendment to the Taft-Hartley Act since its passage in 1947.

MILITARY & VETERANS

UMTS -- (S 1). Congress passed a universal military training plan, to start when the emergency is considered to have ended. The Universal Military Training and Service Act, passed in June after five months' debate, continued draft registration for all males 18 to 26 years of age, lowered the draft age from 19 to 18½, extended service from 21 to 24 months, and provided that after the emergency all registrees under 19 years of age should be liable for training in the National Security Training Corps.

MILITARY CONSTRUCTION -- (HR 4914). The $5,864 million military construction program authorized in September was the largest ever made in peacetime, although it was limited to projects scheduled for one year only. The Air Force alone was authorized to open 77 extra bases, some in North Africa and France. Secret projects were allocated $1,487 million.

NAVAL CONSTRUCTION -- (HR 1001). Naval construction authorized in late February included provision for the world's largest aircraft carrier, approximately 57,000 tons, and capable of launching planes carrying atomic bombs. Construction of new minesweeping craft, amphibious and landing ships, and the conversion of carrier and antisubmarine ships were also emphasized in the $2 billion program.

SERVICE SIZES -- (S 1). Regular limits of 837,000 for the Army, 666,882 for Navy and Marines and 502,000 for the Air Force were established in the UMTS bill, but set aside for the present. Until July 31, 1954, a total limit of 5 million for all services was allowed.

RESERVES -- (HR 5426). The House Oct. 15 passed the Reserve Act of 1951 which would limit the President's power to call up reserves, and gives Congress the right to determine the number of "ready" reserves who could be called to active duty in a national emergency. The action was taken as a result of criticism of the manner in which reserves had been recalled for Korean duty. The House bill met the approval of both the Defense Department and reserve organizations. Further action went over to the second session when the Senate failed to act before adjournment.

MARINES -- (S 677). Despite the opposition of the Secretary of Defense, Army Chief of Staff and Chief of Naval Operations, the Senate in June passed a bill introduced by Marine veteran Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) increasing the Marine Corps strength from its present 204,000 to a minimum of 300,000 and a maximum of 400,000. The House Armed Services Committee approved the bill in June also, but the House did not consider it.

AIR FORCE EXPANSION -- (HR 5054). The Defense Department appropriations bill, passed in October, provided a $1 billion air expansion fund, two-thirds of which is for the Air Force and one-third for the Navy air arm. The fund permits an increase in the Air Force from the present 95-wing group to about 140 wings.

AIR FORCE -- (HR 1726). The Air Force was given legal status and organized into three main divisions: Defense, Strategic and Tactical. Before approval of this law in September, the only legal basis for the Air Force was a reference to it as a separate service in the National Security (Unification) Act of 1947.

SERVICE PAY -- (HR 5715). Action to boost the military pay was postponed until January. As reported Oct. 16 by the House Armed Services Subcommittee the measure would increase pay for all ranks by 10 per cent. When the bill reaches the floor, Rep. Olin Teague (D Tex.) says he will offer the Administration-sponsored amendment to give $100 a month to officers and $50 a month to enlisted men engaged in front-line combat.

RE-ENLISTMENT BONUS -- (HR 5405). Both houses passed in October a bill authorizing a re-enlistment lump-sum bonus of $40, $90, $160, $250, or $360 upon enlistment for 2, 3, 4, 5, or 6 years, respectively, and a further bonus of $60 a year for each year beyond 6 years, subject to a ceiling of $1,440 on total amount.

HOSPITALS -- (HR 313). For the third time the House passed a bill to add 16,000 beds to the veterans hospital program by building 24 new hospitals and enlarging others. In 1948 the President vetoed a similar measure. In the 81st Congress, the bill died in the Senate.

A bill for a Negro hospital (HR 314) to honor Booker T. Washington was rejected by the House June 6 when the two Negro Members opposed it as "class legislation."

VETERANS -- Vocational rehabilitation training was extended to Korean veterans with service-connected disabilities. Final action on the bill (HR 3932) was taken in October.

Both houses conducted Committee hearings, but neither passed legislation to provide educational and training benefits to Korean veterans similar to the GI Bill for World War II veterans. However, a few days before adjournment a bill (S 2244) was cleared amending the veterans' preference provisions of housing legislation to include Korean veterans.

In April authorization was given (HR 1) for all members of the armed forces to receive $10,000 cost-free life insurance, with the privilege of converting within 120 days after separation from service to a non-participating government life insurance policy.

Six months later both houses approved a $5 million appropriation (H J Res 340) to the Veterans' Administration for payment, under the insurance program of $10,000 indemnities to families of servicemen killed in Korean hostilities.

During the session Congress enacted two other veterans' benefit bills over Presidential vetoes. The first was a bill (HR 3193) increasing to $120 a month the pension of veterans of World Wars I and II and Korea who are totally disabled as a result of non-service-connected injury. The other bill (S 1864) enacted during the last hours of the session, authorized the VA to pay up to $1,600 each on automobiles for veterans who lost hands, feet, or sight in line of duty.

MISCELLANEOUS, ADMINISTRATIVE

NOMINATIONS -- The Senate blocked several Presidential nominations during the first session of the 82nd Congress and several other nominations ran into strong opposition.

The Senate Judiciary Committee Sept. 17 blocked the nominations of Joseph J. Drucker and Cornelius J. Harrington to be federal judges in Illinois because the President had breached the rule of Senatorial courtesy in submitting these nominations without consulting the state's majority party Senator, Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.). Douglas opposed the nominations on the grounds that "the methods and manner by which the appointments were made... are personally obnoxious to me." Illinois bar associations backed William H. King, Jr., and Benjamin P. Epstein, whom Douglas proposed for the posts. The President took no further action after the Committee shelved his selections.

Other nominations to which there was considerable opposition were those of Chester Bowles, former Governor of Connecticut and former price administrator, to be Ambassador to India; Philip C. Jessup to serve again as a delegate to the United Nations; and Frieda Hennock, Federal Communications Commissioner, to be a federal judge for the Southern district of New York.

On a party-line vote Bowles was confirmed 43-33 on Oct. 9, but no action was taken on the Jessup and Hennock nominations. A subcommittee of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee voted 3-2 against Jessup's confirmation, after hearing Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy (R Wis.) and Harold Stassen, president of the University of Pennsylvania and former Minnesota Governor, testify against the diplomat. The full Committee did not act on the nomination, although it approved nine other delegates and alternates to the UN, including Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt.

FEDERAL PAY BOOST -- President Truman asked Congress July 12 to vote a seven per cent "across-the-board" pay increase for federal workers. Congress cleared one bill (S 622) giving a 10 per cent increase to civil service employees, with a minimum of $300 to employees making less than $3,000 a year, and a maximum of $800 to those over the $8,000 mark. A second bill (S 355) gave minimum $400 increases to postal workers, a 20 per cent increase to fourth-class postmasters, reclassification and an 8.8 per cent boost to other postmasters, and a 20-cent-an-hour increase to hourly postal employees. Both measures were sent to the President in the last days of the session. Congress also passed, as a part of the postal rate increase bill, a measure trimming the 26-day vacations of federal employees. Only employees with more than 15 years service will get that much leave under the new provision. Others will get 20 days after they have worked for the government three years. Newcomers with less than three years service will get 13 days. Sick leave was cut from 15 days to 13 days.

POSTAL RATES AND PARCEL POST -- House and Senate agreed Oct. 19 on the conference version of a bill (S 1046) raising postal rates. Senate increases in first-class letter and air mail and in fourth-class rates were deleted, and the final measure provided for doubling the rate on the penny post card, increasing second-class rates 30 per cent over a three-year period, and raising third-class bulk mail minimum rates by 50 per cent. Congress also cleared late in the session a bill (S 1335) reducing the size and weight of packages that may be sent through the mails via parcel post.

HOUSE RULES CHANGE -- (H Res 7). A House Republican-Southern Democratic coalition easily won a victory over Administration forces Jan. 3 in voting a change of the House rules to increase the power of the House Rules Committee to determine what legislation should go to the House floor to debate. The House approved a resolution offered by Rep. E. E. Cox (D Ga.) repealing the "21-day rule" of the 81st Congress which allowed other committees to by-pass the Rules Committee in order to bring legislation to the House floor.

CIVIL RIGHTS, ETC. -- No floor action was taken on civil rights, redistricting or statehood legislation. The Hawaiian and Alaskan statehood bills were reported out of the Senate Interior Committee; the House Judiciary Committee held redistricting hearings. There was no committee action on fair employment practices legislation. The Senate shelved controversial legislation providing for the dispersal of federal activities.

TAXES & ECONOMIC POLICY

TAXES -- (HR 4473). To help defray the mounting costs of the defense effort, Congress passed in October, just before the close of the session, a record-breaking peacetime revenue bill designed to raise taxes by $5,691,000,000. The measure was much lower than the $10 billion tax boost requested by the President at the beginning of the year. Of the total amount raised, approximately $2,280,000,000 was to come from individual income, about $2,207,000,000 from corporations, and about $1,204,000,000 from excise taxes.

The House Ways and Means Committee worked on the bill nearly six months before reporting it June 18. The House acted on the bill four days later under closed rule procedure which permitted no floor amendments. It was quite different in the Senate. The Finance Committee reported its bill Sept. 18, and there was extensive debate on the measure --and 19 amendments were tacked to it -- by the time it passed the Senate Sept. 28. Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) and a group of Administration Senators sought unsuccessfully to boost the revenue to a higher figure and to "distribute the tax burden more equitably." Congressmen lost their tax-exempt status on their expense accounts under an amendment proposed by Sen. John J. Williams (R Del.).

A battle over the tax measure almost delayed adjournment when the House Oct. 16 refused to accept a compromise worked out by conferees which largely adopted the Senate version. After some minor changes, however, about 40 Members switched their votes and the House on Oct. 19 finally approved the bill and sent it to the White House.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION -- (S 1717). Congress passed two defense production measures this session. Because of the delay in consideration of the major bill, Congress approved June 29 a month's stop-gap extension of the 1950 Act, but banned price rollbacks. It also passed a temporary extension of rent control. After lengthy debate Congress finally approved July 30 the 1951 Act, which provided for (1) a system of priorities and allocation of scarce defense materials and facilities, (2) authorized the President to requisition and condemn property and encourage the expansion of defense plants, (3) provided for controls on credit, wages, prices and rents, and (4) provided special machinery to settle defense labor disputes.

President Truman asked Congress April 26 to extend the act for two years and to "strengthen" certain provisions of the 1950 Act and add new powers. Congress, however, extended the defense authority for only one year and provided fewer controls on the economy than the President asked for. It permitted a 20 per cent increase in rent over 1947 levels, permitted sellers to pass on to consumers increases in legitimate costs which occurred between the start of the Korean war and July 26, 1951, banned the use of slaughter quotas, relaxed credit curbs on housing, automobiles and other items, and banned price ceilings that denied sellers their customary percentage markups which prevailed the month prior to the Korean war, and made many other changes in the 1950 law.

Shortly after the measure was passed and signed by the President, the Senate Banking Committee began work on legislation to repeal the so-called Capehart amendment which permitted costs to be passed on to consumers, and on a bill to restore slaughtering quotas. The Senate modified the pricing provision Oct. 4 to reflect only "necessary and unavoidable" cost increases and directed "reasonable allowances" for other cost increases. The House Banking Committee approved the Senate bill (S 2170) modifying the ceiling provisions, but the House took no action before the end of the session on this or any other amendment of the 1951 Defense Production Act.

CONTRACT RENEGOTIATION -- (HR 1724). In an effort to keep down "excessive" war profiteering, Congress completed action in March on legislation making federal contracts let as part of the mobilization effort renegotiable under stipulated conditions.

LENDING AUTHORITY -- Holders of government E bonds were permitted to retain their bonds at interest for ten years beyond the original maturity date in legislation (HR 2268) which passed Congress in March. This was an anti-inflationary step to keep $1.1 billion worth of maturing bonds from cash conversion.

Congress in September increased the lending authority of the Export-Import Bank from $3.5-$4.5 billion, and extended the bank's life from June 30, 1953, to June 30, 1958 (S 2006).

AVIATION LEGISLATION -- Congressional action was completed in May on legislation (S 435) authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to extend insurance to airlines doing war-connected work overseas when private companies declined to assume the risk.

A bill (S 436) to separate mail pay from subsidies to airlines and to provide a new scale of rates to domestic airlines for carrying air mail passed the Senate Sept. 19. The House took no action on the bill.

GOOD FAITH PRICING -- (S 719). Legislation making good faith a complete defense in price discrimination cases arising under the Robinson-Patman anti-monopoly act passed the Senate Aug. 2, and was pending before the House Judiciary Committee when the session closed.

RAILROAD RETIREMENT -- The House and Senate approved legislation Oct. 19 providing for a 15 per cent increase in annuities and pensions for retired railroad workers. It also raised survivors' benefits by 33-1/3 per cent and provided for the first time for a spouse's benefit up to $40 a month. Employees with less than 10 years of service and their survivors are transferred to the social security program.

HIGHWAYS -- Congress approved two highway measures in October. One (HR 5504) increased the authoriziation for the repair and construction of roads at defense installations to $45 million. The other (HR 5257) increased the authorization for repair of flood-damaged highways (primarily in Kansas and Missouri) to $15 million.

TIDELANDS -- Congress did not settle the controversial tidelands issue although numerous measures were introduced. A bill (HR 4484) to quitclaim the submerged oil lands to the states passed the House July 30.

APPROPRIATIONS

The 82nd Congress spent more money than any other "peacetime" Congress. It also was one of the slowest to act on appropriation measures. When it completed work on the money bills, the 82nd set a peacetime spending record of approximately $91,269,801,409. The majority of the money will be spent during the current fiscal year but some of it will carry over into fiscal 1953.

The 82nd Congress also approved a total of $6,808,581,632 in supplemental appropriations for fiscal 1951. When this is added to the 1952 expenditures, the total approved by the 82nd climbs to about $98,078,383,041.

BREAKDOWN ON FUNDS

The money appropriated for the current fiscal year is distributed as follows:

Direct cash appropriations and authorizations for the ten regular federal agencies accounted for $71,970,018,174 of the total. Largest share -- $56,937,808,030 -- went to the Department of Defense.

Next to the Department of Defense appropriation, the largest single funds bill was for foreign military and economic aid. The total was $7,328,903,976.

In a second supplemental funds bill, the bulk of the money went for military construction projects. A total of $4,146,407,108 was appropriated for these purposes. Congress also approved legislation appropriating $138,440,000 for disaster and flood relief.

PERMANENT APPROPRIATIONS

By law, Congress is required to appropriate permanent funds for certain federal agencies. These funds are not subject to change by either the House or Senate. For the current fiscal year, Congress allocated $6,068,835,175 for this purpose.

Congress began fiscal 1952 without completing action on a single appropriation measure. It passed a series of resolutions granting temporary appropriations to the agencies. Some departments operated on temporary funds for four months.

One of the main stumbling blocks that delayed the bills was disagreement on the method of reducing federal employees. Rep. Ben F. Jensen (R Iowa) offered one method which limited filling of vacancies to 25 per cent. Sen. Homer Ferguson (R Mich.) offered the other which cut federal payrolls 10 per cent. Conferees on the bills at first accepted the Ferguson amendment. However Jensen was successful in getting further consideration and a compromise amendment finally was attached to six funds bills, easing the log-jam.

The previous peacetime record was set by the second session of the 81st Congress which approved a total of $81,518,566,769.

INVESTIGATIONS

The first session of the 82nd Congress was an investigating Congress; it did almost as much investigating as legislating. Approximately 150 probes were conducted, a record-breaking number.

CRIME -- The Senate Crime Committee investigation into the national network of crime syndicates resulted in many indictments and further criminal investigations for many witnesses, contempt citations for more than 20 reluctant witnesses and local "clean-up" campaigns in a number of states and communities. Its impact on political groups was potent. The Committee's recommendations to establish a national crime committee were not enacted by this session of Congress, but four basic anti-gambling bills were ready for Senate floor action in 1952. The Committee was headed by Sen. Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) and later by Sen. Herbert R. O'Conor (D Md.).

RFC -- Under the chairmanship of Sen. J. William Fulbright (D Ark.), the Senate Banking Subcommittee investigation into the lending practices of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation led to a complete reorganization of this government lending agency under a single administrator. It also started another probe into government ethics which was conducted by a Senate Labor Subcommittee.

INTERNAL REVENUE -- A Subcommittee of the House Ways and Means Committee, headed by Rep. Cecil R. King (D Calif.) conducted an investigation into irregularities of the Internal Revenue Bureau which resulted in a complete reorganization of the agency. Prior to and concurrent with the probe several Internal Revenue and Justice Department officials resigned under fire or were dismissed, including the Justice Department's top tax fraud prosecutor. The Crime Committee and Sen. John J. Williams (R Del.) also did considerable investigation into income tax evasion and irregularities in the Bureau.

INTERNAL SECURITY AND UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES -- The newly created Internal Security Subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee and the House Un-American Activities Committee were both extremely active during the year. The Senate group, headed by Sen. Pat McCarran (D Nev.), operated as a "watchdog committee" over the administration of the Internal Security Act and made a long investigation into charges of Communist infiltration into the Institute of Pacific Relations, a research organization on Far Eastern affairs. The Un-American Activities Committee, under the direction of Rep. John S. Wood (D Ga.), concentrated its probes on Communist activity in defense installations and Hollywood.

FAR EAST POLICY AND TROOPS TO EUROPE -- Senate inquiry into the conduct of the Korean war, the dismissal of Gen. Douglas MacArthur from his Far Eastern Command and the extent of our troop commitment to the Atlantic Pact army of Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower was extended and partisan.

PREPAREDNESS -- The Senate Preparedness Subcommittee of the Armed Services Committee, operating under Sen. Lyndon B. Johnson (D Tex.), investigated many factors affecting the nation's defense program, including "shameful profiteering" in housing near large military posts, the large number of combat qualified men performing "chair corps" duties, the high price of tin, the dangerously low critical materials stockpile. The group said the mobilization program lagged dangerously and recommended that civilian output be curtailed in favor of more arms production.

BOYLE AND GABRIELSON -- The Investigating Subcommittee of the Senate Expenditures Committee held hearings in September and October on charges that former Chairman William M. Boyle, Jr., of the Democratic National Committee and Chairman Guy George Gabrielson of the Republican National Committee had used influence in obtaining loans or loan concessions from the RFC. Both men denied the charges when they appeared before the Committee. Boyle resigned as Democratic Chairman because of "ill health" on Oct. 9. Gabrielson was under fire from some members of his own party to resign also. Sen. Clyde R. Hoey (D N.C.) was Subcommittee Chairman.

MARYLAND ELECTION PROBE -- The Elections Subcommittee of the Senate Rules Committee operating under Sen. Guy M. Gillette (D Iowa) made a lengthy investigation into the methods used during the 1950 Maryland campaign in which Sen. John Marshall Butler (R Md.) defeated former Sen. Millard E. Tydings (D Md.). The Committee reported Aug. 3 that a "despicable, back-street type of campaign" was conducted for Butler. It did not recommend the ouster of Butler, however. The same group also investigated campaigns conducted in Oklahoma and New York.

McCARTHY OUSTER -- A Senate Rules Subcommittee conducted an investigation into charges that Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy (R Wis.) was unfit to be a Senator. Sen. William Benton (D Conn.) sponsored a resolution to unseat McCarthy because of the part he played in the Maryland campaign and for his conduct on other occasions. After public hearings, the Subcommittee started a behind-the-scenes investigation.

OTHER PROBES -- Congress also probed during the course of the first session the defense loan and certificates of necessity programs, surplus property disposal, job sales in Mississippi, the Midwest flood situation, monopolistic practices in organized baseball, the Veterans' Administration medical program, the role of small business in the war effort, the military reserve policy, GI insurance, newsprint shortage and prices, and various inflation problems.

CQ's KEY VOTES OF 1951

Coalition of GOP, Southern Democrats Won 10 of 20 Significant Ballots During Year, But Administration Not Set Back Much

SUMMARY

The Truman Administration won only six of 20 key votes which were taken in the Senate and House during 1951, whereas a coalition of Senate and House Republicans and Southern Democrats won 10 such votes.

The 20 roll-call votes were selected by Congressional Quarterly as the most significant ones taken in the first session of the 82nd Congress.

Although the Administration was outvoted 14 out of 20 times, the final outcome of the legislation was often in the Administration's favor because compromises were later made which were acceptable to Truman supporters.

Of the 10 key votes in the Senate and 10 in the House, five were on foreign policy, five on appropriations, four on military and veterans' legislation and six on taxes and the Defense Production Act.

COALITION EFFECTIVE IN BOTH CHAMBERS

Half of these 20 votes were victories for the GOP-Southern Democratic coalition which operated with about equal effectiveness in both houses; six were won by the Administration; three were Bipartisan Support votes on which a majority of Democrats joined with the Republican majority to oppose the President; and the Republicans won the remaining ballot of the 20.

In the field of foreign policy the Administration got most of the legislation it wanted, but the GOP-Southern Democratic coalition was able to force cuts in the amount of economic aid authorized for Europe, and put the "peril" point amendment back into the reciprocal trade bill.

The Administration lost the battle on two key votes which later did not figure in the outcome of legislation. The Republicans scored their lone key vote victory in the Senate on a parliamentary maneuver to force the membership to consider a resolution requiring committee hearings on the MacArthur controversy to be open to all Senators. The committee members decided of their own volition to permit all Senators to attend, so that the resolution never came to a vote in the Senate.

Likewise, on the troops-for-Europe issue the Senate passed a resolution putting the Senate on record as favoring Congressional approval before sending any more troops to Europe. But the resolution did not circumscribe the President's authority to dispatch troops abroad as it had no binding legal effect.

On appropriations issues the Administration lost three key votes in the House, but none in the Senate. Here, too, its loss was not so great as the vote score would appear because the legislation was modified later.

The Gossett slash in public housing starts, which passed the House, did not get through the Senate. And the Administration was able to prevent a 10 per cent cut in funds for the Army civil functions appropriations, with Southern help.

On veterans' legislation the President lost two key votes on a veterans' pension bill, which he vetoed, when a bipartisan majority voted to override his veto. However, the Administration won two other key votes -- with the aid of the Republican majority -- on the measure authorizing the nation's first peacetime universal military service and training program.

WORST LICKING ON ECONOMIC MATTERS

Perhaps on taxes and economic policy the Administration took its worst licking on key votes. Both the Senate and House prohibited the use of slaughtering quotas by the Office of Price Stabilization in controlling the supply and price of meat. This was a real defeat for the Administration. The House also voted to prohibit future rollbacks on beef prices, and this provision was incorporated in the law, to the displeasure of the Administration.

Mr. Truman demanded a repeal of the so-called Capehart amendment permitting increased costs to be reflected in prices. The Senate voted a modification of the provision late in the session to score an Administration victory on this point. The House did not act on the Senate measure, however.

The Administration had a close call on the tax bill, as the House first rejected the conference report on the tax measure. However, the House later passed the report.

Absenteeism ran high in both houses on key votes. A total of 139 Congressmen did not vote on the Gossett public housing amendment and 76 did not vote on final passage of the tax bill. Twenty-six Senators did not vote on the modification of the Capehart amendment and the cut in foreign aid, and 24 did not vote on the Dirksen public housing slash.

CQ BOXSCORE ON CONGRESS

Progress on President's Program -- Jan. 3 to Oct. 20, 1951

Final progress report figures reflect the slow start made by the first session of the 82nd Congress. After a session of nine months and 20 days, the 82nd Congress had enacted 255 public laws, including 23 items on the President's program. The first session of the 81st Congress, in nine months and 19 days, enacted 440 public laws, including 30 points requested by Mr. Truman.

Here is a comparative record of the two first sessions:

Completed action	30	23
Rejected	2	7
Passed one house	13	5
Committee approval	7	4
Hearings only	6	1
No action	10	17
Total proposals	68	57

While both Congresses completed action on about 40 per cent of the President's program, progress on the remaining 60 per cent in 1951 lagged considerably behind 1949.

Much of the first six months of the 1951 session was spent on controversial investigations -- such as the right of the President to send troops to Europe, and the Far Eastern policy hearings. Congressmen further pointed to the number of highly controversial and extremely complicated measures they were called upon to consider -- and the fact that the Administration was slow in sending up its proposals. The tax message was submitted Feb. 2, with the understanding that additional tax requests would follow. Congressional leaders objected to this piecemeal approach, and did not start hearings on the program until the President decided -- much later -- that no further requests would be made in 1951.

The message asking extension of the whole economic controls program embodied in the Defense Production Act was not sent until April 26, despite a June 30 expiration date. The message on the $8.5 billion foreign aid program, facing the same deadline, was not submitted until May 24.

DIFFERENCES BETWEEN CONGRESS & PRESIDENT

The 82nd Congress rejected seven out of 57 legislative proposals made by the President, took no action on 17 proposals. Other proposals were passed in modified form. The Trade Agreements Act was renewed with the "peril points" clause which Mr. Truman had opposed. Congress approved about half of the $10 billion tax increase which the Administration proposed. Congress also overrode Presidential vetoes of two veterans' aid bills.

TRUMAN AND FOUR FIRST SESSIONS

A comparison of the first sessions of the last four Congresses--79th through 82nd--shows that the first session of the 81st Congress considered more Presidential requests, and acted favorably on more proposals than the first sessions of the 79th, 80th or 82nd Congresses.

The survey is of 44 legislative requests by the President, for programs of a recurring nature, programs which need to be re-authorized, or programs which have not been completed by previous sessions. The study is designed to compare the progress on Mr. Truman's requests only in the first sessions. It does not consider what action may have been taken on the proposals in the second sessions.

Not all of the 44 requests were before each Congress. The 81st Congress handled the most, with 42 of the 44 legislative proposals on its program. The 80th Congress came next with 38; the 82nd with 35; and the 79th with 32.

The 81st Congress (1949) also led in number and in per cent of proposals to which it gave favorable action. It satisfactorily completed 24 (57%) of the 42 proposals. It rejected two proposals (repeal of Taft-Hartley and creation of a Welfare Department), and left 16 items of unfinished business. Three of the 16 had received no action.

The 82nd Congress (1951) considered 35 of the 44 proposals. It took favorable action on 19 (54%) of the 35. It rejected one--the St. Lawrence Seaway, and rather sharply curtailed another--the National Science Foundation. There were 14 items of unfinished business, eight of which had received no action.

The 80th Congress (1947) considered 38 proposals, and completed action satisfactory to the President on 15 (39%) of them. Two bills passed by the 80th Congress subsequently were vetoed--one setting up the National Science Foundation, and the Taft-Hartley Act. The latter was enacted into law over the President's veto. The first session of the 80th Congress left 21 items of unfinished business. There had been no action on six of these.

There were 32 proposals before the 79th Congress (1945). The Congress gave favorable action to 11 (34%) of the 32. It did not go along with the President on two proposals--one to keep the U.S. Employment Service under federal control, and one to extend, in permanent form, the FEPC. When the first session of the 79th Congress ended, it left 19 proposals unfinished. It had taken no action on 12 of them.

CONSIDERED IN EACH YEAR

There were 22 proposals which came up before all four first sessions. They are:

1. National fertilizer program.
2. School lunch program.
3. Veterans' housing program.
4. National Science Foundation.
5. Federal aid to education.
6. Creation of a Department of Welfare.
7. Expansion of social security coverage and benefits.
8. Expansion of unemployment insurance coverage and benefits.
9. Admission of displaced persons.
10. UN Participation.
11. Foreign information program.
12. Revision of labor laws.
13. Universal military training.
14. Government reorganization.
15. Permanent FEPC.
16. Anti-poll tax law.
17. Anti-lynching law.
18. Statehood for Hawaii.
19. Federal airport aid.
20. Rent control.
21. St. Lawrence Seaway.
22. River valley developments.

SEVEN ALWAYS RECEIVED ACTION

Only seven of the above proposals received action from all four first sessions: School lunch program, veterans' housing program, National Science Foundation, revision of labor laws, federal airport aid, and rent control.

At the other end of the scale are two proposals which were ignored by all but one of the four first sessions: Anti-lynching law and river valley developments. Both of these proposals received partial action by the first session of the 81st Congress.

Of the remaining proposals, 15 were placed before three of the Congresses, and seven were before two of them.

Chart Traces Action

The chart on the following two pages traces the action on each proposal. A dash in any column indicates that the issue mentioned in the left hand margin was not before the Congress designated at the top of the column. Only those measures for which the President asked positive action have been listed.

Since the Republican party controlled the 80th Congress, the GOP position on these requests is indicated in that column. Where GOP sanction is mentioned the Republican leadership endorsed the substance, if not the detail, of the President's proposals. In many cases they sought to modify the measures, but did not flatly oppose them.

On The Record

"PARTY UNITY" IN 1951

Republicans Stick Together More Often Than Democrats

SUMMARY

How often did each Congressman vote with his party majority in 1951, during the first session of the 82nd Congress?

Congressional Quarterly, through its exclusive feature, "Party Unity," presents a statistical answer.

"Party Unity" indicates the percentage of the time a Congressman stood with the majority of his party against the majority of the other party on roll-call votes. He indicated his stand by roll-call vote, a pair, by answering a CQ poll or otherwise declaring himself with his party majority. Absences and general pairs are not used in computing Party Unity percentages.

CQ's "Party Unity" charts are computed by using those roll calls on which a majority of Democrats vote one way and a majority of Republicans the other. ("Bipartisan Support" roll calls, on which a majority of both parties vote the same way, are separately charted by CQ. See page 79.)

OVER-ALL PARTY UNITY RESULTS

Party Unity figures during the 1951 Congressional session indicated:

Republicans displayed more Party Unity than Democrats in both houses of Congress.

Party Unity was higher, for both parties, in the House than it was in the Senate. But fewer Party Unity roll-call votes occurred in the House.

Republicans and Democrats in the Senate displayed very nearly the same Party Unity.

The average member of the House stood with his party 81.28 per cent of the time. The average member of the Senate had a Party Unity percentage of 77.77.

COMPARISON WITH PAST YEARS

During 1951 Party Unity among Democrats in both houses of Congress was a little lower than it had been for the past three years. Democratic Party Unity has gradually gone down in each house of Congress. Party Unity among Republicans in both houses of Congress was as high in 1951 as it was in 1949, after taking a dip in 1950.

The average Party Unity percentages for the years 1951, 1950, and 1949 were:

Senate Democrats	77.7	81.6	81.0
Senate Republicans	77.8	75.0	77.8
House Democrats	79.5	79.8	79.8
House Republicans	83.4	80.6	83.4

The 1950 GOP Senate dip was due to intra-party differences over displaced persons legislation, natural gas, flood control, reclamation and federal-aid to highways. The dip in the House, among the GOP, resulted from intra-party differences over rivers and harbors, minerals, natural gas, import controls, repeal of the tax on oleo, cotton, peanut and potato acreage, and Far East and Marshall Plan aid.

SENATE HIGHS

No Senator stood with his party 100 per cent of the time during the 1951 session. Carl Hayden (D Ariz.) came up in 1951 with the highest Party Unity score in the Senate among Democrats and Republicans alike, with a percentage of 97. The highest Republican was Homer Ferguson (R Mich.) with a percentage of 95.

John J. Sparkman (D Ala.), who had a 100 per cent score at midyear had the second highest score for the entire first session (82nd Congress) with 96 per cent. Sparkman, incidentally, has had this identical percentage for the past three Congresses. He has had the highest percentage consistently in the Senate.

Other high Party Unity Democrats in 1951 were Lister Hill (Ala.) and Lyndon B. Johnson (Tex.), both 95; Theodore Francis Green (R.I.), Robert S. Kerr (Okla.), Clinton P. Anderson (N.M.) and James E. Murray (Mont.), all with 94; Ernest W. McFarland (D Ariz.) and Thomas R. Underwood (Ky.), both 93.

Democrats with high Party Unity percentages were not necessarily "Administration" Senators, since on some controversial issues a majority of Democrats opposed Truman policy.

There were not so many high Party Unity percentages among the Senate Republicans as there were among the Democrats.

Homer Ferguson (Mich.) had the highest GOP Party Unity percentage, 95. He was followed by Herman Welker (Idaho), and Bourke B. Hickenlooper (Iowa), with 94; William E. Jenner (Ind.) and James P. Kem (Mo.) with 93; and Henry C. Dworshak (Idaho), Everett M. Dirksen (Ill.), Styles Bridges (N.H.), John W. Bricker (Ohio) and Wallace F. Bennett (Utah), with 92.

Most of the Senators with high Party Unity percentages in the 1951 session of the 82nd Congress also had high percentages in the 81st and 80th Congresses, as the following listing shows:

SENATE LOWS

One Democrat, Harry Flood Byrd (Va.) and one Republican, Wayne Morse (Ore.), stood with their respective parties on only one out of four votes. They each had a percentage of 25. They were the lowest scoring "Party Unity" Senators at midyear, and they were again low at the close of the session. At the end of June, Byrd had a score of 36 per cent, and Morse 43 per cent. (CQ Weekly Report, p. 1025.)

Low-score Democrats, in addition to Byrd (Va.), with 25 per cent, were Herbert R. O'Conor (Md.), 34; Willis Smith (N.C.), 46; J. Allen Frear, Jr. (Del.), 47; A. Willis Robertson (Va.), 49; Pat McCarran (Nev.), 51; Edwin C. Johnson (Colo.), 54; Walter F. George (Ga.), 56; John L. McClellan (Ark.), 57; and Paul H. Douglas (Ill.), 59.

Low-score Republicans, in addition to Morse (Ore.), with a score of 25 per cent, were Charles W. Tobey (N.H.), 51; James H. Duff (Pa.), 52; George D. Aiken (Vt.), 53; Irving M. Ives (N.Y.) and Henry Cabot Lodge (Mass.), both 56; William Langer (N.D.), 58; and Leverett Saltonstall (Mass.), 60.

The Senators who had low Party Unity scores in the first session of the 82nd Congress, also had low Party Unity scores in the 81st and 80th Congress, in some instances. Their scores in 1951, however, were generally lower than they have been in the past, according to the following listing:

Senate Democrats

	1st sess. 82nd	81st	80th
Byrd (Va.)	25	35	36

SENATE GROUPING

Although the Party Unity of the average Senate Democrat was 77.7 per cent and that of the average Republican 77.8 per cent, the Party Unity percentages of individuals ranged considerably.

The Democrats' individual records ranged from 25 per cent up to 97 per cent. The GOP range was 25 per cent to 95 per cent. States with Senators with exceptionally high Party Unity were Arizona, Alabama and Idaho. Virginia and Massachusetts Senators had exceptionally low Party Unity. New Hampshire had a Senator, Bridges, with unusually high Party Unity and another, Tobey, with unusually low Party Unity scores.

Twenty-nine Democrats and 25 Republicans had scores on Party Unity of 80 per cent or above; 21 Democrats and also 21 Republicans had Party Unity scores of 79 per cent or less.

Party Unity in the Senate broke down as follows:

80-89	10	10
60-69	4	5
50-59	5	6
40-49	3	0
30-39	1	0

The average Party Unity score for a Senator, either Democrat or Republican, was 77.77 per cent.

PARTY LEADERS

Party Unity scores for Senate Majority Leader Ernest W. McFarland (D Ariz.) and Senate Democratic Whip Lyndon B. Johnson (D Tex.) were high and the Party Unity score of Senate Republican Whip Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.) was low. Minority Leader Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.) and GOP policy chairman Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) had above average percentages.

On 118 Party Unity roll calls, McFarland stood with his party majority 110 times and went against it on 8 for a Party Unity score of 93. Johnson stood with his party majority 106 times, went against it on 5 and was not recorded on 7 roll calls, so that his Party Unity score was 95.

Sen. Robert A. Taft (R Ohio), the Senate's "Mr. Republican," who is chairman of the Senate Republican Policy Committee, had a Party Unity score of 87. Out of 118 Party Unity roll calls, Taft stood with his party 92 times, against it 14 times, and was not recorded on 12 votes.

Senate Republican Floor Leader Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.) had a Party Unity percentage of 91, having stood with his party 86 times, against it 9 times and was unrecorded on 23 votes. Saltonstall's Party Unity score was 60. He stood with his party majority on 65 Party Unity roll calls, went against it 44 times and was unrecorded on 9 votes.

HOUSE HIGHS

The 100 per cent Party Unity ranks of both parties in the House thinned considerably in the last four months of the year, a comparison of Party Unity scores at mid-year and the close of the session showed.

For the complete first session of the 82nd Congress, there were 18 Democrats and 15 Republicans with 100 per cent scores on the basis of 65 Party Unity votes taken in the House. At the end of June there were 45 Democrats and 43 Republicans with 100 per cent scores on 35 Party Unity roll calls.

In addition to the top scorers, there were 24 Democrats and 18 Republicans who stood with their party majority 98 per cent of the time on Party Unity roll calls during 1951.

Among the 41 high Party Unity Democrats, 21 were from just three states, New York (11), California (6) and Illinois (4). Most of them were urban Congressmen representing New York City, Los Angeles and Chicago districts.

Five were freshmen: John C. Kluczynski (Ill.), John Lesinski, Jr. (Mich.), Alfred D. Sieminski (N.J.), Victor L. Anfuso (N.Y.), and Sidney Fine (N.Y.).

Several were party leaders: House Majority Leader John W. McCormack (Mass.), Chairman Adolph J. Sabath (Ill.), Rules, Chairman Brent Spence (Ky.), Banking and Currency, Chairman Wright Patman (Tex.), Small Business, all of whom had 100 per cent Party Unity scores; and House Democratic Whip J. Percy Priest (Tenn.) and Chairman Michael J. Kirwan (Ohio), Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee, who had scores of 98 per cent on Party Unity votes.

Democrats with high Party Unity percentages are not necessarily "Administration" Congressmen, as on a number of controversial issues a majority of Democrats opposed Truman policy.

Most of the 33 high Party Unity Republicans were from the Midwest. Eighteen were from only three states: Illinois (9), Michigan (6), and Ohio (3).

Seven freshmen had the absolute score of 100 per cent. They were: John T. Wood (Idaho), Marguerite Stitt Church (Ill.), William E. McVey (Ill.), Ruth Thompson (Mich.), Jackson E. Betts (Ohio), Frank T. Bow (Ohio) and William K. Van Pelt (Wis.). An eighth freshmen, Alvin R. Bush (Pa.) had a score of 98 per cent.

Several party leaders were among the top Party Unity scorers among the Republicans. They included the following ranking minority members of standing committees with percentages ranging from 98 to 100 per cent on Party Unity:

John Taber (N.Y.), Appropriations; Dewey Short (Mo.), Armed Services; Clare E. Hoffman (Mich.), Expenditures; Fred L. Crawford (Mich.), Interior; Chauncey W. Reed (Ill.), Judiciary; Edward H. Rees (Kan.), Post Office; George A. Dondero (Mich.), Public Works; Leo E. Allen (Ill.), Rules; and Harold H. Velde (Ill.), Un-American Activities.

There were only ten women serving in the House, but five of them were among the highs on Party Unity. Mrs. Church (R Ill.) and Miss Thompson (R Mich.) and Mrs. Elizabeth Kee (D W.Va.) had 100 per cent Party Unity scores. Edna F. Kelly (D N.Y.) and Katharine St. George (R N.Y.) had scores of 98 per cent.

COMPARISON WITH OTHER SESSIONS

Most of the Members of the House with 100 per cent Party Unity in the 1951 session of the 82nd Congress also had relatively high percentages in the 81st and 80th Congresses, as the following listing shows:

HOUSE LOWS

W. M. (Don) Wheeler (D Ga.) had the lowest score on Party Unity of any member of Congress for the first session of the 82nd Congress. He also had the lowest score during the first half of the year, when he chalked up a percentage of nine. For the entire year his score was 11 per cent.

Next lowest was Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.), who had the lowest score of any Republican in either house of Congress. It dropped to 17 per cent for the first session of this Congress, after being 25 per cent for the first six months.

Democrats had lower Party Unity scores than Republicans in the House. Twelve Democrats had scores of 36 per cent or less. The low-score Republicans, with the exception of Javits, on Party Unity percentages were in the range of 39-58 per cent.

The 12 Democrats with the lowest scores were Southerners from four states: Texas (5); Georgia (3); Mississippi (3); and a Virginia (1).

Of the 16 low-score Republicans on Party Unity, ten were from four states: New Jersey (3), Wisconsin (3), Oregon (2) and Washington (2). Of these Republicans six were from the East, five from the Midwest, and five from the West Coast.

The low Party-Unity scores in the House were all veterans; there were no freshmen in this group. Their scores were, in general, relatively low in the 81st Congress but were in-between in the GOP 80th Congress, as the following chart shows:

Democrats (12)

HOUSE GROUPING

Although the average Party Unity percentage for the House Democrats was 79.5, and the average Party Unity for House Republicans was 83.4, the Party Unity percentages of individuals ranged considerably.

The House had more extreme ranges of Party Unity than the Senate. No Senator had a Party Unity percentage of 100 nor a percentage lower than 25. There were 32 House members with 100 per cent Party Unity, and three House members with percentages under 20. The House Democrats' individual records ranged from 11 per cent to 100 per cent; the GOP range was from 17 per cent to 100 per cent.

As in the Senate, the largest grouping of House members was in the range of 99-90 per cent on Party Unity. There were 92 Democrats and 72 Republicans with Party Unity percentages ranging from 99-90 per cent. A total of 148 Democrats and 134 Republicans had percentages on Party Unity of 80 or above; 84 Democrats and 61 Republicans had Party Unity scores of 79 or less.

Party Unity in the House broke down as follows:

Percentage	Democrats	Republicans
100	18	15
90-99	92	72
80-89	38	47
60-69	17	21
50-59	18	8
40-49	19	6
30-39	6	1
20-29	4	0

The average Party Unity percentage for a House member, Democrat or Republican, was 81.3.

THE NEWCOMERS

Three new members of the House, who were sworn in late in the session, were unable to answer even half of the roll calls. Their Party Unity percentages were figured, therefore, on less than half the total number of Party Unity votes.

House "Party Unity"

82nd CONGRESS, 1st SESSION

In Specific Fields and Over-all, Jan. 3 through Oct. 20, 1951.

1. Appropriations. There were 27 "party unity" roll-call votes in the House settling appropriations issues. These votes were decided by a majority of Democrats voting one way and a majority of Republicans voting the other way. The figures in this column (1) denote the number of times (out of 27 opportunities) each Representative stood with his party's majority. Actual votes, declared stands, paired votes and CQ Poll results are counted.

2. Foreign Policy. There were 4 "Party Unity" votes on foreign policy issues. The figure in this column (2) denotes the number of times (out of 4 opportunities) each Representative stood with his party's majority.

3. Taxes and Economic Policies. There were 16 "Party Unity" votes on taxes and economic policies. The figure in this column (3) denotes the number of times (out of 16 opportunities) each Representative stood with his party's majority.

4. Over-All Support. There were 65 "Party Unity" roll-call House votes in seven legislative fields in the 1st Session of the 82nd Congress. The figure in this column (4) denotes the number of times that each Representative went along with his party's majority. Actual votes, declared stands, paired votes and CQ Poll results are counted.

5. Over-All Opposition. The figure in this column (5) denotes the number of times on these same 65 "Party Unity" votes that each Representative did not support his party majority and went against it.

7. 81st Congress. Percentage of the time the Representative supported his party's majority during the 81st Congress, 1949-50.

8. 80th Congress. Percentage of the time the Representative supported his party's majority during the 80th Congress, 1947-48.

In Specific Fields And Over-All, Jan. 3, through October 20, 1951.

1. Appropriations. There were 41 "Party Unity" roll-call votes in the Senate settling appropriations issues. These votes were decided by a majority of Democrats voting one way and a majority of Republicans voting the other way. The figures in this column (1) denote the number of times (out of 41 opportunities) each Senator stood with his party's majority. Actual votes, declared stands, paired votes and CQ Poll results are counted.

2. Foreign Policy. There were 33 "Party Unity" votes on foreign policy issues. The figure in this column (2) denotes the number of times (out of 29 opportunities) each Senator stood with his party's majority.

3. Taxes and Economic Policies. There were 29 "Party Unity" votes on taxes and economic policies. The figure in this column (3) denotes the number of times (out of 33 opportunities) each Senator stood with his party's majority.

4. Over-All Support. There were 118 "Party Unity" roll-call Senate votes in seven legislative fields in the 1st Session of the 82nd Congress. The figure in this column (4) denotes the number of times that each Senator went along with his party's majority. Actual votes, declared stands, paired votes and CQ Poll results are counted.

5. Over-All Opposition. The figure in this column (5) denotes the number of times over these same 118 "Party Unity" votes that each Senator did not support his party majority and went against it.

8. 80th Congress. Percentage of the time the Senator supported his party's majority during the 80th Congress, 1947-1948.

1951 "BIPARTISAN SUPPORT"

"Coalition vs. Administration" Struggle Revealed By Votes In Which Parties Agree

SUMMARY

A majority of both political parties in Congress joined forces on more than one-third of the 1951 roll-call votes.

A survey of "Bipartisan-Support" voting (where a majority of both parties voted the same way) showed the majority of the Democrats and most of the Republicans were in agreement on 44 of the 109 House and 84 of the 202 Senate roll-call ballots.

The Congressional Quarterly analysis of Bipartisan Support also showed that:

1. On the 128 bipartisan votes, there were 21 Truman Administration defeats. Only five of these occurred in the House.
2. Only one of 12 foreign policy roll calls on which majorities of both parties voted together resulted in a defeat for the President. In contrast, the Truman program fared poorly on bipartisan roll calls on taxes and economic policy issues, with 13 setbacks. There were 34 bipartisan votes on such issues, more than were taken on any other type of legislation.
3. The impact of a Southern Democrat-Republican -- or anti-Administration -- coalition was apparent. Senators generally considered to be firm Truman supporters were low in Bipartisan-Support percentages while Democrats critical of some Truman policies were among the "highs". Regionally, Southern Senators generally were high and Midwesterners--of both parties -- low.
4. However, a party comparison showed House and Senate Democrats scored a higher percentage for voting with the majorities of both parties than did their GOP colleagues.
5. A comparison by chambers showed that in the House Members of both parties stood with the party majorities more than did either Senate Democrats and Republicans.

THREE-SESSION COMPARISON

Here are figures for the first session of the 82nd Congress and prior Congresses:

	82nd (1951 only)	81st (1949-50)	80th (1947-48)
Senate Democrats	80.6	80.5	78.5
Senate Republicans	78.5	72.6	82.5
House Democrats	84.96	82.4	80.9
House Republicans	82.77	85.9	87.4

SENATE

Democrats in the Senate chalked up a higher record for bipartisan support in 1951 than they did in either the 80th or 81st Congresses.

Both Democrats and Republicans supported bipartisan legislation more often in 1951 than during the 81st Congress.

Bipartisan Support--What It Is

"Bipartisan-Support" statistics are an exclusive, copyrighted feature of Congressional Quarterly.

For its Bipartisan-Support studies, CQ selects from the roll-call votes those on which a majority of Democrats and a majority of Republicans voted the same way. The period covered in the present study is the entire first session of the 82nd Congress -- Jan. 3 to Oct. 20, 1951.

(Those votes which are not bipartisan -- those in which a majority of one party opposes the majority of the other party -- are the basis for "Party Unity"--another CQ study. See page 72.

Here is how CQ figures a Congressman's "Bipartisan-Support" percentage. The number of votes on which he stood with the two-party majority is divided by the number of the bipartisan votes on which he took a stand. Since many Congressmen did not go on record on all the votes, the number of times a Congressman declared himself does not necessarily coincide with the number of votes taken.

Counted in the tabulation are declared stands, paired votes for and against, and responses to CQ's special poll as well as the actual votes announced during a roll call on the floor of the House or Senate.

Following are the percentage groupings by party:

Bipartisan Support	Dems	GOP
100 per cent of the time	0	0
90-99	9	5
80-89	22	19
70-79	9	14
60-69	10	6

The high Senate Democrats in Bipartisan Support were John L. McClellan (Ark.) and Spessard L. Holland (Fla.). Both had scores of 94. Highest Republicans were Owen Brewster (Maine) and Edward J. Thye (Minn.). Both racked up 91.

Of the nine Democrats who balloted with the majority of both parties at least 90 per cent of the time they took a stand, eight were from the South.

HIGHS IN SENATE

Here are the Senators of each party with highest bipartisan records:

Democrats		Republicans
Holland (Fla.)	94	Brewster (Maine)	91
McClellan (Ark.)	94	Thye (Minn.)	91
Eastland (Miss.)	93	Butler (Md.)	90
Connally (Tex.)	92	Duff (Pa.)	90
Maybank (S.C.)	91	Nixon (Pa.)	90
Clements (Ky.)	90
Frear (Del.)	90
Hoey (N.C.)	90
Johnson (Tex.)	90

Kilgore (W.Va.)	65	Wherry (Neb.)	67

HOUSE

Democrats stuck together more and Republicans split more in voting on bipartisan ballots in the House in 1951 than in years past. The average percentage for Republicans was lower than that of Republicans in the 81st or 80th Congresses.

During the first session of the 82nd Congress, the average Democrat voted with the two-party majority 84.96 per cent of the time on votes on which he went on record. The average Republican scored 82.77 per cent.

Here are House averages for 1951 and for prior years:

	82nd (1951)	81st (1949-50)	80th (1947-48)
Democrats	84.96	82.4	80.9
Republicans	82.77	85.9	87.4

The 1951 percentages were based on 44 Bipartisan Support roll calls taken in the House during the year. There were 109 roll calls altogether, but the 65 others were partisan.

HOW THEY GROUPED

The following table shows the number of Representatives in each party who had approximately the same Bipartisan-Support percentages:

100% of the time	3	5
90-99	83	66
80-89	85	64
70-79	53	27
60-69	8	20
50-59	0	10

The total number of Members included in the above table is nine short of the 435 total House seats because of vacancies, Rep. Reid F. Murray (R Wis.) voted on too few of the bipartisan ballots to be counted, House Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Tex.) did not vote except in ties, and one Representative -- Frazier Reams (Ohio)-- was listed as independent.

On four of the bipartisan votes, Republicans split almost evenly between supporting or opposing an overwhelming Democratic majority. These votes were on:

1. A motion to recommit the Defense Production Act.

For	117	(D- 32	R- 85)
Against	299	(D-191	R-107)

2. On a rule for consideration of temporary controls extension for one month.

Against	85	(D- 2	R- 83)

3. Appointment of House Members as delegates to European Consultative Assembly.

4. Increase Export-Import Bank's lending authority and extend its life.

Against	69	(D- 4	R- 65)

2. FOREIGN POLICY -- There were 12 Bipartisan Support votes on foreign policy issues. Column (2) shows the number of times (out of 12 opportunities) that each Senator stood with the bipartisan majority.
3. TAXES AND ECONOMIC POLICY -- There were 34 Bipartisan Support votes on taxes and economic policies. Column (3) shows the number of times (out of 34 opportunities) that each Senator stood with the bipartisan majority.
4. OVER-ALL BIPARTISAN SUPPORT -- There were 84 Bipartisan Support roll call votes in the Senate in six legislative fields during the session. 6. BIPARTISAN SUPPORT PERCENTAGE -- The figure in this column (6) denotes the percentage of the time each Senator stood with the bipartisan majority on the 84 Bipartisan Support votes in the first Session of the 82nd Congress. (Absences and general pairs do not affect Bipartisan Support as each Senator's percentage is computed on the basis of the number of roll calls he takes a stand on and not on the total number of roll calls that actually occur.) For convenience this column is marked in heavy black lines.
7. 81st Congress Percentage -- Percentage of the time the Senator supported the bipartisan majority during the 81st Congress, 1949-50.
8. 80th Congress Percentage -- Percentage of the time the Senator supported the bipartisan majority during the 80th Congress, 1947-48.

"ON THE RECORD" IN 1951

House Voting Percentage Improves, But Senate Skid Continues

SUMMARY

The House of Representatives hiked its batting average for going "On The Record" in 1951. It scored higher than it had in the two previous years. But the Senate average again slid downward.

For 109 roll-call votes in the House in 1951, Members on the average made known their stands 88.8 per cent of the time. This stacked up with averages of 86.4 and 84 in 1949 and 1950, respectively.

For 202 roll-call votes in the Senate during 1951, Senators on the average declared their positions 87.5 per cent of the time. In 1949 and 1950, the upper chamber had topped the 1951 average, with 90.2 and 87.9 respectively.

Here are On-The-Record average percentages:

	1949	1950	1951
Senate	90.2	87.9	87.5
House	86.4	84.0	88.8

As for the number of roll calls, 1951 produced far fewer than did prior years:

	1949	1950	1951
Senate	227	229	202
House	121	154	109

What Survey Covers

Congressional Quarterly bases its "On-The-Record" study on the only votes Congress records -- those taken when a clerk in the Senate or House calls the name of each Member and records his stand.

If a Congressman is not in the chamber during the roll call, he can still go on the record by a pre-arranged "pair" with another Member or by announcing what his vote would have been had he been present. Paired or announced stands are printed in the Congressional Record.

A Congressman also can make his stand known by responding to Congressional Quarterly's poll of lawmakers who otherwise did not get on the record on key votes.

For its On-The-Record study, CQ counts pairs, announced stands and responses to its poll, in addition to actual votes.

In determining On-The-Record percentages, CQ makes allowance for Congressmen who did not take office until the session was under way. Their percentages are based on the number of votes which occurred after they became Members of Congress.

Sometimes absences from roll calls, resulting in low percentages, are caused by sickness or official business.

SENATE

Though Members of the upper chamber got off to a flying start in their On-The-Record voting pace at the first of the 1951 session, they drooped in the home stretch. At the end of three months, 55 Senators hadn't missed a single chance to go On-The-Record in the 20 roll calls the Senate had taken. With the passing of six months of the session and 70 more roll calls, Senators were faltering. Only 16 -- 11 Republicans and five Democrats -- still had missed no opportunity to let the public know where they stood on key issues before them.

By the end of the session, only one Senate Member had crossed the finish line with a perfect record -- Majority Leader Ernest W. McFarland (D Ariz.), whose stand was recorded on every one of the 202 roll calls.

PARTY GROUPING

During the entire session, every Senator went On-The-Record more than half the time. A Democrat -- Clinton P. Anderson (N.M.) -- had the lowest average. He made known his views on roll calls only 55 per cent of the time. However, Anderson was ill and in New Mexico during the last three months of the session.

Lowest On-The-Record man in Republican Senatorial ranks was Charles W. Tobey (N.H.) who scored a 58 per cent. He also was ill during part of the session.

The whole Senate fell into these groups:

Went on the record	Dems	GOP

70-79	8	5

HOUSE

Although House Members let their average for going On The Record slip from 92.5 per cent at the end of three months to 88.8 at the close of the 1951 session, this tally was well above the 1950 final score of 84.

During the first three months of 1951, 221 Representatives were in the 100 per cent bracket for 12 roll calls, When three more months had passed, with 40 more roll calls, only 31 had perfect scores. And at the close of the 1951 session, 16 Representatives could still claim perfect records for making their views public on 109 roll calls. This was five more than in 1950 but there were more roll calls (154) in that year.

PARTY GROUPING

Republicans stayed several laps ahead of their Democratic colleagues throughout the 1951 House session, so far as going On The Record was concerned. This followed the pattern of 1950.

At the half-way point, nine Democrats and 22 Republicans had 100 per cent averages. By the year's end the 100 per cent scoreboard registered six Democrats to 10 Republicans with perfect On-The-Record.

Every Democratic House Member except Thurmond Chatham (N.C.) went On The Record at least half the time. Chatham's average was 49 per cent. Low man on the House record-voting totem pole was Republican Reid F. Murray (Wis.) with 20 per cent.

The whole House fell into these divisions:

100% of the time	6	10
80-89	83	53

Majority Whip Priest (Tenn.)	96	90
Minority Leader Martin (Mass.)	88	89
Minority Whip Arends (Ill.)	91	91

In the House, as in the Senate, low On-The-Record percentages could be blamed in some instances on illness or absences on official business.

LADY LEGISLATORS

Legislators of the fairer sex in both houses of Congress showed no hesitancy in letting the public know how they stood on roll-call votes. Nine of the 11 women lawmakers had On-The-Record percentages of 93 or above. Two were lower. Rep. Edna F. Kelly (D N.Y.) had an 87 per cent and Rep. Reva Beck Bosone (D Utah) an 85 per cent score.

Margaret Chase Smith of Maine, the only woman Senator, shared the top level percentage among Republicans in the Senate, by going on the record 99 per cent of the time.

LONG WEEKENDS?

Although a bulky percentage of lawmakers firmly announced their stands with "yeas" and "nays" in the halls of Congress during the 1951 session, the apparent enticement of the "long weekend" took its toll in representation.

CQ's analysis of roll calls in both houses on Fridays, Saturdays and Mondays revealed a sizeable portion of legislators were afield on business, official or unofficial, elsewhere than in Congress. These facts were disclosed:

1. On more than half of the "weekend" roll calls in the Senate, one-fourth of the Members were not present and voting. (In other words, roll call votes were taken 73 times on either Friday, Saturday or Monday during the first session; on 39 of these at least 24 Senators were not present).

2. One-third of the Senate membership was not present to vote on a dozen "weekend" roll calls. (Twelve of the 73 roll-call ballots falling on Friday, Saturday or Monday came when one-third of the upper chamber was absent.)

3. On 43 roll calls taken in the House during stretched-out weekends, absences totaled 936, among representatives of near-by states. (Maryland, New York, Pennsylvania, Delaware, New Jersey and Virginia)

4. There was an average of 22 empty House seats assigned to Representatives from the six surrounding states on each weekend roll-call vote during the 1951 session.

5. On four House and 13 Senate weekend roll calls, absentees, had they been present and voting, might have changed the outcome of the ballot.

ABSENTEEISM

Absenteeism should not be confused with not going On The Record. Although absent during a roll call, a Congressman still could have gone On The Record by "pairing" with a colleague or by announcing his stand at a later date. However, in some cases, the fate of a measure might have been changed had all the Congressmen voted.

Further analysis of absenteeism during "long weekend" roll calls revealed:

1. The average number of absentees in the Senate was 22.7. Of these, 12.2 were Republicans and 10.5 were Democrats.

2. New York State Representatives apparently found home more alluring than did some other Members. On stretched-out week ends, the average House Member from New York missed about 10 out of 43 votes. The average Representative from Pennsylvania was absent for approximately eight ballots; New Jersey, 7.6; Maryland, 7.3; Virginia, 6.6; and Delaware, 5.

Examples of Senate issues on which the result might have been changed had absentees been present and voting:

An amendment to the Mutual Security Act of 1951 (HR 5113) to cut the authorization for European economic aid from $1,130,500,000 recommended by committee to $880,500,000. The amendment was agreed to, 36-34. There were 11 Democrats and 15 Republicans absent.

Amendment to the Public Health Service Act (S 445) to authorize assistance to states and their subdivisions in the development and maintenance of local public health units. The Senate passed it, 38-35, with 10 Democrats and 11 Republicans missing.

Amendment to the Post Office Appropriation for 1952 to reduce funds for transportation of mails $16 million below amount recommended by committee. It was carried, 35-33. Twelve Democrats and 16 Republicans were absent.

On the four roll calls in the House where absentees could possibly have changed the results had they been present, one was particularly close. Although there were only 10 absentees from the six nearby states, 59 other House Members were missing.

The vote was on a motion, which was agreed to, to recommit with instructions to cut $350 million from funds for economic aid in the Mutual Security Act of 1951 (HR 5113). The vote was 186 to 177.

Times Senators from the six nearby states missed voting on 73 weekend roll calls:

Duff (R Pa.)	30	Butler (R Md.)	9
Byrd (D Va.)	29	Frear (D Del.)	9
Martin (R Pa.)	28	Lehman (D N.Y.)	4

SENATORS "ON THE RECORD"

82nd CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION
(Jan. 3 - Oct. 20, 1951)

1. Number of times each Senator voted "Yea" or "Nay" or answered "Present" on the 202 roll-call votes that occurred during the period Jan. 3 through Oct. 20, 1951.
2. Number of times each Senator paired (other than making a general pair, which does not indicate an opinion), announced, or answered the CQ Poll during the period.
3. Total number of times each Senator thus went On The Record through votes, pairs (other than general pairs), announcements or CQ Poll responses on the 202 roll-call votes.

ON THE RECORD PERCENTAGES

4. Per cent of roll-call issues on which each Senator went On The Record in the 82nd Congress, 1st Session, 1951. For convenience this column is marked in heavy black lines. (Percentages of Senators who were sworn in after the session was underway were figured on the basis of the number of roll calls that occurred after they took office.)
5. Percentage of all roll calls on which each Senator was On The Record during the 81st Congress, 2nd Session, 1950.
6. Percentage of all roll calls on which each Senator was On The Record during the 81st Congress, 1st Session, 1949.

Sugar Act Extended

HR 4521—P.L. 140

Summary — A bill slightly amending the 1948 Sugar Act and extending it until Dec. 31, 1956, was signed by the President Sept. 1 after it was passed by Congress in August with relatively little debate.

The legislation provided marketing quotas for domestic and foreign sugar and fixed prices for producers who comply with the quotas and meet certain other conditions.

The bill was brought up in Congress and passed a year before the 1948 Act was scheduled to expire Dec. 31, 1952. (CQ Almanac, Vol. III, 1947, pp. 107, 388.) The reason given for the early action was to enable growers to plan ahead and avoid the uncertainties accompanying last - minute legislative action.

A sugar bill (S 1694) was introduced in the Senate June 18 by Allen J. Ellender, Sr., (D La.) for himself and nine other Senators. Rep. Harold D. Cooley (D N.C.) dropped a companion bill, (HR 4521) into the House hopper June 20. The House Agriculture Committee, of which Cooley was chairman, held hearings for seven days, from June 27 to July 31. The House unit reported the bill Aug. 8 with amendments, and the House passed it Aug. 13 without change.

The Senate Finance Committee heard three witnesses at brief hearings and Aug. 20 reported the bill in the form passed by the House. Aug. 22 the Senate passed the bill unchanged. Senate action came on a 72-4 roll call (see page 106).

The swift trip of the measure through the legislative mill was mainly due to the thorough preparation that preceded its introduction, and the unity achieved by the domestic sugar industry — both cane and beet— and government agencies.

The Department of Agriculture began discussions with interested parties in March, and the first interdepartmental meeting was held May 3, with representatives of the Departments of State, Interior, Commerce, Treasury and Agriculture and the Tariff Commission in attendance. Before the bill was introduced major segments of the domestic industry already had agreed on quotas and other bill provisions.

As it became law, the 1951 Sugar Act carried these provisions:

Provisions — Extended the main provisions of the 1948 Act, including the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture to determine annual U.S. continental requirements, set quotas, and buy sugar, for a period of four years, from Jan. 1, 1953, to Dec. 31, 1956. (For 1948 Act, see CQ Almanac, Vol. III 1947, pp. 107 388, 396.)

Extended the excise tax and import tax from July 1 1953, to June 30, 1957. As provided in the 1948 act, these taxes were fixed at 50 cents per hundred pounds. Payments to domestic producers from the tax fund were set at the rate of 80 cents per hundred pounds of sugar, raw value, for the first 350 short tons of sugar produced, with payments reduced progressively downward to a minimum of 30 cents per hundred pounds of production in excess of 30,000 short tons of sugar.

Require a farmer to meet these conditions to qualify for payments: He must not produce more than his share of the quota for his area. (2) If he is also a processor, he must pay fair prices to producers from whom he buys sugar. (3) He must pay fair wages to laborers whom he employs, and must not employ child labor. The same conditions were required under the 1948 Act.

The marketing quotas for domestic and Philippine producers remained unchanged from the 1948 Sugar Act, and the Philippine Trade Act of 1946. The domestic beet sugar producers continued to have a quota of 1,800,000 short tons, the mainland cane sugar producers 500.000 tons; Hawaiian producers, 1,052,000 tons, and the Philippine producers 952,000 tons.

The quota for Puerto Rico was increased from 910,000 tons to 1,080,000 tons, and the quota of the Virgin Islands from 6,000 to 12,000 tons.

The quota for Cuba was set at 96 per cent of the total U.S. requirements which could not be met by the quotas of the domestic territorial, and Philippine producers. This was a reduction from the 98.64 per cent set for Cuba under the 1948 Act.

The Act guaranteed to Cuba 28.6 per cent of the market for U.S. requirements, when such amount was 7,400,000 short tons, or less, or 2,116,000 short tons when the total amount of U.S. sugar requirements exceeded 7,400,000 short tons. The domestic quotas were to be reduced pro rata to meet these minimum Cuban quotas.

The remainder of the foreign countries received a quota of four per cent of the total U.S. requirements which could not be met by the quotas of the domestic, territorial and Philippine producers. Their quota under the 1948 act was 1.36 per cent. Ninety-five per cent of the quota for foreign countries other than Cuba and the Philippines was to be prorated among those countries on the basis of the average amount imported from each within the quotas established for them in the years 1948, 1949 and 1950.

A country not meeting its quota in those years could ship into the U.S. market up to one per cent of the quota established for foreign countries other than Cuba and the Philippines. If the Secretary of Agriculture found that the foreign countries could not fill their quotas, he was directed to increase the quota for Cuba by the amount of the deficit.

The Secretary of Agriculture was otherwise given authority and discretion to fill deficits "on such basis" as he determined.

Quotas for liquid sugar for Cuba and the Dominican Republic remained the same as they were under the 1948 act: 7,970,558 gallons for Cuba and 830,894 for the Dominican Republic. In addition a quota of 300,000 gallons was set for the British West Indies.

HOUSE

Committee

The House Agriculture Committee held a week of hearings beginning June 27 on the Sugar bill (HR 4521) sponsored by Chairman Harold D. Coley (D N.C.). Cooley had introduced the bill June 20.

The lead-off witness was Lawrence Myers, Director of the Sugar Branch, Production and Marketing Administration of the Agriculture Department. Testifying June 27 and 28, he said the bill had Administration backing.

Gordon Pickett Peyton, appearing June 27, said he spoke for industrial users who used half of the nation's sugar. He asked the Committee to recess hearings for 60 days so industry groups could study the legislation further.

Witnesses heard June 28 were David M. Keiser, chairman, U.S. Cuban Sugar Council, Laurence A. Crosby, president, American Chamber of Commerce of Cuba, Walter Ross, president, Western Beet Growers Association, and William De Winter, Minneapolis, representing the flour-milling industry.

Statements were filed with the Committee from Rep. Robert Hale (R Maine), Joseph R. Farrington (R), delegate from Hawaii, W. E. Welch, National Reclamation Association, and Matt Trigg, American Farm Bureau Federation.

Frank A. Kemp of Denver backed the legislation June 29 on behalf of "all five of the great domestic" sugar groups. He named them as the Sugar Cane Growers and Processors of Louisiana and Florida, the Sugar Beet Growers and Processors, the Association of Sugar Producers of Puerto Rico, the Hawaiian Sugar Planters Association and the U.S. Cane Sugar Refiners Association. Kemp is chairman of the executive committee of the American Sugar Beet Industry Policy Committee.

Thurman Arnold representing the American Molasses Co., asked that a new definition of molasses be put into the bill.

The Commitee approved HR 4521 with amendments Aug. 2. The only important change provided for a quota of 300,000 gallons of liquid sugar for each calendar year from the British West Indies.

Formally reporting the bill Aug. 8, the group stated, "As far as the committee is aware, there is no opposition anywhere to the enactment of this bill."

Floor Action

The House by voice vote Aug. 13 passed the bill. No objection was raised.

SENATE

Committee

The Senate Finance Committee held brief hearings on HR 4521 Aug. 17 before reporting it Aug. 20. Myers, Kemp and Arnold, who testified before the House Agriculture Committee, also appeared before the Senate group. Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D N.M.), withdrew his request to testify because he was ill. He said that he wanted to be sure that the legislation was "fair to the Cubans," whose quota was cut somewhat below that set in the 1948 act.

The Senate companion bill (S 1694) was not considered. This bill had been introduced June 18 by Sens. Allen J. Ellender (D La.), Walter F. George (D Ga.), Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.), Edwin C. Johnson (D Colo.), Eugene D. Millikin (R Colo.), Russell B. Long (D La.), Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.), George A. Smathers (D Fla.), Lester C. Hunt (D Wyo.) and Homer Ferguson (R Mich.).

Floor Action

The Senate on Aug. 22 passed HR 4521 on a 72-4 roll-call vote, with only Sens. J. William Fulbright (D Ark.), William Benton (D Conn.), James P. Kem (R Mo.), and James O. Pastore (D R.I.), voting against it. (See page 000).

Ellender led debate. He said the measure was the result of 18 years of careful study and experience in sugar legislation.

"It has been most effective in assuring to the farmers and to laborers in the field the same benefits afforded the industry. It has been the means by which foreign suppliers have been aided and our export trade increased. Precedents have been established which insure domestic area quota revisions when and if they are necessary.

"Other amendments may be necessary from time to time as conditions change," he said, "but the Sugar Act of 1948 and the proposed revisions which we are now considering, in my opinion, constitute the most desirable and effective method that has yet been devised for dealing with our domestic sugar problems."

Sens. Millikin, O'Mahoney and Holland also urged approval of the measure.

Fulbright, virtually the only opponent of the bill, said "payments to producers of sugar are almost twice the payments to the producers of any other agricultural commodity . . . One of my criticisms is that sugar is singled out for special and preferential treatment."

GROUP STANDS

There was no organized opposition to the bill as a whole, though dispute developed over parts of it.

The major segments of the domestic industry — beet and cane, on the mainland and in Hawaii and Puerto Rico — made their compromises in negotiations prior to hearings of the two Congressional committees. While some of them sought more than the bill would provide, they opposed any change in the measure in order to be sure of legislative action in 1951.

The major elements of the domestic industry, backed up in their stand for the bill by the American Farm Bureau Federation, were: The American Sugar Beet Industry PolicyCommittee U.S. Cane Sugar Refiners Association, American Cane Sugar League (Louisiana growers), the Florida growers, Hawaiian Sugar Planters Association, and the Association of Sugar Refiners of Puerto Rico.

Divergence of Views

While favoring the bill, the beet group, represented by the Western Beet Growers Association and the National Reclamation Association, served notice that they might ask for a bigger quota in the future.

And the 170,000 ton increase in the quota for imports from Puerto Rico was not as big as the Puerto Rican Trade Council advocated (240,000 tons, nor enough to absorb the 280,000 tons that the trade council and the Association of Sugar Planters of Puerto Rico said would probably remain unharvested in 1952 under present conditions.

The AFL's International Longshoremen's Association and AFL's International Council of Sugar Workers and Allied Industries Unions and the CIO's United Packinghouse Workers of America all were opposed to a suggestion (not in the bill) to increase the amount of refined sugar brought into the states from Puerto Rico, but approved the increase for that area's raw sugar quota.

Industrial Sugar Users

Industrial users of sugar, represented by 15 associations, asked vainly for a 60-day recess in consideration of the bill by the House committee. The users then asked for two changes, neither of which were granted: 1) A requirement that when the Secretary of Agriculture made his estimates of U.S. sugar requirements he could not set the figure at less than the annual average direct consumption for the two previous years; 2) The bill be effective for only two years, not four.

The 15 sugar - using associations were the American Bakers Association, American Bottlers of Carbonated Beverages, Associated Retail Bakers of America, Associated Retail Confectioners of the U.S., Association of Cocoa and Chocolate Manufacturers of the U.S., International Association of Ice Cream Manufacturers, Flavoring Extract Manufacturers Association of the U.S.

Also, the National Association of Chewing Gum Manufacturers, National Association of Frozen Food Packers, National Bakers Supply House Association, National Canners Association, National Confectioners' Association of the U.S., Inc., National Fruit and Syrup Manufacturers Association, National Manufacturers of Soda Water Flavors, and National Preservers' Association, Inc.

Struggle for Quotas

Areas that ship sugar to the mainland fought over their share in the American sugar market, with both their governments and their sugar industries taking part.

Cubans resisting the cut in their quota, were opposed by Puerto Rico, the Dominican Republic, Peru and Haiti, all of which received increases. The Haitian - American Association wanted an even bigger increase for Haiti.

Working against Cuba were (1) the fact that Puerto Rico is a U.S. area, (2) opposition of American wheat millers and textile groups, and (3) arguments of Latin Americans on the basis of their unfavorable balances of trade with the U.S., their wartime aid to this country, and their need to develop economically.

Also opposing the Cuban position were the Dominican Chamber of Commerce of the U.S., the Dominican Embassy and the W. R. Grace and Company, which said it represented Peru.

Pro - Cuban sugar spokesmen included the U.S. Cuban Sugar Council, American Chamber of Commerce of Cuba and the Cuban Embassy. The American C. of C. of Cuba argued for simple extension of the 1948 sugar law instead of the 1951 bill and said a four - year extension was not enough. The American Bakers Association also opposed cutting the Cuban quota, but asked for a three-year extension.

Also favoring the Cuban stand, the AFL sent a letter to House Agriculture Committee members, a day after they had reported the bill, urging that the Cuban quota not be cut in favor of any increased allotment to "non - democratic" countries, and named the Dominican Republic and Peru in the latter category. The AFL said Communists in Cuba and elsewhere in Latin America would benefit by such a quota shift.

Stateside groups opposing the Cuba stand included the Flour Millers' Export Association's spring wheat milling members (including General Mills, Inc., and Pillsbury Mills, Inc.) They complained about the Cuban Government's ending of tariffs on wheat imports into that nation, thus ending the U.S. preference there, in order to supply a new Cuban wheat mill. The millers said they would lose their Cuban market and fought unsuccessfully against dropping the 1948 law's Section 202 (e).

Letters complaining of Cuban-American trade agreement terms with respect to textiles also were an anti-Cuban factor. These came from the Textile Export Association of the U.S. and its associates, the American Cotton Manufacturers Institute, Association of Cotton Textile Merchants, and Natl. Association of Cotton Manufacturers, and were read into the record by Rep. John L. McMillan (D S.C.) who linked Cuba's increase in its textile tariffs and U.S.-Cuban sugar relations.

Molasses Issue

The American Molasses Company sought redefinition of "liquid sugar" in the law and suggested adding a definition of molasses, and a provision permitting a maximum import of 10 million gallons a year, of which six million could contain between five and six per cent of non - sugar solids.

(Existing law (1) defined "liquid sugar" as having less than six per cent non - sugar solids, (2) applied quotas to liquid sugar imports, and (3) banned Barbados, British West Indies molasses if it fell into the "liquid sugar" class.)

The American Molasses Company also wanted to ban reprocessing of molasses imports into sugar products.

Its proposals were opposed by the U.S. Cane Sugar Refiners Association and the Department of Agriculture. The House Committee amended the bill to provide a 300,000 - gallon liquid sugar quota for the British West Indies to cover the problem and Congress accepted it.

Another issue was presented when the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union (Independent) strongly organized among Hawaiian sugar workers, asked for a stiffening of the wage requirements of the sugar law. Existing law required growers to pay "fair" wages to be eligible for subsidies. ILWU wanted insertion into the law of a 75 - cent - an - hour minimum wage, with area determinations of minima in excess of that figure, and a ban on imports of sugar produced at wages below 75 cents. No such clause was passed.

Summary — Congress in 1951 authorized the Department of Labor to recruit and import Mexican farm workers to meet farm labor shortages in the United States. This was done by amending the Agricultural Act of 1949 to provide for the transportation of Mexican laborers at U. S. government expense to U. S. reception centers near the border. There they could be hired and taken by American employers to farms in areas certified by the Secretary of Labor as short of domestic farm workers.

The American employer would pay up to $15 of the cost to the U. S. Government for transporting a worker from his home in Mexico to the reception center, and all the cost of moving him between the recention center and the farm. The U. S. Government would guarantee performance of the contract between the laborer and the American employer.

The law implemented an agreement made with the Mexican government to facilitate the entry of Mexican farm laborers when domestic help was not available. The Mexican government had insisted upon government rather than private recruitment of farm workers after the expiration June 30, 1951, of its existing agreement for the importation of laborers.

On Feb. 27 Sen. Allen J. Ellender, Sr., (D La.) introduced S 984, and on March 5 Rep. W. R. Poage (D Tex.) introduced HR 3048 to authorize U. S. government recruitment and importation of Western Hemisphere, Hawaiian and Puerto Rican agricultural workers.

Both bills were later amended to cover only Mexican workers. Both provided that the government pay all costs of recruitment, transportation and maintenance in reception centers, and both originally provided that employers reimburse the government for up to $20 of these costs. The House amended this sum to $10, and the conference group compromised at $15.

The legislation was opposed by labor organizations which charged it discriminated against American workers. It was strongly supported by Southwestern farm-labor users who said Mexican labor was essential for the harvesting of crops.

Considerable controversy developed over the employment of "wetbacks" — illegal entrants who swam or waded across the Rio Grande River. The House version permitted their employment; the Senate version provided penalties for employing them. In compromise the Senate penalties were discarded and provision was made for legalizing entries. Ellender promised to push for passage of a separate law to penalize hiring of these "wetbacks" and several bills directed to this end were introduced. They received no action in 1951.

The Senate passed S 984 by voice vote on May 7. The House passed it on June 27, with a roll - call vote of 240 to 139. (Votes page 104 .) Conference was called for on June 28, and the conference report was agreed to by both chambers by voice votes on June 30.

On July 12 the President signed the act, at the same time asking Congress to enact supplementary legislation to provide penalties for those who harbor "wetbacks." The bill became Public Law 78.

Provisions — As enacted, the bill carried provisions to:

Authorize the Secretary of Labor to recruit and transport Mexican farm workers between recruitment centers outside the U. S. and reception centers near their place of entry, and to operate these reception centers, providing subsistence and emergency medical care to the workers. Transportation and subsistence expenses incurred by the Labor Department would be reimbursed by employers hiring these workers at the rate of not more than $15 per worker.

Authorize the Labor Department to help workers and employers negotiate contracts and require it to guarantee employers' wage and transportation promises.

Limit the supply of workers to employers who promised to reimburse the government for any loss resulting from its guaranty of contracts, and to pay the government a sum equivalent for the return of another employee in case a worker was not returned to the reception center as contracted.

Require the Labor Secretary, before recruiting Mexican farm workers, to determine that sufficient domestic workers were not available, that employment of foreign workers would not adversely affect the wages and working conditions of similar employed U. S. workers, and that efforts were made to attract domestic workers under comparable conditions.

Permit recruiting of Mexicans already here five years or temporarily here under legal entry.

Specify that no workers could be supplied under this law for employment after Dec. 31, 1953.

Background — After the 1947 termination of the World War II emergency farm labor supply program under which the Department of Agriculture imported workers for temporary employment in agriculture, individual employers themselves recruited and imported agricultural workers at their own expense, under terms of the United States - Mexico Farm Labor Agreement of 1949. This agreement was to expire June 30, 1951, and the government of Mexico, as well as American labor groups, farm-labor user groups, and government officials, sought extensive changes in the arrangement.

During January negotiations with the State Department, the Mexican government protested that individual employers' preference for recruiting close to the border to save transportation costs resulted in a convergence upon border towns of large numbers of workers, and drained the better workers from the border towns although the labor surplus was in the Mexico City area.

Mexican Government Stand

Mexico insisted that the recruitment take place below the border and in the interior of Mexico, and proposed that the U. S. government do the recruiting instead of individual employers. They also asked that the U. S. guarantee compliance with individual work contracts.

On the other hand Southwestern labor - users, lacking the power to prevent workers from leaving their employ, sought relief from posting $25 bond they forfeited when they failed to return individual workers to Mexico.

The 1949 U. S. - Mexico agreement had given as a major aim the elimination of "wetback" traffic by the orderly importation of Mexican farm labor for temporary employment where shortages of domestic labor had been certified. However, the agreement excepted those illegal entrants already in the country, and later authorization was given for legalizing hiring of border-jumpers who entered before Oct. 20, 1950.

In June, 1951, the government of Mexico said that "wetbacks" usually accepted less than the prevailing wage when they accepted employment, and described their employment in competition with Mexicans who entered the U. S. legally as the "most acute complication" of official efforts to reach an international agreement.

James G. Patton, president of the National Farmers Union, said that the situation had resulted in the exploitation of Mexican and United States farm workers alike.

President's Commission

In April the President's Commission on Migratory Labor submitted a report finding that (1) the million migrant laborers in the U. S. were living in housing characterized as "among the most deplorable in the nation," (2) migratory workers were more subject to sickness and had a higher death rate than most other segments of the population, (3) their diet was insufficient, that the farm accident rate was very high, (4) child labor was a serious problem in agriculture, (5) the Farm Placement Division of the United States Employment Service served as a recruiting agency for farm employers regardless of the effect on the workers, and (6) large numbers of alien laborers were not needed.

About 400,000 of these million migrant laborers, the Commission said, were "wetbacks", many of whom were allowed to re-enter legally by the United States Immigration Service after a "token deportation."

The Commission recommended that foreign contract labor be imported only on the basis of inter - governmental agreements, that the United States Employment Service should certify the existence of farm labor shortages before alien workers were imported, that penalties be imposed for employing illegal immigrants, and that legalization of "wetbacks" be forbidden.

SENATE

On Feb. 27, Allen J. Ellender, Sr., (D La.) introduced S 984 authorizing the Secretary of Labor to recruit foreign agricultural workers from countries in the Western Hemisphere, Hawaii and Puerto Rico, to operate reception centers, transport and guarantee performance of wage provisions on their behalf. A similar bill, S 1106, was introduced March 12 by Warren G. Magnuson (D Wash.) and others.

Committee

Hearings were held by the Senate Agriculture Committee.

Clarence J. McCormick, Undersecretary of Agriculture and Robert T. Creasey, Assistant Secretary of Labor, testified on March 13 in support of legislation for foreign workers, but said that in order that American workers not be discriminated against the government might have to pay the cost of transporting American farm workers.

Next day Magnuson urged that the government pay a major portion of the transportation of foreign farm workers. He appeared in support of S 1106, which he sponsored with Harry P. Cain (R Wash.), Herman Welker (R Idaho) and James E. Murray (D Mont.).

Several northwest farm spokesmen urged the Committee to provide for equalization of transportation costs between northern and southern states. On March 15, a Mississippi and a Southern California spokesman told the Senators that the farmers using the labor should pay the transportation costs.

As approved by the Agriculture Committee and reported April 4 to the Senate, S 984 provided that the American employer would put up not more than $20 a worker to cover cost of recruiting from Mexico and transportation to the border, plus the full cost of transportation to the job site from the reception center. It was estimated that it would authorize the importation of 53,000 Mexican farm workers. The Committee recommended elimination of references to Puerto Rican and Hawaiian labor on grounds they should not be included in measures dealing with foreign labor.

Floor Action

Debate opened April 26 with a statement by Ellender that unless the bill was passed, migratory Mexican workers could enter the U. S. only illegally, mainly by swimming the Rio Grande. This would add to the existing "wetback" problem, Ellender asserted, adding that half a million Mexicans were already in this country unlawfully.

Ellender said there was a severe shortage of American workers to do "stoop labor" in the fields, and that the Mexicans were needed badly. But Dennis Chavez (D N.M.) disputed this and harshly criticized the bill April 30. In a detailed speech, he told the Senate only a few corporate farms wanted Mexican labor.

He said the terms of S 984 could place migrant workers in "slavery and peonage." The workers themselves would tend to depress American standards for farm labor, he declared.

Chavez Amendment Rejected

Chavez offered an amendment to make a U.S. farm laborer eligible ahead of a foreign one to receive any benefits (such as transportation costs) furnished by the government under a foreign farm labor recruitment program.

On May 1 the Senate rejected the Chavez proposal on a 12-59 roll-call. (For voting, see page 106.). Chavez then withdrew 10 other amendments he had readied. Clinton P. Anderson (D N.M.) successfully offered an amendment requiring that before Mexicans could be recruited, the Department of Labor would have to certify the U.S. labor supply was insufficient.

Wayne Morse (R Ore.) and Guy Cordon (R Ore.) spoke in favor of pending amendments to authorize federal reception centers in the U.S. for recruited labor and federal payment of the workers' travel costs.

On May 7 the Senate passed S 984 by voice vote after amending it to penalize farmers who employed "wetbacks," by a fine of up to $2,000 or imprisonment of up to one year for each such alien employed and denial of Mexican labor imported under S 984 to farmers who employed illegal entrants.

Both amendments were in line with recommendations made by President Truman's Commission on Migratory Labor. The first was sponsored by Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.), who said that Mexicans apparently came here legally by the tens of thousands and illegally by the hundreds of thousands, displacing American workers and cutting wages by accepting a lower rate. Morse sponsored the second amendment.

A third proposal of the Presidential Commission, introduced as an amendment by Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.), was voted down. It would have given officials of the Immigration and Naturalization Service the authority to search places of employment for "wetbacks." It first was defeated by voice vote, and subsequently this was confirmed on a standing vote. Ellender and Anderson vigorously opposed the Humphrey amendment, saying it might invade the privacy of farm homes.

Another amendment, by Cordon, which would have made imported Mexican labor available on a more equal basis to all parts of the country by setting up ports of entry in addition to those along the Mexican border was defeated by a roll-call vote of 31 to 43. Cordon pointed out that employers would be required under the bill to bear the cost of transporting the Mexicans from reception centers to the job site.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) — Provide fine and imprisonment for any person knowingly employing any Mexican alien who entered illegally. Voice vote.

Wayne Morse (R Ore.) — Deny legally entered Mexican workers to any employer who hired Mexican aliens who entered illegally. Voice.

Clinton P. Anderson (D N.M.)—Permit Mexicans who already have legally entered the United States to be recontracted. Voice.

Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.)—Prohibit importation of Mexican laborers unless reasonable efforts have been made to attract domestic workers for such employment. Voice.

Clinton P. Anderson (D N.M.)—Require Secretary of Labor instead of Director of State Employment Security, to certify insufficiency of labor before Mexicans can be recruited. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Guy Cordon (R Ore.) — Provide for distribution of foreign workers geographically according to need existing for such foreign workers. Roll-call vote, 31-43.

Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.)—Permit Immigration officers to inspect places of employment of foreign workers to determine whether any illegally entered the United States. First by voice vote, then standing vote.

Humphrey — Require foreign workers to be paid at wage rate prevailing for the crop at the "time and place where the work is to be performed." Voice.

Dennis Chavez (D N.M.) — Make a U.S. worker eligible ahead of a foreigner to receive benefits under the labor recruitment program. Roll Call, 12-59.

HOUSE

On March 5 W. R. Poage (D Tex.) introduced HR 3048 providing Hawaiian, Puerto Rican and Western Hemisphere farm laborers with transportation to U. S. reception centers, up to $20 of transporation and recruitment expenses to be paid by the employer. Like the Senate bill, it provided for the operation of reception centers, guaranteed performance of contracts, and required certification of a shortage of domestic labor.

Hearings

The Poage bill then went to the House Agriculture Committee, which held hearings. Clarence J. McCormick, Undersecretary of Agriculture, told the Committee March 9 that the government should pay for transportation of domestic as well as foreign workers in "emergency" cases for harvesting crops. In this he supported a similar Labor Department proposal.

Rep. H. R. Gross (R Iowa) feared farmers would not get equal occupational draft deferments with other Americans "if this country is to become a haven for foreign farm laborers." He opposed the Poage bill.

At the hearing March 14, Rep. Frank Smith (D Miss.) testified that use of Mexican workers was essential if 1951 cotton goals were to be realized.

Committee

The House Agriculture Committee amended the bill to make it applicable only to Mexicans, and reduced to $10 the limit American farmers would have to reimburse the U.S. government for recruitment and transportation charges to reception centers. Because of changes, the Committee offered a "clean" measure, (HR 3283) which it reported April 16. The bill also permitted farmers to employ "wetbacks."

On May 16 the House Rules Committee by a 4 to 5 vote refused to send HR 3283 up for floor action, but on June 13 the group reversed itself and cleared the legislation for House action.

Floor Action

By a 240-139 roll-call vote the House passed HR 3283 June 27, after rejecting several amendments. By parties the roll call was 108 Democrats for, 90 against; 132 Republicans for, 49 against (See page 104). The House then vacated its action and passed instead S 984, after amending it to substitute the text of the Senate measure.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Harold D. Cooley (D N.C.) — Insert provisions of HR 283 in S 984, passed by the Senate. Voice vote.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

James G. Polk (D Ohio) — Substitute S 984 for the provisions of HR 3283. Standing vote, 44 - 137.

Eugene J. McCarthy (D Minn.) — Assess farmers pro rata the cost of importing alien farm laborers. Teller vote, 62 - 149.

Cleveland M. Bailey (D W. Va.) — Reimburse U.S. government at the rate of $35 per laborer for essential expenses incurred. Standing 26 - 81.

Henry M. Jackson (D Wash.) — Set up reception centers for Mexican farm laborers. Standing, 47 - 97.

CONFERENCE

Senate-House conferees seeking a compromise bill refused to accept the Senate provision for severe penalties for employers using "wetbacks", and set $15 as the limit employers would be required to pay of the cost to the U.S. government for transporting a worker from his home in Mexico to the reception center in the U.S. The Senate version had set a $20 limit, and the House version $10.

The conference report also called for a certification by the Secretary of Labor that an area was short of domestic farm workers before Mexicans could be imported.

Both Senate and House agreed to the conference report on June 30 by voice votes.

Truman Requests New Bill

On July 12 the act was signed and became Public Law 78. In signing the legislation, President Truman asked Congress to enact supplementary legislation to halt illegal immigration of Mexicans and to improve recruitment of domestic laborers for farms in the Southwest.

Chairman Ellender of the Senate Agriculture Committee said that the "wetback" problem would be somewhat alleviated by the new measure and that he would push for passage of a separate bill (S 1391) introduced April 26, setting up penalties for employers hiring "wetbacks." Other bills to penalize those who illegally imported aliens or knowingly employed them were introduced by Sen. Harley M. Kilgore (D W. Va.) July 13 (S1851) Rep. Francis E. Walter (D Pa.) July 17 (HR 4845), and Rep. Emanuel Celler (D. N.Y.) July 18 (HR 4854). None of the bills was acted on during the first session.

GROUP STANDS

Organized labor asked the President to veto the bill. Both the AFL and CIO charged that the bill's provisions would undermine conditions of American farm workers and result in heavy costs to American taxpayers.

CIO President Philip Murray complained that "the bill legalizes government contracting of illegal entrants, thus in effect sanctioning violations of the immigration laws and encouraging further illegal entries." He added that legalizing employment of "cheap" Mexican labor would be a competitive disadvantage for small type farmers and an advantage to large - scale farms.

William Green, president of the AFL, said the bill ran contrary to the recommendations of the Presidential Commission on Migratory Labor deploring the importation of Mexican workers, their pay rates and working conditions. Both labor leaders said that legalizing employment of Mexicans illegally living in the U. S. for five years was "meaningless" because it would be almost impossible to determine how long such persons had been in the country.

The Railway Labor Executives Association, representing railway memberships of 19 unions, opposed the legislation saying it was "virtually without standards" and constituted a threat to domestic workers, both agricultural and industrial. It protested that the Committee disregarded the study by the Joint Congressional Committee on the Economic Report showing extensive underemployment and poverty among marginal farm families with whom, the Committee said, large numbers of agricultural workers could be recruited.

H. L. Mitchell, president of the National Farm Labor Union, in a letter asking the President to veto the measure, called it "a thinly - disguised subsidy for a small number of large-scale farm operators and food processors who would be supplied with cheap labor to further reduce living standards of American citizens." He said it would cost the government far more than the $15 it would charge labor-users for the services it would provide, and protested against the exemption of imported workers from the payment of social security and income taxes.

The American Farm Bureau Federation, National Council of Farmer Cooperatives, National Beet Growers Federation, National Grange, National Cotton Council of America, and other agricultural labor - user groups from California, Arizona, Texas, Colorado, Missouri, New York, Mississippi, Louisiana, Florida, Michigan, and Arkansas supported the measure.

These groups were among 24 which signed a June 14, 1951, open letter to Congressmen, titled "Agricultural Labor Users of the United States." It urged passage of the farm labor measure without "the crippling, punitive Douglas amendment" to the Senate bill. The Douglas amendment provided penalties for anyone knowingly employing Mexican aliens entering illegally. (See SENATE, CONFERENCE sections above.)

Other group stands were reported by Sen. Tom Connally (D Tex.) who said he was told by farmers, farm organizations and civic leaders in the Rio Grande Valley that Mexican labor was desperately needed to gather hundreds of thousands of acres of cotton.

Speaking for other congressional leaders, Senate Democratic leader Ernest W. McFarland (D Ariz.) said they had urged the President to sign S 984 saying the laborers were urgently needed so Southwestern farmers could meet the production goals set by the Agriculture Department.

Marketing Facilities

Summary — The House Sept. 26 refused to approve a bill for government insurance on loans to finance building farm produce markets in large cities. During the 81st Congress the House had passed a like bill, but the Senate Agriculture Committee had pigeonholed it without action. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, 1950, p. 87).

Provisions — The bill (HR 39) would have provided a system of mortgage insurance to be administered by the Secretary of Agriculture for the expansion of public wholesale market facilities for perishable agricultural commodities. It would have authorized insurance up to $100 million for 40-year, four per cent mortgages on principal amounts up to 85 per cent of cost, with a charge of one half per cent a year to the mortgagee. The bill also authorized a $25 million revolving fund to cover loan defaults.

House Action

Three bills were introduced in the House to provide mortgage insurance for marketing facilities for perishable goods: HR 26, introduced Jan. 3 by Rep. M. G. Burnside (D W. Va.), HR 39 on Jan. 3 by Harold D. Cooley (D N.C.), and HR 1291 on Jan. 12 by Rep. John Phillips, (R Cal.). Agriculture Committee Chairman Cooley's bill was approved by the Committee and reported Sept. 14.

The bill was first taken up in the House Sept. 25 after a resolution (H Res 429) to consider the measure was approved 211-112 on a roll-call vote (see page 104). Nearly two hours of debate followed, then further action was postponed until Sept. 26.

Rep. August H. Andresen (R Minn.) led opposition to the proposal, asserting that it would lead to further demands for building materials already in short supply.

On Sept. 26 Andresen offered a motion to recommit the bill to the Agriculture Committee, and by a roll-call vote of 179 to 163 this was done. Supporting recommittal were 142 Republicans and 36 Democrats; 26 Republicans and 137 Democrats opposed it.

There was no further action during 1951.

Horse Farm Transfer

S 271 (HR 1149) — P.L. 26

Summary — Congress completed action May 3, 1951, on legislation authorizing the transfer of certain lands in Addison County, Vt., to the Vermont Agricultural College. There was little debate on the bill and the only opposition came in the Senate.

The measure provided that the Secretary of Agriculture transfer the United States Morgan Horse Farm—942 acres of land — to the Vermont Agricultural College, a state institution. The college would retain the land providing it was used for agricultural purposes for a length of time agreed upon by the Secretary of Agriculture and the college.

About half of the land was donated to the United States in 1907; the rest was purchased in 1917. It was used for agricultural research, principally for research on horses. The General Appropriations Act of 1951 contained funds for closing the station not later than June 30, 1951. A bill (S 4235 of the 81st Congress) authorizing the transfer was passed by the Senate Dec. 15, 1950, but did not become law. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 91)

Morse Charges "Give-away"

The bill (S 271) acted on in 1951 was reported by the Committee on Agriculture in the Senate Feb. 8 and was passed without debate April 11. On April 12, Sen. Wayne Morse (R Ore.), who was not present during Senate passage the day before, offered a motion to reconsider the vote. It was taken up again April 17 and the Senate accepted on a 50 to 24 roll-call vote a motion by Sen. Ralph E. Flanders (R Vt.) to table Morse's request to reconsider the vote.

During the debate that preceded the roll call, Morse strongly urged that federal property should not be given away to states or to any public body within the states. He said it was the Senate's duty to "protect property belonging to all people of the nation from a give-away game."

A similar bill (HR 1149) was reported in the House April 13 by the Committee on Agriculture. It was passed without debate on April 17. The House version, however, provided that unless the college operated the farm for the benefit of agriculture, the property would revert to the U. S.

On April 24, the House accepted an amendment by Rep. W. R. Poage (D Tex.) substituting the language of the House bill (HR 1149) in the Senate bill (S 271).

The bill was sent to conference April 25 and conferees proposed that the property be transferred to the college as long as it was used for the benefit of agriculture, during a period agreed on by the Secretary of Agriculture and the college.

Both the House and the Senate accepted the conference report May. 3. The bill was signed by President Truman May 7 and became Public Law 26.

Farm Tenant Act

Summary — Congress amended the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act to make a "more effective" distribution of mortgage insurance on loans for the purchase and improvement of farms and to increase the limit on loans for farm operation.

Under the changed distribution of loans for the purchase and improvement of farms, the $100 million authorized for such federal loan insurance would be allocated among the states partly according to applications received instead of entirely according to a formula based on farm tennacy and population. Also changed by the bill (S 684) were provisions for operational loans to farmers for equipment, supplies and subsistence.

Provisions — Here are the provisions of the bill, as enacted:

Provide that a fourth of the $100 million in loan insurance could be distributed among the states without regard to the farm population formula. The remaining $75 million would be allocated according to population and tennancy.

Increase from $3,500 to $7,000 the limit on operational loans made by the Secretary of Agriculture, and raise the limit on the amount of indebtedness a borrower could have from $5,000 to $10,000.

Extend from five to seven years the term of repayment of operating loans and the maximum period during which the borrower could be inindebted in order to be eligible for further financial assistance.

Allow the Secretary to postpone the initial annual repayment on both real estate and operational loans up to two years, if he finds that farm income is too small to make earlier payments.

Background — The Farm Tenant Act was passed originally in 1937 and amended in 1946 by the Farmers Home Administration Act. (For detail, see CQ Almanac, Vol. II, 1946, p. 425.) Further revision of the farm loan program was attempted during the 81st Congress when a bill similar to S 684 was passed by the House. It was not acted on by the Senate.

Distribution "Not Equitable"

Both Senate and House Agriculture Committees held hearings on farm tenant act amendments before the 82nd Congress. Appearing at the sessions in favor of the legislation were Congressmen, Agriculture Department officials and farm organizations.

In the report on its bill the Senate group stated that the distribution of loans according to farm tenancy and population had not proven equitable. As a result, in the 1950-1951 period allotments were insufficient in five states and allotments in 12 other states were "closely approached." The Senators expected full operation of the loan program would be curtailed.

Following approval of the bill by the Senate Committee June 11, the upper chamber passed the measure June 21 by unanimous consent. The House Committee then reported the measure Aug. 7, substituting the Senate's bill for similar ones (HR 2642 and HR 4077) which it had been studying. House passage of S 684 came Aug. 13 on voice vote. The measure was signed by the President Aug. 23 and became Public Law 123.

Peanut Acreage

Summary—Congress in 1951 eased marketing quotas and acreage allotments that previous laws had established with respect to peanuts. The new legislation (HR 2615) authorized greater peanut planting in 1951 and future years.

The legislation was designed to permit an increase in acreage for production of the edible peanut variety, which was in short supply, as well as to provide a more equitable distribution of the national acreage allotted to peanuts of all kinds (edible as well as peanuts used for oil processing) on a permanent basis.

Primarily affected by the first provision, it was pointed out, would be Virginia and North Carolina, while the latter change in the permanent allotment would affect principally Tennessee and Alabama.

The House passed its version of the bill by voice vote on March 7. The Senate passed a substantially different version by voice vote on March 19. The House at first refused its assent to the changes the upper chamber had made in the bill, but ultimately granted it April 4. The bill was signed by the President on April 12.

Provisions—The new law provided that:

The 1951 national acreage allotment for peanuts of all types be apportioned among peanut-producing states on the basis of which of the following was larger:

a. The acreage allotted to the state as its share of the 1950 acreage allotment of 2.1 million acres; or

b. The state's share of the national allotment on the basis of the state's 1945-1949 harvest.

Reserve acreage be set aside for new farms.

The Secretary of Agriculture be permitted to increase the acreage allotments for the particular types of peanuts in short supply. But allotments could not be increased above the 1947 harvest in any state of that particular kind of short-supply peanut.

Background—The national peanut acreage allotment in force in 1950 was set by Public Law 471, passed by the 81st Congress at its second session. (For details, see CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, page 76.) Soon after its enactment, the salted peanut industry protested the allotments, stating that it was being priced out of the market because of a cutback of 16 per cent in the acreage on the large Virginia-type peanuts. It was this type of complaint that led the new Congress to review the entire question and ultimately enact HR 2615. (See also CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, page 85, for information on similar legislation which failed to become law in 1950.)

HOUSE

The House Agriculture Committee opened hearings Feb. 8 on proposals to increase acreage allotments for growers of Virginia and Valencia-type peanuts. Reps. Herbert C. Bonner (D N. C.), Porter Hardy, Jr. (D Va.), Watkins M. Abbitt (D Va.) and Carl Albert (D Okla.) discussed their state allotments at Committee meetings Feb. 8 and 9. Frank K. Woolley of the Department of Agriculture also discussed the legislation Feb. 8.

Among the organizations which supported the legislation in appearances before the Committee Feb. 9 were the National Peanut and Salters Association, the American Farm Bureau Federation, the Virginia-Carolina Peanut Association, and the Virginia and North Carolina Farm Bureaus.

The Committee approved the peanut acreage bill (HR 2615) on Feb. 12 and formally reported it Feb. 26.

The House took it up on March 7. Agriculture Committee Chairman Harold D. Cooley (D N. C.) told the House that there was a shortage of some types of peanuts and that a larger acreage allotment was necessary. Edwin Arthur Hall (R N. Y.) protested that the bill was a "closed shop law for the peanut growers."

Rep. John W. Heselton (R Mass.) moved to send the bill back to Committee, but his motion was defeated on a roll-call vote of 174-212. (Vote on page 104.) The bill was then approved on a 160-126 standing vote.

SENATE

The Senate Agriculture and Forestry Committee held a one-day hearing Feb. 19 on a companion bill (S 742). Testifying in favor of the measure were Sen. Clyde Hoey (D N. C.), Rep. Abbitt, and Woolley and other officials of the Agriculture Department. Also supporting the bill were officials of the Farm Bureau Federations of North Carolina, Virginia, Georgia and Oklahoma, and of the American Farm Bureau Federation.

Also heard were spokesmen for the Virginia-Carolina Peanut Association, the Peanut and Nut Salters Association, and the Columbia Peanut Company of Virginia.

The Committee reported the bill March 14. As submitted to the upper chamber, HR 2615 provided that the 1951 national acreage allotment would be apportioned among peanut-producing states on the following basis: a) the acreage allotted to the state as its share of the 1950 national acreage allotment of 2.1 million acres or b) the state's share of 2.1 million acres apportioned on the average acreage harvested in 1945 - 1949, whichever was larger. A reserve was set aside for new farms.

The bill itself set forth no specific figures but would permit the Secretary of Agriculture to increase acreage for short-supply peanuts to meet the demand. The Senate version, however, added the stipulation that acreage could not be increased for this purpose above the 1947 harvest of any state. The Senate also made technical changes in the wording of the permanent acreage adjustment provision that would, in effect, reduce the new planting it authorized from an estimated 79,000 (as the House wanted) to 34,900.

No floor amendments were offered to the bill and passage was voted by voice after only brief consideration. Upon advice of its Agriculture and Forestry Committee, which reported the bill, the Senate decided to insist upon its version and refuse a conference with the House.

Final Action

The House March 22 declined to accept Senate amendments to the bill. This, in effect, sidetracked it. The Senate also took the unusual course of refusing to let the bill go to conference. The Senate Agriculture Committee took the position, in which the Senate concurred, that the House would have to accept the Senate bill without compromise.

Chairman Cooley of the House Agriculture Committee then tried to get the House to accept the Senate amendments. While he did not approve of the Senate action, Cooley said, it was better than nothing at all and immediate legislation was imperative so 1951 peanut planting could commence. Objections were offered by Reps. Omar Burleson (D Tex.) and John E. Rankin (D Miss.)

But on April 2, the House changed its mind, and voted to accept the Senate amendments. This cleared the bill to President Truman, who signed it into Public Law 17 on April 12.

Tobacco Acreage

HR 4475 —— P.L. 178

A House bill authorizing an increase in acreage of types of tobacco in short supply was signed into law by President Truman Oct. 17, 1951.

The bill (HR 4475), reported from the House Agriculture Committee June 21, 1951, was passed by the House July 2, without objection.

The Senate Agriculture Committee Sept. 12 approved the House-passed bill, after adding an amendment stipulating that the added acreage would not be considered in computing future acreage allotments and marketing quotas.

Proponents said the bill would permit acreage increases for only fire-cured and cigar tobacco, since only in respect to those types could a difference in use or market outlets be shown. The Agriculture Adjustment Act of 1938, which HR 4475 amended, defined eight kinds of tobacco, most of them having more than one type.

HR 4475 directed the Secretary of Agriculture to increase the acreage allotments for those farms which in the preceding year produced types of tobacco not in adequate supply. The Secretary was instructed to allot increases "to the extent necessary to make available type or types of tobacco adequate to meet such demands and carry - over requirements." Chairman Allen J. Ellender (D La.) of the Senate Agriculture Committee said the bill would permit farms raising fire-cured and cigar tobacco to grow an additional 2,000 acres in 1952.

The Senate, Oct. 1, passed the bill with the Committee amendment. Without objection, the House, Oct. 5, agreed to the Senate amendment.

The bill became Public Law 178.

Farm Crop Report

The Senate Agriculture Committee, in a final report on farm crop utilization, recommended Aug. 1, 1951, that the Justice Department maintain "continuous vigilance for any evidence of monopolies of price fixing in the meat and food product field."

The report was based on hearings held in 1950 by a subcommittee (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, 1950, p. 87) on price spreads between what farmers received and consumers paid, and on meats, dairy products and bakery goods.

Recommendations concerning the bakery industry included a request for an anti-trust investigation of "possible price agreements among bakers in those markets where interstate commerce is involved." The report said the baker's share of the consumer dollar had gone up while the farmer's share had decreased.

Turning to the dairy industry, the Committee reported that "a system of trade barriers has grown up . . . that has retarded the free flow of milk, both intrastate and interstate."

On meat pricing, the Committee said the hearings indicated that "the basic economics in the marketing of meat products is charging what the traffic will bear."

Summary

The 82nd Congress, in its first session, appropriated a war - weighted $97,695,376,891, more money than had ever before been voted by a "peacetime" Congress. More than three-fourths of it was for the military. The $97.7 billion grand total broken down into $6,068,835,175 in permanent appropriations, mostly for interest on the national debt, and $91,626,541,716 for all other appropriations.

The all-time spending record still was held by the 78th Congress which, for fiscal 1944, provided about $147 billion, almost all of it to meet the needs of World War II.

The first session of the 82nd Congress also was one of the slowest to act on appropriation measures.

On the day fiscal 1952 began—July 1, 1951 — not a single regular money bill had been enacted. Accordingly Congress passed a series of resolutions providing temporary appropriations to keep government agencies in business until regular appropriations could be approved. Some departments operated on this temporary basis for four months.

The first regular measure of the year to be signed into law was the appropriation for the District of Columbia. It was approved Aug. 3, more than a month after the new fiscal year got under way. The second bill, financing the Treasury and Post Office Departments, was signed Aug. 11.

When the session ended Oct. 20, Congress had enacted, in all, 27 appropriation bills. This included the 10 regular annual appropriations for fiscal 1952; 11 supplemental appropriation bills to finance unscheduled, unusual or emergency expenditures; and six supplemental measures for expenses "hanging over" from fiscal 1951.

A large portion of the total money was earmarked for expenditures in fiscal 1952, but some of it was to be carried into fiscal 1953.

Most For Defense

Of the gigantic sum that poured through Congress's hands, about $74 billion went directly to the military for the Korean war and the nation's new rearmament drive. About $57 billion went to the Defense Department. In addition were two supplemental funds bills, totaling $10.6 billion, one for fiscal 1951 expenditures in the Korean war, and the other for building in fiscal 1952 a vast network of military bases around the world. Another $6 billion was provided for military aid to foreign nations.

While the remaining $17 billion was appropriated to departments and agencies nominally having no military functions, the sum was loaded with items growing out of the costs of World War II and other wars, or indirectly bearing upon the buildup of military potential in the country. Foremost among these was $5.8 billion in interest on the national debt, an amount largely attributable to World War II; payments to veterans of past wars; sums for the purchase of presently scarce and militarily critical materials; and appropriations for the maintenance of economic controls to support mobilization for military production and to prevent inflation.

Added to the direct military appropriations, these indirect costs would bring the total outlay for war—past, present and future — to about $85 billion, or more than 85 per cent of the government's operating funds in fiscal 1952.

There was little disagreement anywhere in Congress about providing the military with the full amount of its budget requests.

But one of the obstacles that delayed action on the year's appropriations bills was Congressional determination to reduce federal expenditures for non - military purposes. Government payrolls, it was agreed, were the best point of attack against civilian spending. But the House and Senate differed on methods of doing this.

Jensen, Ferguson Plans

In the House, the prevailing plan was sponsored by Rep. Ben F. Jensen (R Iowa). It was to prohibit a government agency from filling more than 25 per cent of the vacancies occurring among its staffs — until the personnel had been reduced to 80 per cent of the number for which funds had been budgeted in fiscal 1952.

Exceptions to this prohibition were made in the case of certain personnel.

In the Senate, Jensen's plan was thrown out repeatedly in favor of a substitute offered by Sen. Homer Ferguson (R Mich.), who proposed, instead, to reduce by 10 per cent most of the budgeted appropriations for personal services for each agency. (Personal service funds are for salaries and upkeep of office equipment and facilities.)

When the conflicting Jensen-Ferguson amendments reached a House-Senate conference for the first time —simultaneously on the Independent Offices, Labor-FSA and Interior bills —the conferees threw out the Jensen proposal and adopted the Ferguson plan in toto.

But the House insisted on the Jensen plan and returned the bills to conference. There an acceptable compromise eventually was worked out. As it became law it instructed agencies not to fill more than 25 per cent of their vacancies until they had cut their payrolls 90 per cent below the budget estimates for fiscal 1952, but gave them the alternative of making a 10 per cent staff cut at the outset. In addition, the Ferguson-proposed 10 per cent cut in most budget estimates for personal services was retained, as well as the restrictions on amounts available for personal services in agencies which had escaped the outright 10 per cent appropriation cut.

When the session's action on appropriation bills had been completed, the Jensen-Ferguson provisions had been attached to the following bills: Interior, Agriculture, Labor-FSA, State - Justice - Commerce-Judiciary and Independent Offices.

Other Economy Amendments

While this was the most far-reaching of the non-military appropriation economy amendments, numerous others were attached to several of the appropriation bills. They were:

Amendment by Rep. Lawrence H. Smith (R Wis.) — forbid the use of funds for publicity or propaganda not explicitly authorized by Congress. It was attached to the Agriculture, Labor - FSA and Independent Offices bills.

Amendment by Sen. Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.) — Limit government publicity intended for distribution to press, radio and television services and popular publications. It required a 25 per cent reduction in the staffs of all government information offices. In cases such as Agriculture, Interior and some of the Independent Offices, where technical advice and publications are issued by information offices, exceptions to the staff reduction were made. This provision was finally attached to the Interior, Treasury - Post Office, Agriculture, Labor-FSA, Independent Offices and Civil Functions bills.

Amendment by Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) — Require personnel offices to adjust their staffs so that every personnel employee represents more than 100 employees pursuing other endeavors. The amendment was added to the following bills, with the personnel ratio shown: Interior (1 to 110), Agriculture (1 to 115), Labor - FSA (1 to 105), State-Justice-Commerce - Judiciary (1 to 115, except that the President might at his discretion make it 1 to 85), and Independent Offices (1 to 115).

Amendment by Sen. Homer Ferguson (R Mich.) — Ban the employment of chauffeurs, except for buses and ambulances, and except to drive the cars of the President and the Secretaries of the various departments. The prohibition was written into the following bills: Interior, Treasury - Post Office, Agriculture, State - Justice - Commerce - Judiciary and Independent Offices.

Another amendment by Sen. Douglas cut sharply into the car requests (both for replacements and for new cars) of all regular agencies, except the Defense Department, but the pattern of reduction varied greatly from bill to bill. For instance, the Labor-FSA bill required the Departments to cut in half the number of automobiles it had in use as of July 1, 1951. The Independent Offices were forbidden to purchase a car for replacement unless it replaced two cars, though none was absolutely required to get rid of any of the cars in its use when the bill went into effect.

Douglas also sponsored the short-lived amendment to the Independent Offices bill which cut annual leave of all federal employees (not just those of the Independent Offices) to 20 days, instead of 26 days. (This Douglas amendment was repealed when a bill to place federal leave on a graduated basis became law. See page 323.)

Summary — As it became law, the Department of Agriculture Appropriation bill for 1952 (HR 3973) granted $1,064,988,626 in outright appropriations and loan authorizations. Congress sent the Agriculture fund measure to the President on Aug. 30, 1951, along with other regular money measures for the Labor Department-Federal Security Agency and the Interior Department.

These measures had been delayed in a legislative log-jam while Congress labored on a compromise formula for reducing federal employment in fiscal 1952. For its part, the House had insisted on an amendment by Rep. Ben. F. Jensen (R Iowa), limiting the filling of vacancies to 25 per cent, while the Senate wanted the provision by Sen. Homer Ferguson (R Mich.) reducing funds for personal services (including principally payroll funds) by 10 per cent. The compromise — limiting the filling of vacancies to 25 per cent until a 10 per cent reduction had been achieved — first was accepted for the Independent Offices Appropriation Bill (see page 115), and then added at once, without further difficulty to the Agriculture, the Interior and Labor—FSA bills.

As the Agriculture bill passed the House May 17, it carried $968,545,233 in direct appropriations and loan authority. Floor action in the lower chamber was uneventful for the most part, though Republicans in coalition with Southern Democrats put across a series of amendments which cut $2,862,200 from the amount recommended by the House Appropriations Committee.

In the Senate, numerous efforts were made by Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.), Ferguson and Everett M. Dirksen (R Ill.) to introduce new economies into the measure, but the net effect of action in the upper chamber was an increase in the bill's total appropriation to $1,088,578,130.

After the conference committee reconciled differences in the House and Senate measures, a compromise version was reported back to the House and Senate with a new final total of $1,064,988,626 — the amount which eventually was appropriated. However, no agreement could be reached on two Senate provisions for (1) a $1.9 million appropriation for a project to control the Colorado spruce bark beetle, and (2) a $700,000 appropriation for cooperative range improvements.

The House Aug. 17 approved the conference report, after cutting down the $1.9 million to $1 million and agreeing to go along with the cooperative range improvements. The Senate Aug. 20 accepted the reduction in the spruce bark beetle funds and approved the conference report.

This sent the measure to the White House, where it was signed Aug. 31.

HOUSE

Committee

The House Appropriations Committee on May 4 reported the Department of Agriculture's regular appropriation bill (HR 3973) for fiscal 1952.

As the bill was sent to the floor, it provided the Department with $720,157,433 in cash and $251,250,000 in loan authorizations, for a total of $971,407,433. President Truman had requested $1,082,005,546 for the Department. The Committee's recommendation was $110,598,113 below the 1952 request and $245,992,267 below the fiscal 1951 appropriation for Agriculture.

Justifying this approximate 12 per cent cut from the proposed 1952 Agriculture budget the Committee noted in its report: "The urgent need to curtail federal expenses" in the interest of national defense required agricultural programs to "share in the reductions."

Almost one - third of the recommended reduction in the budget involved bookkeeping transactions. The President had asked for $32,700,000 to permit the Department to reimburse the Commodity Credit Corporation for expenses incurred in eradicating hoof-and-mouth and other animal diseases. Instead of providing the money, the Committee told the Department to cancel the debt.

The Committee likewise told the Department to cancel another debt. for $72,808,000, to CCC, which the Agriculture Department had proposed to repay from a permanent appropriation for "removal of surplus agricultural commodities." This debt had been incurred by the Department in carrying out American obligations under the International Wheat Agreement.

PMA Funds Reduced

The biggest cut in the proposed budget items was made by the Committee in the Production and Marketing Administration funds. This Agency lost a total of $44,096,000. The money was pared from all of PMA's various functions — the agricultural and land resources conservation program, marketing research, the market news service, marketing regulatory activities, the school lunch program, acreage allotments and marketing quotas and the sugar payments program.

Among PMA activities, the soil conservation program — under which farmers employing conservation techniques and practices on their own land resources receive incentive payments — was dealt the biggest cut: $28,500,000. An appropriation of $256,500,000 was provided for program payments in fiscal 1952 (for work done in the previous year), against a budget request of $285 million. The amount authorized for work done in the 1952 crop year was cut to $225 million. (Congress traditionally makes both an appropriation for the current year's conservation program and an advance authorization for the following year.)

The Committee also wrote in a clause barring the payment of the customary 25 per cent salary "differential" to native employees of the American government in this country's territories and possessions. Continental Americans holding government jobs in those areas were permitted to continue to receive the differential. Payment of this aditional sum to natives, the Committee noted in its report, had led to a situation in which some local clerk - typists were receiving more than local business and professional men.

Floor Action

The bill was brought to the floor May 9, and after a week of intermittent debate, was passed May 17 by voice vote.

The floor action resulted in additional reductions totaling $2,862,200. Republicans, with some support from Southern Democrats, led the drive to cut the appropriation. While this coalition worked together successfully in trimming previous appropriations as they came before the House, the Southerners were notably less enthusiastic about economy in agriculture.

Reading the bill for amendments in Committee of the Whole, the House first approved a new cut of $150,000 in the appropriation for the Bureau of Agricultural Economics. The (standing) vote was 101 to 64. The budget request for BAE was $5,478,000 and the Committee already had cut $395,000 from this.

By another standing vote, the House reduced from $100,000 to $50,000 the allotment provided the Forest Service to purchase land essential to development of its watershed and timber protection program. (The Committee made no reduction in the budget estimate for this purpose.)

A point of order by Walter K. Granger (D Utah), was sustained against a provision for $700,000 to make cooperative range improvements. The fund would have come from money which growers pay for letting their feed cattle and sheep graze in national forests. The point was raised that the provision constituted legislation on an appropriation bill, and as such, was prohibited. The point was sustained.

Conservation Cut Rejected

The major action on the bill was taken May 15 when the House repulsed a Republican drive to cut a big chuck from the authorization for the 1952 soil conservation program. The move was turned back by a standing vote of 142 to 120. The vote was on an amendment by John Taber (R N.Y.) to trim $75 million from the $225 million authorization.

Taber's defeat came after Christopher C. McGrath (D N.Y.) had urged big city Democrats to support conservation as an "American program" serving city as well as rural interests. After turning down Taber's proposal, the House also refused on a voice vote to accept an amendment by Fred Marshall (D Minn.) to increase the 1952 program authorization from $225 million to $285 million.

Also added to the bill were both the Jensen and Smith riders. These provisions, sponsored by Reps. Ben F. Jensen (R Iowa) and Lawrence H. Smith (R Wis.), respectively, had been added regularly to other money bills as they came before the House. (See page 109.) The Jensen rider limited to 25 per cent the number of Agriculture's personnel vacancies that could be filled in fiscal 1952, and the Smith amendment prohibited the use of Agriculture funds to influence legislation pending before Congress. Both amendments were approved by voice votes in Committee of the Whole.

Later, a roll-call vote was demanded on the Jensen amendment and it was ratified, 215 to 153. All other amendments were accepted without further question.

As the bill went to tthe Senate May 17, it carried a total of $968,545,233, made up of $717,295,233 in cash and $251,250,000 in loan authorizations.

SENATE

Committee

The Senate Appropriations Committee reported the Agriculture money bill July 20, with recommendations totaling $1,013,770,130 — $35,974,897 more than the amount approved by the House. The Senate group's request entailed $751,770,130 in cash and $262,000,000 in loan authorizations.

The biggest addition by the Committee was $27,200,000 for the Production and Marketing Administration, of which the largest part went to the soil conservation payments program. Where the House had recommended $256,500,000 in appropriations for 1952 payments on the 1951 program, the Senate Committee raised the sum to $280,000,000. In addition, the Senate Committee raised the $225,000,000 program authorized for the 1952 crop year to $280,000,000.

The Senate Committee also increased funds for the agricultural production programs (acreage allotments and marketing quotas) by $3,700,000. A sum of $1,900,000 was granted for the Department's Colorado spruce bark beetle control project under the Forest Pest Control Act, although the House had allowed nothing for this project. Another addition was $3 million for construction of access roads for the purpose of expediting timber sales in the national forest. The House - stricken $700,000 appropriation for improvement of cooperative ranges in the national forests was restored, as was $250,000 of the amount cut by the House from funds for the Bureau of Agricultural Economics. The Agricultural Research Administration was provided an additional $1,014,667. The fund for purchase of land essential to development of the Department's watershed and timber protection program was restored, to $100,000. The House had halved that figure.

As for general provisions, the Committee struck out the House's clause which had barred the payment of a 25 per cent "differential" to native employees of the federal government in American territories and possessions. The Committee, in addition, struck out the House's Jensen personnel rider, but substituted for it a 10 per cent cut in the appropriations for personal services with the exception of field operating and research employees of county offices and other field locations, and employees of the crop and livestock reporting service.

Another rider was placed in the bill limiting the number of employees engaged in personnel work to a ratio of one to 115 in other, regular categories of employment.

Floor Action

The measure came up on the Senate floor July 24. After four days of debate, it was passed July 27 by a roll-call vote, 65 to 6.

During the floor action, numerous roll-call votes were taken on a variety of amendments, most of them aimed at greater economy. Nevertheless, the net result of these changes was an increase in the total money in the bill, so that as it went to conference, the bill contained $1,088,578,130, more than either the House or the Senate Committee had approved.

The increase was the result of Senate floor action on the House provision for cancellation of the Department's debt to the Commodity Credit Corporation incurred in carrying out American obligations under the International Wheat Agreement. When the Senate reached this section in the bill, a point of order was raised against the language on the ground that it was too far reaching and amounted to legislation in an appropriation bill. The point of order was sustained. Promptly, Sen. Richard B. Russell (D Ga.) chairman of the Senate Agriculture Appropriations Subcommittee and floor manager of the bill, introduced an amendment to provide a direct appropriation to reimburse CCC. The Senate approved the Russell substitute proposal on a standing vote July 26.

One Fund Cut Wins

Numerous economy amendments were proposed, chiefly by Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.), Everett M. Dirksen (R Ill.) and Homer Ferguson (R Mich.). Only four of these were successful. The remainder were turned down, some by narrow votes. The amount of the economies that were approved, however, was not easily measured, since only one of the four successful amendments involved a direct reduction in funds. The others made administrative economies that could be measured only after tests by actual operation.

The one money reduction was sponsored by Douglas. It reduced funds for the agricultural production programs by $2 million, and was approved on a roll-call vote, 48 to 30, on July 26. Other economy amendments accepted by the Senate, (1) reduced the number of automobiles the Department might replace in fiscal 1952 from 497 to 350—also sponsored by Douglas, (2) reduced by 25 per cent the payroll funds for information and publicity personnel—by Sen. Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.), and (3) barred employment of chauffeurs for government automobiles, except for the Secretary of Agriculture—by Ferguson. All these amendments were approved by voice votes on July 27.

Soil Payments Upheld

Unsuccessful economy amendments were directed against the PMA's soil conservation program, for the most part. Dirksen, in the vanguard of the forces proposing these economies, first tried to cut $130 million from the Committee-approved authorization for the 1952 crop year. He was defeated, 36 to 41. Ferguson then tried to cut $80 million from the 1952 program but was narrowly defeated, 37 to 38.

Turning to the direct appropriation for fiscal 1952 payments to soil conservation participants, the Senate then turned back a Douglas amendment to cut the amount by $20,750,000. The amendment was rejected, 24 to 52, on a roll call. A similar amendment by Ferguson to cut these funds by $5 million was defeated by standing vote.

Dirksen also was defeated when he offered an amendment to reduce funds for the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation by $3,044,541. He also tried to cut funds for the Soil Conservation Service — which performs research and furnishes data on conservation of land resources, but is not concerned with the incentive payments program — by $12,874,991. In this, the Illinoisan also lost, by voice vote.

Here is a recapitulation of Senate action on amendments:

CONFERENCE

Conferees named by the House were: Reps. Jamie L. Whitten (D Miss.),William G. Stigler (D Okla.), Joe B. Bates (D Ky.), Clarence Cannon (D Mo.), H. Carl Andersen (R Minn.), Walt Horan (R Wash.) and Richard B. Wigglesworth (R Mass.).

Named to the conference committee from the Senate were: Sens. Richard B. Russell (D Ga.), Carl Hayden (D Ariz.), Joseph C. O'Mahoney D Wyo.), Pat McCarran (D Nev.), Allen J. Ellender (D La.), Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.), and Homer Ferguson (R Mich.).

This group made its report Aug. 16. The total money agreed upon was $1,064,988,626. Of this amount, $802,988,626 was in cash and direct appropriations and $262,000,000 was in loan authorizations.

Still in disagreement, when the report was made, were:

1. The 1,900,000 fund approved by the Senate to fight the Colorado spruce bark beetle (the House conferees asked for a separate House vote on this issue), and

2. The $700,000 appropriation for cooperative range improvements.

Decisions of Conferees

Agreement was reached on all other points. Following are the major decisions of the conferees.

Regular Activities:

$4,998,304 was appropriated for the Bureau of Agricultural Economics.

The Senate - stricken language which called for collection of certain meat inspection fees from packers was restored.

The fund for constructing access roads for the purpose of expediting timber sales in the national forests was increased by $1.5 million instead of the $3 million voted by the Senate.

$75,000 was appropriated for watersheds, instead of the $50,000 voted by the House and the $100,000 by the Senate.

A direct cash appropriation of $260 million was provided for fiscal 1952 soil conservation payments and a $256,500,000 program was authorized for the 1952 crop year.

$10 million was appropriated for the agricultural production program, as voted by the Senate.

The direct cash appropriation of $76,808,000 was approved for reimbursement of CCC funds used in carrying out the International Wheat Agreement.

Jensen, Smith Clauses

General Provisions:

Replacement of 350 passenger cars was approved instead of the House's provision for replacement of 497.

The House provision barring payment of a 25 per cent "differential" to native employees of the federal government in American territories and possessions was eliminated.

The same revised version of the Jensen amendment written into other appropriation bills was approved for the Agriculture bill. This new language prohibited the filling of more than 25 per cent of the Department's personnel vacancies until a 10 per cent reduction had been made in the total number of employees on the payroll on July 1, 1951. Exempted from the reductions were meat inspectors, seasonal workers, employees of the crop and livestock reporting services and field employees of the Soil Conservation Service and the Production and Marketing Administration who provide conservation assistance to farmers and ranchers, as well as field operating and research employees engaged in work of county offices and other field locations.

Also approved was the Smith amendment, prohibiting the use of any of the Department's funds for publicity or propaganda purposes to support or defeat legislation pending before Congress.

Employment of chauffeurs for government - owned vehicles was forbidden, according to the Senate's provision.

The Byrd amendment cutting back employment in government information offices by 25 per cent was approved.

Report Wins Approval

The House accepted the Agriculture conference report on Aug. 17 by voice vote, after it approved, on a roll-call vote of 222 to 138, a motion by Rep. Wayne N. Aspinall (D Colo.) that in effect provided $1 million for the Colorado spruce bark beetle project. This was accepted as a substitute for the Senate figure of $1.9 million. In addition, the House receded from its objection to the $700,000 fund for cooperative range improvements.

In the Senate Aug. 20, the conference report was approved as revised by the House. Action was by voice vote.

President Truman signed the bill into law on Aug. 31, 1951, without comment. It became Public Law 135.

Independent Offices

Summary — Congress completed action Aug. 16, 1951, on the Independent Offices Appropriation Bill for fiscal 1952 and sent it to President Truman. At the White House, the President held the measure until a few hours before the deadline — and then signed it late in the day — Aug. 31. It became Public Law 137. Technically it was the sixth regular money measure of the year to go on the statute books, though earlier the same day, Mr. Truman also signed into law three other appropriations — bills for the Labor Department-Federal Security Agency, the Agriculture Department and the Interior Department.

As the President signed it, the Independent Offices bill carried $6,162,825,175 to finance more than 30 independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, corporations, agencies and offices in 1952. Budget recommendations had amounted to $6,837,902,465.

The House had passed a $6,144,540,355 bill, while the Senate's figure was $6,212,199,663.

The appropriation for the same agencies in fiscal 1951 was $7,996,140,947. The reduction in the fiscal 1952 outlay was brought about largely by the decline in the trainee load of the Veterans Administration's GI educational program and removal from the General Service Administration of the strategic materials acquisition program. The latter project, for which about $3 billion was appropriated in fiscal 1951, was transferred to a new agency, the Defense Materials Procurement Agency.

Two conferences between the House and Senate were necessary before final action was completed on the bill.

The House Republicans of the conference committee refused to sign the first conference report when they were unable to persuade the other conferees to include (1) the House's job-cutting amendment by Rep. Ben F. Jensen (R Iowa), which would have forbade the agencies covered by the bill from filling more than 25 per cent of their vacancies in 1952; and (2) the House's rider amending the Housing Act of 1949 — the statute providing for public housing construction for low-income families — to restrict new starts on the program to 5,000 units in 1952.

The conference dropped the Jensen amendment in favor of a provision by Sen. Homer Ferguson (R Mich.) calling for an overall 10 per cent cut in the payrolls of most of the agencies, and raising the House's dwelling restriction to 50,000 units.

Taking their protest directly to the House, the Republican conferees, led by Rep. John Phillips (R Calif.), were successful in a move to recommit the measure to another conference committee. The vote on recommittal was 188 to 186. Votes on page 172

The second conference committee compromised the Jensen and Ferguson amendments so that agencies were given the choice of filling no more than 25 per cent of their vacancies until they had by this method cut their staffs 10 per cent, or of cutting their staffs outright by 10 per cent. The conferees further decided to leave the housing restriction at 50,000 units.

The House then accepted the second conference report, 292 to 80, after Phillips made an unsuccessful motion to recommit the bill again. The Californian wanted another conference on the housing amendment.

This sent the bill to the White House.

HOUSE

Committee

The House Appropriations Committee reported the Independent Offices money measure on April 27, with a full 10 per cent slash in the budget estimates. An appropriation of $6,171,777,440 was recommended to run the independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, corporations, agencies and offices in fiscal 1952, as against budget recommendations amounting in all to $6,837,902,465.

The $665,900,025 cut in the estimates was percentagewise, the largest made by the House Appropriations Committee on any of the departmental money bills it had reported at that time.

Written into the measure, moreover, were numerous changes in substantive law, amounting in effect to legislation on an appropriation bill. This normally is prohibited by House rules. One such change was a provision permitting the Federal Maritime Administration to grant operating-differential subsidies to shippers on a voyage basis rather than on the ship basis as before.

Other Committee-added provisions cut back the Public Housing Administration's authority to initiate low-rent housing projects under the Housing Act of 1949 to 50,000 units (instead of the 135,000 originally authorized), and restricted the agency's power to approve such projects in communities which have disapproved of them. Also included was a legislative provision forbidding the PHA to authorize construction of more than 50,000 dwelling units under the 1949 Housing Act in any year after 1952 without express approval of Congress.

These changes amounted to a revision of the Housing Act. In explanation, the Committee noted that President Truman in early 1951 voluntarily ordered the PHA to authorize no more than 75,000 housing units in 1951. In view of the emergency, said the Committee, a reduction to 50,000 units should be mandatory.

$80.9 Million Savings

In addition to the cut in recommended appropriations, the Committee claimed further total savings of $80,900,000 achieved through:

1. Cancellation of $13,100,000 in contract authority previously given the Housing and Home Finance Agency for public works advance planning;

2. Rescission of HHFA's uncommitted $10,500,000 in loan authority for development of prefabricated housing, and

3. Limitation on PHA low-rental housing units resulting in an estimated saving of $57,300,000.

The two largest beneficiaries in the bill were the Veterans Administration and the Atomic Energy Commission. The VA allotment of $3,971,944,145 was, however, $483,378,855 less than the budget estimate because of heavy anticipated reductions in readjustment and educational benefits and veterans pensions. For the AEC, the Committee alloted $ 1,140,017,750, after cutting $69,982,250 from the estimates for the agency's construction programs.

Fund Recommendations

For other major agencies in the bill here is what the Committee recommended:

Tennessee Valley Authority: $236,139,600
Executive Office of the President: $19,361,215
Civil Service Commission: $321,005,900
Displaced Persons Commission: $6,195,000
Federal Communications Commission: $6,575,000
Federal Power Commission: $4,241,000
Federal Trade Commission: $4,136,400
General Accounting Office: $31,494,000
General Services Administration: $156,745,680
HHFA: $23,536,200
Interstate Commerce Commission: $10,759,470
National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics: $66,462,980
Securities and Exchange Commission: $5,699,000
Federal Maritime Administration: $157,558,900

Floor Action

The Independent Offices measure survived its first test when the House decided to consider it under terms of a Rules Committee resolution (H Res 220) waiving all points of order against its provisions. The rule was adopted on May 3 on a roll-call vote, 219 to 159. (Vote on page 172.) Under rules of the House, any Member may challenge a provision which makes changes in substantive law or is otherwise legislative in character, by raising a point of order against it. By adoption of H Res 220, the House ruled out complaints against the legislative provisions inserted by its Appropriations Committee.

The chamber May 4 went on to the big bill itself and passed it after about five hours of debate.

Before the final action, however, a coalition of Republicans and Southern Democrats was able to make further reductions totaling $22,697,085 in the bill. Repeated efforts by Administration leaders to halt the economy drive met repeated failure. The floor cuts were in addition to the Committee's previous cuts, all of which were upheld.

Cut Housing Units

In addition to reducing the cash appropriation, the House, by a roll-call vote of 181 to 113, adopted an amendment by Rep. Ed Gossett (D Tex.) lowering from 50,000 to 5,000 the number of low-rental dwelling units which the PHA might authorize for construction in 1952, and thereafter, without express consent of Congress. The Gossett amendment first was approved by teller vote, 110 to 41, in Committee of the Whole. Gossett pleaded for curtailment of government housing "in the interest of private industry and the private construction program of this country."

Among other losers in the House floor action on the Independent Offices measure were the Atomic Energy Commission and the President's emergency fund for national defense purposes. The AEC fund of $1,140,917,750 was trimmed by $85,000 after Rep. John E. Lyle Jr. (D Tex.) said the ageny had built an $85,000 cat-and-dog hospital last year despite "frowns" of the Appropriations Committee at the time the construction was proposed. Lyle termed the action "disgusting and ridiculous" and the House adopted on voice vote the reduction he proposed.

The biggest loser, in actual money reduction, was the emergency fund provided for the Executive Office of the President for use in connection with national defense emergencies. Here again the Southern Democrats worked hand in hand with the Republicans. As it came from the Appropriations Committee, the bill had included $12,500,000 for this fund — exactly half of the $25 million the President had asked for. Customarily, in recent years, the President has received from Congress annually a flat $1 million for general emergency matters. The big increase in the amount for fiscal 1952 was sought in view of the national emergency proclamation of December, 1950.

Emergency Fund Slashed

On the floor, when this item came up for scrutiny, Rep. E. C. Gathings (D Ark.) proposed reducing the appropriation to $5 million. He said that it appeared excessive in comparison with the $1 million granted in previous years. Gathings then agreed to accept a modification of his amendment — proposed by Rep. John Phillips (R Calif.) — cutting the amount still further to $1 million. The Gathings-Phillips amendment, as it then was called, was adopted in Committee of the Whole on a division vote, 127 to 82. It was later ratified on a roll-call vote, 160 to 128.

Despite the House's fund - cutting mood, however, an attempted indirect slap at President Truman was turned back. Rep. H. R. Gross (R Iowa) wanted to trim $458,361 from the White House salary and expenses allotment of $1,883,615. Gross was defeated on a division vote, 31 to 67. Only one Democrat, Rep. Fred Marshall (Minn.), voted with the Republicans in support of the amendment, but three Republicans — Norris Cotton (N.H.), John W. Byrnes (Wis.) and R. Walter Riehlman (N.Y.) — joined the Democrats in opposition.

Next an attempt by Rep. Francis E. Walter (D Pa.) to restore the $2,065,000 cut by the Appropriations Committee from the $8,260,000 requested for the Displaced Persons Commission was defeated by voice vote.

Postponement Try Halted

As the trimming went on, Rep. Albert Thomas (D Tex.), floor manager of the big appropriation measure, sought an adjournment and postponement of consideration of the bill until the following Tuesday, (May 8.) But Republican Leader Joseph W. Martin, Jr. (R Mass.), taking advantage of an unusually large Democratic Friday absenteeism, pressed for continuance, and Thomas dropped the maneuver.

Among the changes as the measure neared a final vote were two amendments identical in purpose to amendments tacked on preceding appropriation bills. One, by Rep. Ben F. Jensen (R Iowa), would prohibit the filling of more than 25 per cent of the personnel vacancies in the agencies in fiscal 1952; and the other, by Rep. Lawrence H. Smith (R Wis.) would deny use of any funds for publicity or propaganda purposes designed to influence Congress on any pending legislation.

When the money bill came up for final passage it won approval on voice vote. It called for an appropriation of $6,144,540,355 for the sundry agencies and bureaus covered.

President Hits Housing Cut

The reduction in low-cost public housing authorizations brought numerous protests.

From President Truman came a direct appeal to the Senate to restore the House cut. Mr. Truman addressed his appeal to Chairman Burnet R. Maybank (D S.C.) of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, the unit which was concerned with housing matters. Such an "arbitrary limit" as 5,000 units, wrote the President, would have an "adverse effect" on the defense effort, as it would block attempts to reduce housing shortages in war production areas. He said that his order for a 75,000-unit top on public housing construction in fiscal 1952 had been made to bring the program in line with shortages such as had been brought about by the Korean war. Further cuts below this number, he said, would be "tragic."

On May 22, in the House, Rep. Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) introduced a bill (HR 4207) which would have, in effect, nullified the housing restriction rider then pending on the Independent Offices bill. His measure was designed to permit the President to authorize from 50,000 to 200,000 units annually through fiscal 1954, the exact figures to depend on views of the President's Council of Economic Advisers.

A day later, Rep. Hugh J. Addonizio (D N.J.) introduced a similar bill (HR 4238) nullifying the proposed housing limitation, should it become law. Neither of the bills had been enacted at the end of the first session.

SENATE

Committee

The Senate Appropriations Committee approved the Independent Offices funds bill twice, before the Senate took up the measure in earnest. It first reported the bill June 12, but the chamber promptly recommitted it the same day at the request of Sen. Homer Ferguson (R Mich.)

Ferguson asked the Senate to send the money legislation back to Committee with instructions to make a flat 10 per cent cut in the agencies' payrolls, with certain exceptions, including hospital payrolls. Already the Committee had written in a five per cent reduction in most personal service items. Ferguson wanted to double this slash.

The Senate was debating the Labor Department - Federal Security Agency appropriation measure (HR 3709) at the time and Ferguson had just put across a 10 per cent cut in payroll funds in that bill (See page 127).

The Committee immediately took up the recommitted Independent Offices bill and reported it to the Senate a second time on June 13. The recommended appropriations now totaled $6,221,959,620. This was $77,419,265 more than the House had approved.

Moreover, in its action the Committee reversed the House in returning to the 50,000 maximum on the number of low-cost dwellings to be authorized in 1952. This, in effect, restored the recommendation first advanced by the House Appropriation Committee. While the House provision had stipulated continuation of the 50,000-unit maximum after 1952 unless Congress specifically authorized a higher number, the Senate Committee deleted this further restriction. Nevertheless the Senate group's provision still substantially altered the basic housing statute.

Atomic Fund Boosted

The Committee also eliminated both the so-called Jensen and Smith riders. Sponsored by Reps. Ben F. Jensen (R Iowa) and Lawrence H. Smith (R Wis.), respectively, the amendments were designed to limit the hiring of federal personnel in 1952 and to prevent the use of funds for any kind of lobbying by government agencies. Ferguson's 10 per cent cut in personnel funds was substituted for the Jensen proposal.

While the reduction in personnel funds cut about $28 million from the bill, enough additions were made to the House total to offset this several times over. Biggest additions were in defense-related activities of the Atomic Energy Commission, the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics and the Tennessee Valley Authority. The AEC got an additional $29 million, mostly for construction and equipment; the NACA received another $16,549,520 for personnel, administrative and construction expenses; and the TVA was slated for an extra $4.5 million.

Floor Action

An economy-bent Senate took up the bill June 18. After three days of debate, much trimming and changing, and many roll-call votes (see page 175) on sweeping reduction amendments, the chamber passed the big appropriation by voice vote. As it went to conference, the measure carried $6,212,174,663.

The Senate declined to make any change in the committee-drafted provision limiting to 50,000 the public housing units to be authorized for construction in fiscal 1952. Sen. Everett M. Dirksen (R Ill.) led an unsuccessful move to cut the program to 5,000 units, as the House had done, but lost on a roll-call vote, 25 to 47.

Ohio Senators Split

The fight against the Dirksen amendment was led by Sen. Herbert H. Lehman (D N.Y.) who contended that it would be better to "frankly face the fact that we have no (housing) program and ask for no fund, than cut the heart out of it." The two Ohio Senators were on opposing sides of the amendment. Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) aligned himself with Lehman and stated that 50,000 units were not too many for the low-income group. But John W. Bricker (R Ohio) said the Dirksen amendment would hold down rising inflationary pressures.

Sen. Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.) succeeded in an economy move when he won passage on a roll-call vote, 63 to 10, of an amendment to force a 15 per cent reduction in funds for government "public relations and propaganda." This was in addition to the Ferguson 10 per cent cut, already made by the Committee, and brought to a total of 25 per cent the cut in the overall-information appropriation.

Byrd told the Senate that in spite of a law in effect since 1913 forbidding any government bureaus to employ publicity experts unless appropriations are specifically marked for that purpose, various agencies of the government have publicity agents, employed under such titles as "information specialists."

Byrd also won approval of an amendment which restored to the bill the House's so-called Smith amendment barring use of funds for publicity or propaganda purposes. This amendment was approved by voice.

Vacation Time Reduced

Annual leave of government employes was cut to 20 days a year (from 26) under an amendment by Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.). This proposal was approved on a roll-call vote, 51 to 26. The leave cut was made effective as of July 1, 1951. Douglas also sponsored an amendment to prevent replacement of about half the automobiles owned by the 30-odd agencies. This proposal was adopted by voice vote.

Ferguson scored other economy licks when the Senate approved his amendments to bar funds for civiilan chauffeurs and to allow one rather than two planes for the Tennessee Valley Authority. He also sponsored an amendment which cut $15,600 from the $315,600 recommended by the Committee for maintenance of the White House next year. In addition to the latter amendment. Sen. John J. Williams (R Del.) put across a reduction of $298,062 in the $1,883,615 for the White House office next year. The cut was approved on a roll-call vote of 37 to 36.

When Senators had completed action on amendements, the bill was passed by voice vote. Altogether the floor amendments cut $10,072,462 from the Appropriations Committee's recommendations, while adding $287,505. This left the final Senate figure—$6,212,199,663 — still higher than the House's appropriation of $6,144,540,355. The measure then went to a Senate-House conference.

CONFERENCE

Two separate conferences between the House and Senate were held.

First conferees on the bill were: Reps. Albert Thomas (D Tex.), Albert Gore (D Tenn.), George Andrews, (D Ala.), Sidney R. Yates (D Ill.), John Taber (R N.Y.), John Phillips (R Calif.), Frederic R. Coudert, Jr., (R N.Y.), and Norris Cotton (R N.H.), Sens. Burnet R. Maybank (D S.C.), Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.), Kenneth McKellar (D Tenn.), Lister Hill (D Ala.), Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.), Styles Bridges (R N.H.) and Homer Ferguson (R Mich.).

This group issued a report on July 13, which retained most of the economy measures voted by the House and Senate, with the major exception of the House's so - called Jensen amendment and the House's amendment restricting public housing construction in 1952 to 5,000 units. Because of the omission of these riders, the four House Republican conferees refused to sign the conference report.

Conference report features were:

Total money was $6,162,825,175 — more than the House wanted and less than the Senate approved.

For the amendment by Rep. Ben F. Jensen (R Iowa), the conferees substituted the Senate's Ferguson amendment, cutting the various appropriations for "personal services" — that is, payrolls — by 10 per cent, excluding hospital personnel.

The amendment by Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) reducing annual leave of government employees from 26 to 20 days a year was accepted. However, it included the stipulation that the pay of "blue collar" workers who, by viture of the amendment, would receive a lower hourly rate than that paid persons doing similar work in private industry, should be increased to the level prevailing among private employers.

On Public Housing

The Senate plan for changing the 1949 Housing Act to limit public housing construction in 1952 to 50,000 units was accepted instead of the House's provision for cutting the Act's authorization to 5,000 units in 1952. The conferees also eliminated the House's further change in the Act which would have held to 50,000 units the construction begun under the Act after 1952.

The amendment by Sen. Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.) providing a 25 per cent cut in the staffs of agencies' public information offices was accepted.

The rider by Rep. Lawrence H. Smith (R Wis.) forbidding the use of government funds for support of, or opposition to, legislation pending before Congress was retained.

Also retained was another Douglas amendment cutting the number of new passenger cars authorized for purchase by the various agencies. However, where Douglas had proposed a flat reduction for all the agencies combined, the conference version of the amendment made specific cuts for each agency.

The Ferguson amendment making reductions in the number of chauffeurs for government - owned cars also was accepted.

The $298,000 cut in funds for operation of President Truman's White House office staff — inserted in the Senate — was removed.

House Refuses Compromise

The Republican conference quartet which refused to sign the report on the bill took their case to the House floor July 25 when Phillips led the attack on the report.

Following debate, Phillips offered a motion to recommit with instructions to the conferees to insist further upon the Jensen amendment and the House's housing restriction. This motion carried 188 - 186.

Second Conference Report

For the second conference, three new conferees were named. They were: Reps. Karl Stefan (R Neb.), who was named to substitute for John Taber (R N.Y.); Albert Gore (D Tenn.) appointed instead of Harry R. Sheppard (D Calif.); and Sen. Brien McMahon (D Conn.), who was added to the committee, while no Senator was taken off.

After two weeks of meetings, these conferees came up with a job-cutting formula that was a compromise between the Jensen and Ferguson amendments.

The compromise provided that agencies could fill only 25 per cent of their personnel vacanies in 1952 until a 10 per cent reduction had been achieved in their staffs. If the limitation on vacancy filling failed to achieve the 10 per cent cut, the agencies were required to dismiss additional employees until the 10 per cent reduction had been reached.

The agencies were given discretionary power to make the 10 per cent cut at the outset. Either way, they were required to turn back to the Treasury at least 10 per cent of their payroll funds.

A further provision of the compromise was that eight per cent of the overall saving had to be made in actual payroll expenditures. The remaining two per cent might come from personnel funds other than those earmarked for salaries. The latter category would include funds for travel, automobiles, stationery, telephones, and supplies and materials.

The housing limitation was left at 50,000, as the Senate desired.

Revised Bill Approved

On Aug. 16, this report was taken to the House where it was promptly approved by roll-call vote, 292 to 80. Before final passage, the House voted on a roll call, 169 to 206, against another Phillips motion to recommit. The Californian wanted the chamber to return the bill to conference again, with instructions to the conferees to insist still further upon the House's 5,000-unit limitation on housing.

The Senate approved the conference report the same day by voice vote.

After waiting the full time allowed him for action on the bill, President Truman signed the Independent Offices appropriation late Aug. 31, 1951. It became Public Law 137.

Interior Department

Summary — A $511,841,816 Interior Department Appropriation Bill was sent by Congress to President Truman on Aug. 20, 1951. The President signed it Aug. 31 and it became Public Law 136. Budget estimates for the Department amounted to $559,286,000, but Congress reduced this amount almost 10 per cent.

As originally passed by the House on May 2, the bill carried $496,764,500, but the Senate, when it approved the measure July 13, upped the total to $518,065,353. The appropriation that became law was, thus, approximately a "split - the - difference" compromise.

Some significant cuts were made by the two chambers in funds for public power and irrigation projects and for construction of transmission lines. In addition, new restrictions were placed on the Bureau of Reclamation's power to build transmission lines that would duplicate lines of private utilities which have "wheeling" agreements to transmit power from government dams. No such duplicating lines would be permitted in fiscal 1952 unless construction contracts previously had been arranged, or unless the Secretary of Interior found private utilities were "unwilling or unable" to fulfill transmission contracts. Moreover, both the House and Senate committees, in their reports on the bill, recommended that Interior not spend such funds as were appropriated for the Southeastern and Southwestern Power Administrations to build transmission lines if contracts could be entered into with private companies to move the power.

The Administration's ban on the start of new reclamation projects was upheld by both the House and Senate, despite efforts of Sen. Carl Hayden (D Ariz.) to overcome the prohibition.

Two Conferences Necessary

In accordance with similar reductions written into other appropriation bills, Interior's expenditures for personal services were reduced by 10 per cent and Interior was, in addition, prohibited from filling more than 25 per cent of its personnel vacancies occurring during the year until a 10 per cent reduction in force had been achieved. Two conferences between the House and Senate were required before the personnel compromise was worked out.

The first conference attempted to write in only the 10 per cent reduction in personal services which had originated in the Senate Appropriations Committee and to throw out the controversial Jensen amendment limiting the filling of vacancies to 25 per cent. But the House refused on a roll-call vote, 189 to 170, to accept the budget reductions alone, without the Jensen amendment.

The second conference added the ban on vacancy filling, as a means of requiring the 10 per cent personnel reduction, but retained the complementary 10 percent reduction in payroll funds themselves.

This compromise was finally accepted by the House Aug. 17 on voice vote. The Senate approved it Aug. 20, and the bill went to President Truman, who signed it 11 days later.

HOUSE

Committee Report

The House Appropriations Committee reported the Interior Department Appropriation Bill for 1952 (HR 3790) on April 20. It recommended $520,031,500 for the Department, against budget estimates amounting to $559,286,000. The proposed appropriation was $39,254,500, or about seven per cent, under the estimates, and $58,654,325 below the Interior Department's appropriation for the previous year, fiscal 1951.

In its report, the Committee took note of the fact that there was a reduction in the 1952 budget estimates, but went on to point out that it had felt constrained, nevertheless, to make further reductions "in keeping with the current national financial situation and the need for economy in government spending."

Public power agencies and the Bureau of Reclamation bore the brunt of the Committee cuts. However, large reductions also were made in proposed budgets of the Office of Territories and the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

For the Southeastern Power Administration, for which $4,300,000 was requested, the Committee granted $3,675,000; for the Southwestern Power Administration $5,200,000 was granted, as against budget estimates of $5,400,000; and for the Bonneville Power Administration, $72,750,000 was recommended in lieu of a proposed $75,000,000. The SEPA was denied authority, as a result of its cutback, to construct transmission lines in the Savannah River Basin. The Office of Territories, which sought $47,600,000, was granted $39,620,000. For the Bureau of Reclamation $233,575,000 was recommended against a proposed budget of $252,075,000.

Criticize Power Line "Start"

The Committee also declared that the Commissioner of Reclamation, Michael W. Straus, proceeded with surveys incident to the start of construction of a proposed transmission line between the Bureau's Central Valley Project in California and the Bonneville Power System in the Pacific Northwest, despite the "clearly expressed intent of Congress" in the General Appropriation Act for 1951 that no such surveys should be begun.

The Secretary of Interior was requested by the Committee to "investigate all facts surrounding this situation and to report promptly his findings thereon together with a report on disciplinary action taken by him." The Committee then went on to add another, more specific, prohibition against the start of any kind of work on the project, even of a preliminary nature.

The Committee gave its full endorsement to the Administration's ban on the start of new reclamation projects, and said not only had no money been appropriated for new projects, but also no provision had been made for new features of existing projects.

These legislative provisions were inserted:

1. Require at least 75 per cent of the federally financed road construction in Alaska to be let to private contractors.

2. Prohibit further payment of the 25 per cent salary "differential" to native employees of the Interior Department in American territories and possessions.

3. Authorize the establishment of a continuing fund of $50,000 from power receipts in the southeastern power area, to be available to defray only emergency expenses and those necessary under unusual circumstances to insure continuity of electric service and continuous operation of government facilities in the area — and specifically not to be available for rental of transmission or related facilities as regular operations, or for purchase of electric power and energy to firm up the government's system. (The Interior Department had sought a continuing fund of $200,000 for SEPA.)

4. Rescind all Interior's unused contract authority as of June 30, 1951.

Floor Action

The House began consideration of the Interior Department bill on April 23. Debate continued intermittently for a week, during which a coalition of Republicans and Southern Democrats put across numerous amendments aimed primarily at reducing funds for public power projects and transmission lines.

A total of $23,267,000 was cut from the Committee-recommended appropriation of $520,031,500 leaving an appropriation for the Department of $496,764,500. The floor cuts, with the Committee's reductions, resulted in the greatest reduction by the House in any of the departmental money bills it had considered at that point in the year.

More than two dozen amendments were offered while the House acted in Committee of the Whole. Most were approved. Nearly a dozen of the more controversial amendments were subsequently put to another, ratifying vote.

First, while acting in Committee of the Whole, the House decided by a standing vote of 135 to 72 to eliminate the entire $3.4 million recommended for the Southeastern Power Administration to continue construction of the transmission line from Buggs Island Dam to Langley Field, Virginia.

SWPA Funds Reduced

Then, despite the pleas of Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Tex.), the House trimmed $550,000 from funds recommended for Southwestern Power Administration transmission lines. Oren Harris (D Ark.) proposed the reduction, which was agreed to on a 149-87 teller vote. Rayburn took the floor to plead that there was room for both public and private power. When the Speaker concluded, Dewey Short (R Mo.) offered an amendment eliminating all except $988,750 of the proposed SWPA funds. He withdrew the proposal — "after talking with Mr. Rayburn," he told the House. But he later won approval on a voice vote of a prohibition against SWPA projects in western Missouri.

Next, the House carved $5.5 million from the Bonneville Power Administration's request for transmission lines funds, though it did so against the pleas of the entire Pacific Northwest delegation. Rep. Gerald R. Ford, Jr., (R Mich.) proposed the slash which was accepted on a teller vote, 110 to 91.

Then the House went on to approve an amendment by John Taber (R N.Y.) which cut $10,190,000 from the Bureau of Reclamation's total appropriation. Taber proposed to limit the cut to funds for power projects and transmission lines, but agreed to a modifying proviso by Rep. Harold O. Lovre (R S.D.) which spread the reduction over funds for the Bureau's irrigation projects as well. The Lovre modification was accepted by the House on a 102-91 standing vote, and Taber's modified amendment, was approved, also by a standing vote, 112 to 110.

An amendment by Richard B. Wigglesworth (R Mass.) cut $1 million from the Bureau's appropriation for preliminary investigations and surveys of proposed transmission lines and other projects.

Added from the floor by Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.) was a further public power restriction, to prohibit the Bureau from starting construction of transmission lines in areas where they would duplicate facilities of private utilities having so-called "wheeling agreements" to transmit government-generated power. It was agreed to by a standing vote of 109 to 91.

Add Jensen Amendment

Besides approving the money reductions, the House also adopted by teller vote, 168 to 146, an amendment by Ben F. Jensen (R Iowa) which prohibited the filling of more than 25 per cent of the Department's personnel vacancies in 1952, except by transfer from within the agency. Specifically exempted were certain personnel in the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the National Park Service.

The House also approved an amendment, this one by Rep. Lawrence H. Smith (R Wis.), to prohibit the use of funds for publicity or propaganda designed to defeat or support legislation pending before Congress.

Just prior to final passage, the amendments reducing funds for public power, transmission lines and reclamation projects, plus the Jensen personnel rider, were put to separate, roll-call tests. All were ratified, and by sizable majorities. (For voting, see page 166.)

Final Passage

On May 2, the House passed the Interior Appropriation Bill by voice vote, and sent it to the Senate. As it left the House, the measure carried $496,764,500 to run the Department in fiscal 1952.

Truman Hits Keating Rider

On June 11, President Truman wrote to Chairman Carl Hayden (D Ariz.), of the Senate Interior Appropriations Subcommittee, and appealed for restoration by the Senate of funds cut by the House from appropriations for power projects and transmission lines and, particularly, for elimination of the House - approved Keating rider, aimed at preventing dual government - private transmission lines. The Keating amendment, said the President, would cripple operation of public power projects "for the national defense and in the public interest."

Keating promptly responded with a defense of his amendment and said he was disappointed "that the President has seen fit to oppose this effort to reduce non-essential, non-defense spending."

SENATE

Committee Report

The Senate Appropriations Committee reported the Interior Department Appropriation Bill to the Senate on July 3, after adding $23,317,807 to the House appropriation of $496,764,500 to raise the total recommended allotment for the Department to $520,082,307. This approximated the recommendations of the House Appropriations Committee. The Senate Committee proposed to restore many of the House-cut items, particularly in the field of public power, but in some cases it made reductions below the House allowances.

The bill reported by the Senate Committee made the following major changes in the House bill:

The Jensen amendment, forbidding the filling of more than 25 per cent of the Department's personnel vacancies in fiscal 1952, was deleted. In its place, the Committee wrote in a flat 10 per cent reduction in funds for personal services. The Committee wrote in a new section, detailing the cash reductions for each agency under this amendment. Personnel engaged in operation and maintenance of power and irrigation projects, power transmission lines, hospitals and schools for Indians, the Alaska Railroad, and the national parks, were excluded from the reduction.

The sum of $342,020 was restored of the $3.4 million cut by the House from the SEPA appropriation for transmission lines construction, and the new appropriation was earmarked for the North and South Carolina areas. (The Interior Department had asked for restoration of $652,500. Added by the Committee was a stipulation that SEPA was not to use the money for the N.C.-S.C. project if "wheeling" agreements could be worked out with private utilities for transmission of the power.

Emergency Fund Provision

The $50,000 continuing fund for the SEPA, with its uses confined to "emergency expenses" only, was approved with the addition of another proviso extending the "emergency" spending limitation also to the continuing funds of the Southwestern Power Administration.

The House's ban on SWPA projects in western Missouri was endorsed by the Senate Committee since, the Committee said, it believed private utilities in the area could perform the needed services. In line with this ban, the Committee then cut out $1,060,000 earmarked for the SWPA to use in western Missouri.

The $5.5 million cut from the BPA's construction funds was restored, making the total Senate Committee recommendation for construction $67.5 million, as compared with the House-approved total of $62 million.

The Committee recommended that the Bureau of Reclamation budget be increased $12,897,247 over the amount approved by the House, and approved the ban against preliminary work of any kind on the interconnection between CVP and BPA. It also upheld the ban on new reclamation projects of any kind.

The Keating amendment, preventing dual government-private power transmission lines in areas where government - private utility "wheeling" agreements exist, was revised by the Committee to permit the Bureau to build lines for which construction funds already had been appropriated, or for which contracts had been entered into, or where private utilities were "unable or unwilling" to carry out "wheeling agrements."

Oppose Pay Ceiling Cut

The $100 - a - day pay ceiling for individual consultants hired by the Bureau of Reclamation was restored in lieu of the House's $50-a-day rate.

The House's requirement that 75 per cent of the road construction in Alaska be let to private contractors was increased by the Committee to 80 per cent.

The House rescission of all the Department's unused contract authority was amended by the Committee to permit extension of the authorizations until June 30, 1952, at which time they would be rescinded if not obligated.

The Smith amendment banning government publicity or propaganda in connection with any pending legislation was amended in line with the proposal by Sen. Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.) limiting information specialists, previously added to the Independent Offices Appropriation Bill (see page 118). This amendment required a 25 per cent reduction in all public relations personnel.

The anti-chauffeur amendment, by Sen. Homer Ferguson (R Mich.), also added to the Independent Offices Appropriations Bill, was written into the Interior bill by the Committee. It placed an outright ban on the employment of civilian chauffeurs for government-owned passenger cars, other than buses and ambulances.

One other amendment previously written into the Independent Offices bill was put into the Interior bill. This one, by Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) established a new ratio of personnel employees to employees in other activities, at 1 to 115.

The number of new passenger autos authorized for purchase in fiscal 1952 was cut by about 10 per cent and earmarked for replacement only.

Floor Action

The Senate began debate on the Interior bill on July 5. After a week of intermittent action, the bill was passed July 13 by a roll-call vote, 64 to 4. All Committee amendments were adopted, though some caused considerable floor debate. (For voting, see page 176.)

However, a series of amendments from the floor was adopted which, in the end, cut $2,016,954 from the Committee-recommended appropriation, principally from funds for the Bureau of Mines and the Bureau of Indian Affairs. Some funds were added to the Indian Bureau's allotment for health, education and welfare services.

The Senate rejected an addition sought by Carl Hayden (D Ariz.) who wanted to set aside the Administration ban on new reclamation projects during the defense emergency and add $12,026,000 for the start of eight specific developments in fiscal 1952.

All the eight new reclamation projects Hayden proposed were requested, he said, by the Bureau of Reclamation but denied by the Bureau of the Budget, and thus never were presented to Congress. The projects were: Solano project in California; Palisades project in Idaho; Weber Basin in Utah; Yakima, Kennewick division, in Washington; Riverton-Muddy Ridge canal and laterals in Wyoming; Lower Marias in Montana; Sargent unit in Nebraska; and Jamestown unit in North Dakota.

Loses on Roll Call

This amendment, consideration of which continued intermittently for several days, finally was defeated July 12 by a roll-call vote, 30 to 45.

Also defeated on roll-call votes July 12 were two attempts to cut funds earmarked for construction by Reclamation — principally for expansion of existing projects. The first attempt was made by Douglas, who offered an amendment to cut these funds by $16,274,000. It was defeated by roll-call vote, 19 to 57. The second attempt, by Ferguson, who proposed a reduction of $10,535,450, was defeated by roll call 26 to 47.

An amendment by Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.), to earmark an indefinite amount of the Reclamation Bureau's construction funds for starting new transmission lines from existing power projects in western Minnesota and northwest Iowa, also was defeated July 12 by a roll-call vote, 15 to 55.

When the Committee-sponsored amendment restricting the uses of the SWPA's $300,000 continuing fund, was debated, Robert S. Kerr (D Okla.) said the restriction, by limiting the fund to "emergency" purposes and prohibiting its use for the purchase of power or the leasing of transmission lines, would destroy the "workability" of SWPA's existing arrangements with public and private utilities. But Pat McCarran (D Nev.) argued that the issue was not between public and private power, but but whether federal funds could be used for specific items without Congressional approval.

Before the Committee amendment was voted on, Hayden made a point of order against it as legislation in an appropriation bill. The point of order first was sustained, but the ruling later was rescinded. McCarran then questioned whether the amendment was germane. The Senate voted, 42 to 30, that it was germane. Then came the ballot on whether to uphold the Committee amendment. On another roll call, the Senate voted, 39 to 29, to do so.

Construction Funds Increased

Kerr promptly offered an amendment to increase the Southwestern Power Administration's construction funds by $500,000, with the money earmarked for the purchase of electric power and energy and for the leasing of transmission lines. This was approved by voice vote. But, the next day, Kerr again raised the issue and asked the Senate to accept a modification of his amdnement which had the effect of adding only half as much, $250,000, to the construction funds. This the Senate agreed to by voice vote.

Another of the Committee's amendments which was debated at length was the appropriation of $342,020 for the SEPA to construct transmission lines in North and South Carolina provided it could not make "wheeling" agreements with private utilities to do the job. Clyde R. Hoey (D N.C.), for whose state the construction was proposed in part, said the private contracts and agreements were ready to be signed if the appropriation were defeated. However, the Committee amendment making the money available anyway was adopted by voice vote July 9.

Also adopted was the Committee-modified Keating amendment aimed at restricting the Bureau of Reclamation's authority to construct transmission lines of its own in areas where it had "wheeling" agreements with private utilities. Before adoption, however, the Senate was presented with an amendment by Francis Case (R S.D.) to apply the terms of the modified Keating amendment to the Southeastern, Southwestern and Bonneville Power Administrations. The Case proposal was defeated by voice vote after it was pointed out that language already had been placed in the bill to accomplish objectives similar to those of the Keating amendment in the cases of the three public power agencies.

Final Passage

Final passage of the bill on July 13 was by roll-call vote, 64 to 4. As it went to conference, the bill would have appropriated $518,065,353 to operate the Interior Department in fiscal 1952.

CONFERENCE

First Report

Conferees appointed from the House were: Michael J. Kirwan (D Ohio), W. F. Norrell (D Ark.), Henry M. Jackson (D Wash.), Foster Furcolo (D Mass.), Clarence Cannon (D Mo.), Ben F. Jensen (R Iowa) and Ivor D. Fenton (R Pa.).

From the Senate: Carl Hayden (D Ariz.), Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.), Pat McCarran (D Nev.), Dennis Chavez (D N. Mex.), Guy Cordon (R Ore.), Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.), and Milton R. Young (R N. D.).

Within two weeks this group had ironed out the major points of difference between the House and Senate bills and on July 30 submitted a report. Here are the major compromises:

A total appropriation of $511,841,-816 was aproved, instead of the House's $496,764,500 and the Senate's $518,065,353.

The Southeastern Power Administration was granted $318,500 for construction and acquisition of a transmission line from the Clarks Hill dam to Greenwood, S.C. — the Buggs Island-Kinston, N.C. line was deleted.

Establishment of the $50,000 continuing fund for SEPA was aprpoved, and its uses were confined to "emergency" expenses only; likewise the use of SWPA's continuing fund for purchase of electric power and rental of transmission facilities from private utilities, was restricted to the amounts approved by Congress each year. The amount for fiscal 1952 was set at $250,000.

Also $3,375,000 was appropriated for the SWPA for construction, of which $250,000 was earmarked for the purchase of electric power and rental of lines, and $810,600 for the continuation of the western Missouri project previously stricken out by both the House and Senate. The conferees stipulated that the money for the Missouri project was to be used only if SWPA could not obtain a "wheeling" agreement with private utilities to transmit government power in the area.

Funds for Bonneville

For construction by the Bonneville Power Administration, $67,500,000 was appropriated, as proposed by the Senate.

It was required that 88 per cent of the BPA and Bureau of Reclamation construction be let to private contractors.

The sum of $202,767,725 was appropriated for construction by the Bureau of Reclamation.

The Keating amendment was retained as amended in the Senate—with the Bureau of Reclamation denied the right to build power lines in areas where it had "wheeling" agreements with private companies except where contracts had been entered into for their construction, or where the Secretary of Interior found private utilities "unable or unwilling" to carry out their transmission contracts.

A final payment of $282,275 by the Bureau to the Grand Coulee School District in Washington was authorized to discharge the last federal responsibilities in connection with facilities built to meet needs of dependents of the Bureau and its contractor employees at the time the Grand Coulee Dam was built.

A sum of $191,000 was earmarked for operation and maintenance of the

The start of any surveys or other kind of work on the proposed interconnection between CVP in California and BPA in Washington and Oregon was specifically denied. The conference report instructed the Secretary of Interior to submit "immediately" a "full and complete" report on the continuation of a preliminary survey of the interconnection, even while the House and Senate were categorically denying the project in their reports on the 1952 Interior bill. The conferees demanded "disciplinary" action within the Bureau.

Eighty per cent of the construction work on Alaskan roads was required to be let to private contractors as the Senate proposed.

Unobligated Contract Authority

Contract authority, unobligated as of June 30, 1952, would be rescinded, as the Senate proposed.

Provision was made for purchase of about five per cent fewer automobiles and the majority was earmarked for replacement only.

The plan for cutting off 25 per cent of Interior's information and public relations personnel, as proposed by the Senate was retained, and the House ban on government propaganda to influence legislation before Congress was removed.

The Senate ban on civilian chauffeurs was retained except that its application was limited to operation in the District of Columbia and the Secretary and Undersecretary of Interior were each allowed to have a driver.

The ratio of employees in personnel work to those engaged in regular activities was set at 1 to 110, instead of 1 to 115, as proposed in the Senate.

Stricken out was the provision limiting the Department's expenditures in the last quarter of fiscal 1952 to the average quarterly amounts of such expenditures during the preceding three quarters of the year. But the Director of the Budget Bureau was authorized to invoke the provision if he thought it necessary to prevent excessive last quarter purchases.

The Jensen amendment limiting the filling of Interior's personnel vacancies was stricken and in its stead was written the Senate amendment reducing budget estimates for personal services in the Department by an average of 10 per cent. The Senate's itemized account of these reductions was eliminated, but the conferees estimated that the limitations it imposed trimmed $13,841,606 from the personal services budgets.

In the conference report, Reps. Jensen and Fenton stated that they did not concur in the conferees' action on the last point.

House Rejects Report

On July 31, the conference compromise was submitted to the House for final action. But for the third time in a week the chamber made it clear it would not agree to discard altogether the Jenson plan for reducing government employees. Upon motion by Jensen, the House voted by roll call, 189 to 170, to recommit the bill with instructions to the conferees to insist upon the Jensen proposal. Similar action already had been taken by the House on the Labor-FSA and Independent Offices funds bills.

Thus, the bill was returned to conference for a second time. The conferees were not changed for the new consultations.

Second Report

On Aug. 16, agreement had been reached, and the second conference report was submitted.

The compromise on the personnel amendments was essentially an amalgamation of the two proposals and was identical, except on technical details, to the personnel reduction compromise written into preceding and succeeding appropriation bills during the year.

Under its terms, Interior was prohibited from filling more than 25 per cent of its personnel vacancies until it had reduced the personnel on its payrolls — as of July 1, 1951 — by 10 per cent, except that it was given the choice of making a 10 per cent cut at the outset. Excluded from the reduction were personnel engaged in health, safety, law enforcement, operation and maintenance work, soil and moisture conservation and forestry activities in the field, exclusive of administrative personnel not directly connected with the operation of any such specific activity.

The specific cash reductions in budget estimates for personal services, amounting to some $13.8 billion, was retained, as proposed in the original conference report. Retention of limitations on expenditures for personal services simply complemented the new amendment requiring reductions in personnel.

Compromise Accepted

This new version of the Jensen amendment was acceptable to the House. On Aug. 17, the House agreed to the conference report by voice vote, as well as to two other conference reports on appropriation bills into which the compromise proposal also had be written.

On Aug. 20, the Senate, likewise by voice vote, accepted the Interior conference report.

On Aug. 31, President Truman approved HR 3790 without comment and it became Public Law 136.

Labor — FSA

HR 3709—P.L. 134

Summary — One of the first regular appropriation bills of the year to be acted on was HR 3709, providing funds for the Labor Department, the Federal Security Agency and four related independent offices. It received final Congressional action Aug. 20 and was signed into law the next day.

The measure provided $2,513,013,294; the President had requested $2,744,253,760. The four independent offices in addition to Labor and FSA covered by the appropriation were: The National Labor Relations Board, the National Mediation Board, the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service and the Railroad Retirement Board.

Congress tied two "strings" to the appropriation. By the first it imposed enforced savings totaling $1,009,024 on the personal services budgets of the agencies. The actual spendable appropriation in the bill thus totaled $2,512,004,270. The savings were earmarked for return to the Treasury.

For each agency here are the amounts (1) appropriated and (2) spendable after the enforced reductions:

	Appropriated	Spendable
Labor Dept.	$ 222,791,955	$ 222,504,944
FSA	1,715,218,973	1,715,027,843
NLRB	8,233,959	7,885,418
NMB	1,138,247	1,092,243
RRB	562,534,409	562,534,409
FMCS	3,095,750	2,959,413
Total	2,513,013,294	2,512,004,270

By the second "string" Congress curbed the filling of agency vacancies. The saving from this was not estimated.

The appropriation originally approved by the House totaled $2,641,206,661, while the Senate had reduced this figure to $2,527,994,250. The final appropriation was less than either sum because the House-Senate conferees chose between the two versions on each item according to which was the lower.

While action on the bill came comparatively early in the session in both the House and Senate, a final compromise was delayed by disagreement among conferees on plans to reduce the number of Federal employees. The House plan, by Rep. Ben F. Jensen (R Iowa), sought to reduce expenses by prohibiting the filling of more than 25 per cent of all personnel vacancies in the agencies in fiscal 1952, while the Senate plan, sponsored by Sen. Homer Ferguson (R Mich.) merely cut appropriations for personal services (i. e. payrolls, offices supplies, etc.) by 10 per cent.

The conferees first accepted the Ferguson plan with considerable modifications. But the House refused to agree to the report, sending it back to a second conference by a roll-call vote of 222 to 169 (see page 172). After a month of efforts to reconcile the plans, the conferees worked out a formula, thence applied to all succeeding appropriation bills, which prohibited the filling of more than 25 per cent of the fiscal 1952 personnel vacancies until a 10 per cent reduction in force had been made.

This plan, and the conference report in which it was contained, was accepted by the House Aug. 17 and the Senate Aug. 20, both by voice votes.

HOUSE

Committee

The House Appropriations Committee completed its action April 13 on the bill (HR 3709) to make regular appropriations in fiscal 1952 for the Department of Labor, the Federal Security Agency and four related independent offices—the National Labor Relations Board, the National Mediation Board, the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service and the Railroad Retirement Board.

For all these agencies the Committee recommended a total appropriation of $2,642,279,961. This was a reduction of $89,973,799 below budget estimates of $2,732,253,760. But the recommendation represented a net increase of $255,087,897 above 1951 appropriations.

A major part of this increase was the result of a Committee-approved bookkeeping change in the method of making appropriations to the railroad retirement trust fund. This increased the total funds in the bill by $174,995,076.

The remainder of the increase over 1951 appropriations for the agencies was accounted for principally by a stepping up of the program of emergency school aid to defense areas and the federal-aid hospital construction program. The appropriations for these two items—administered by the Federal Security Agency—were $103 million and $175 million, respectively. This was about $120 million more than was appropriated for the two programs combined in 1951.

Pointing out that it had reduced budget requests by about three per cent, the Committee noted in its report that it was "next to impossible" to show substantially larger savings because it had no control over some of the heavier allotments. Most of these are governed by basic statutes over which the Appropriations Committee, once Congress has put the law on the books, has no authority.

Four such items taken together—public assistance, emergency school aid, hospital construction and employment security grants—accounted for $1.665 billion, or 82 per cent of the total appropriation in the bill, and control over all these appropriations was beyond the Committee, it explained.

Floor Action

The House took up the bill April 18, and passed it the same day after a coalition of Republicans and Southern Democrats forced through floor amendments cutting $1,073,300 from the Committee recommendation.

Among the amendments was the one by Ben F. Jensen (R Iowa), to force a 25 per cent cutback in agency employees during 1952. Offered subsequently to a number of other appropriation bills, the Jensen rider was first brought to the floor in connection with the Labor-FSA bill.

The Jensen amendment was accepted by voice vote in the Committee of the Whole. Later a roll-call vote was demanded, and the personnel-reduction plan was ratified 208 to 145 (see page 172).

Among other amendments adopted was one by John Bell Williams (D Miss.) that reduced the money intended for FSA Administrator Oscar Ewing's office by a total of $229,000. Williams argued the reduction would "cut down his propaganda for socialized medicine."

A parliamentary skirmish was touched off by the Committee-recommended change in the method of making appropriations to the Railroad Retirement Board's trust fund. Daniel J. Flood (D Pa.) raised a point of order against the language which had the effect of placing the appropriation on an annual "indefinite" basis instead of the previous "definite" basis. He was sustained by the speaker. Then Christopher C. McGrath (D N.Y.) promptly reintroduced the provision as a floor amendment and it was adopted on standing vote, 119 to 5. No further objection was raised by Flood.

The House passed the bill by voice vote. As it then went to the Senate it called for an appropriation of $2,641,206,661.

Following is a resume of all action on amendments:

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

James C. Davis (D Ga.) — Reduce by $110,000 funds provided for U. S. Public Health Service. Voice vote.

Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.) — Reduce by $137,000 the amount allotted for salaries and expenses, Bureau of Public Assistance. Standing vote, 95-78.

John Bell Williams (D Miss.) — Cut $229,000 from funds for salaries of the Office of Administrator, FSA. Standing, 101-63.

W. F. Norrell (D Ark.) — Cut $200,000 from FSA's appropriation for administration of surplus property disposal. Standing, 104-74.

Howard W. Smith (D Va.) — Reduce funds of National Labor Relations Board by $300,000. Standing, 116-60.

Christopher C. McGrath (D N.Y.) — Provide for monthly payments of taxes to Railroad Retirement Board trust funds instead of present system of annual appropriations. Standing 119 to 5.

Edward H. Rees (R Kan.) — Cut $97,300 from funds of Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service. Voice.

Rees (R Kan.) — Reduce from $75 to $50 a day the rate of pay for FMC's personnel. Voice.

Lawrence H. Smith (R Wis.) — Bar use of funds for propaganda and publicity purposes not already authorized by Congress. Standing, 144-92.

Ben F. Jensen (R Iowa) — Permit agencies covered by bill to fill only 25 per cent of vacancies that occur in 1952. Standing, 144-100. Later reaffirmed by roll-call vote 208 to 145.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Foster Furcolo (D Mass.) — Increase by $75 million funds provided for grants for hospital construction. Voice vote.

Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) — Amend Furcolo amendment to increase hospital funds by $20 million. Voice.

SENATE

Committee

The Senate Appropriations Committee issued its first appropriations report of the year when it sent the House-passed Labor-FSA measure to the Senate floor June 6, with a recommended total of $2,528,338,831. This was a $112,867,530 decrease in the House total.

In addition to paring millions from the House appropriation, the Senate Committee tossed out the House's Jensen amendment to limit hiring of Federal personnel in fiscal 1952. Instead it added a provision cutting five per cent off all allowances for personal services. This had the effect not only of reducing payroll funds, but also of reducing allowances for equipping offices with such items as stationery, telephone service, supplies, etc. The substitute plan was framed by Sen. Guy Cordon (R Ore.), and specifically exempted hospital personnel.

The Committee also threw out the House provision for an annual indefinite appropriation to the railroad retirement fund, and provided instead for continued use of the definite payment plan.

GOP Policy Committee Approves

The Senate Republican Policy Committee, headed by Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) met June 6, shortly after the Appropriations Committee submitted its report on the Labor-FSA bill, and decided to back Cordon's method of attempting to cut down payrolls of the agencies. It was indicated that Cordon's formula would be applied to all subsequent appropriation bills. But Homer Ferguson (R Mich.) served notice at the meeting that he thought the reduction should be instead a 10 per cent one.

Floor Action

The Senate took up the bill June 7, and promptly added numerous economy amendments. Debate lasted a week. Passage, by voice vote, came finally on June 14. Amendment after amendment to reduce funds in the bill was brought to the floor and numerous roll-call votes were taken on the more controversial ones. Some efforts were made to hold down the size of the reductions, but they were not successful; some other efforts to make greater reductions also failed.

Major victory of the economy bloc came June 12 when the Senate approved by a 58 to 24 roll call a rider sponsored by Ferguson raising to 10 per cent the Committee-approved reduction in personal service items. Like Cordon's plan, Ferguson's also specifically exempting hospital personnel. The saving in budget estimates for personal services was set by Ferguson at $4,492,071. (All roll calls on page 174).

(Later the same day Ferguson got the Senate to agree to recommit the Independent Offices Appropriation Bill (HR 3880), which had just been reported by the Senate Appropriations Committee, with instructions to make a 10 per cent cut in its personnel items, too. Ferguson, who said the Committee action would save time when the bill reached the floor, made it clear that he intended to try to add his job-cutting rider to every appropriation bill as it came before the Senate.)

Ferguson also sponsored an amendment barring the use of any of the appropriation for employment of chauffeurs for government autos. It was adopted by voice vote June 12.

Before approving Ferguson's 10 per cent reduction plan, the Senate voted down on a 28-54 roll call attempt by George W. Malone (R Nev.) to force a 15 per cent personnel slash.

Cordon, who had worked out the five per cent reduction plan in the Appropriations Committee, took the floor to oppose Ferguson's 10 per cent cut. He said a five per cent reduction was enough. On the other hand, Kenneth McKellar (D Tenn.), chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, opposed his own Committee which had approved the Cordon plan, and spoke in support of Ferguson. "Let's cut these non-military bills as much as we can," he urged.

Both Sens. Herbert H. Lehman (D-Lib N.Y.) and Matthew M. Neely (D W.Va.) tried to exempt from the personnel reduction a variety of public health activities including heart disease and cancer research. On June 12, the Senate voted against Lehman's proposal, 38 to 42. And on June 14, the Senate voted down Neely, 31 to 50.

Though Ferguson scored highest among the economy advocates, he had a runner-up in Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) The Illinoisan came closest to a major success on June 13 when the Senate barely defeated, 35 to 36, his proposal to cut leave benefits of Labor-FSA employees to 20 days a year and to reduce sick time to 12 days.

He also made a move to place government leave privileges on a graduated basis—with the present 26 days reserved for employees who have been with the government 15 years or more—but he lost on this also, 14 to 56. And when Douglas sought to have the Senate direct the Post Office and Civil Service Committee to bring in a bill by June 25 to fix leave at 20 and 12 days, respectively, his motion was declared out of order.

Also June 13 Douglas presented amendments to reduce funds for maternal and child welfare benefits, and payments to school districts in crowded defense areas. They were defeated, 17 to 61, and 25 to 53, in that order.

The Illinois Democrat had better luck with two other amendments June 12. The first of these fixed the ratio of employees in personnel offices at 1 to every 115 workers and was adopted by voice vote. Another, reducing by 50 per cent the number of new automobiles the two agencies may purchase next year, likewise was adopted by voice vote.

Sen. William E. Jenner (R Ind.) won adoption of an amendment permitting states to open welfare relief rolls to public inspection without requiring the forfeit of federal matching funds as a penalty. Jenner's home state had opened its rolls to the public and had been threatened with the loss of federal assistance in its relief program, since federal funds are granted under a stipulation that recipients of assistance must not be disclosed to the public. (Indiana subsequently was cut off from federal relief aid as of July 31. Then legislation was introduced and approved to amend the federal law to permit open rolls. (See page 192).

After trimming the measure to a total appropriation of $2,527,994,250, the Senate passed it June 14 by voice vote.

CONFERENCE

As the Labor-FSA bill went from the Senate June 14 to conference with the House, it contained $2,527,994,250 to run the agencies in fiscal 1952. This was $113,212,411 less than the amount approved by the House and $344,581 under the sum recommended by the Senate Appropriations Committee.

Here is the distribution of the appropriation as it was passed by each Chamber:

	House	Senate
Labor Department	$ 223,506,500	$ 223,192,020
Federal Security Agency	1,792,550,861	1,729,799,865
National Labor Relations Board	8,000,000	8,233,959
National Mediation Board	1,150,000	1,138,247
Railroad Retirement Board	613,000,000	562,534,409
Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service	2,999,000	3,095,750

Those appointed to the committee to reconcile the House and Senate versions were:

Reps. John E. Fogarty (D R.I.), E. H. Hedrick (D W.Va.), Christopher McGrath (D N.Y.), Winfield K. Denton (D Ind.), Clarence Cannon (D Mo.), George B. Schwabe R Okla.), and Fred E. Busbey (R Ill.).

Sens. Dennis Chavez (D N.Mex.), Richard B. Russell (D Ga.), Lister Hill (D Ala.), Harley M. Kilgore (D W.Va.) William F. Knowland (R Calif.), Edward J. Thye (R Minn.) and Zales N. Ecton (R Mont.).

First Conference Report

This group reported a compromise version of the bill July 11. The Labor-FSA measure thus was the first regular money bill of the year to emerge from conference.

The total appropriation in the conference bill was $2,512,004,270 below the amount appropriated by either House or Senate. This resulted because the conferees chose between the House and Senate appropriations on each item according to which figure was lower.

As it was sent to the floors of the respective chambers, the measure lacked the controversial Jensen amendment. The conferees decided instead to accept the Ferguson amendment in principle, though they greatly minimized the effect of it. Appropriations for personal services in a number of agencies were reduced by a total of $1,009,024, (see provisions section for breakdown) instead of the approximate $4.5 million originally sought by the Michigan Senator. The conferees thus spelled out just how much the specified agencies had to return to the Treasury in savings from their personal service appropriation.

Other decisions of the conferees were:

1. Sen. Jenner's amendment, providing no state could be denied welfare funds for opening its relief rolls to public inspection, was thrown out. (It later was approved in different form, as part of the tax increase bill).
2. Rep. Smith's anti - government propaganda amendment, banning the agencies from engaging in publicity or propaganda not previously authorized by Congress, was accepted.
3. The compensation was set at $50 per diem for temporary arbitrators, conciliators and mediators employed by the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, instead of the previous $75 a day rate.
4. Sen. Chavez's amendment requiring the District of Columbia. to pay Freedman's Hospital in advance for the care of D.C. patients.
5. Sen. Ferguson's amendment prohibiting the employment of civilian chauffeurs for government - owned motor vehicles, was thrown out.
6. Sen. Douglas' amendment reducing by 50 per cent the number of automobiles authorized for purchase as replacements only was accepted.
7. Also accepted was the Douglas amendment cutting down the employees engaged in personnel work, with the modification that the new ratio of personnel employees to persons engaged in other work should be 1 to 105, instead of 1 to 115, as Douglas originally wanted.

House Rejects Report

This conference report went to the House July 12. There it was promptly rejected on a roll - call vote, 222 to 169. The House objected to the omission of the Jensen amendment from the conference report. The motion to recommit, offered by Jensen himself, carried special instructions to the conferees to insist upon terms of his amendment.

Second Conference Version

The House named a new conference committee whose members were Reps. John E. Fogarty (D R.I.), John J. Rooney, (D N.Y.), Christopher McGrath (D N.Y.), Winfield K. Denton (D Ind.), Clarence Cannon (D Mo.) and George B. Schwabe (R Okla.).

The Senate conferees were the same as before.

It was a month before an acceptable compromise was worked out by the joint group. On Aug. 16, they made their report. The result was an amalgamation of the Jensen - Ferguson amendments that required the agencies to fill no more than 25 per cent of their vacancies until a 10 per cent reduction in personnel had been achieved. The agencies also were given the choice of making a 10 per cent reduction at the outset. Exempted from the cutbacks were personnel of the U.S. Public Health Service, educational institutions, personnel engaged in law enforcement, and personnel at St. Elizabeth's and Freedmen's Hospitals.

The additional overall reduction of $1,009,024 in appropriations for personal services was retained in the bill, as originally written for the first conference report. All other provisions of the first conference report also were left intact.

The House and Senate quickly accepted the report, both on voice votes. House action came on Aug. 17. The Senate acted Aug. 20. This sent the measure to the White House, where President Truman signed it Aug. 31, 1951, without comment. The bill became Public Law 134.

Summary — The first session of the 82nd Congress produced a record "peacetime" defense funds bill. As it became law Oct. 18, 1951, the Department of Defense Appropriation Bill totaled $56,939,568,030. Money provided in the measure financed the Army, Navy, Air Force, the Secretary of Defense, the National Security Resources Board and the National Security Council. Most of the funds were earmarked for use in the 1952 fiscal year but the spending would extend into fiscal 1953.

Budget requests for the military totaled $57,605,014,390 but the House Appropriations Committee Aug. 6 trimmed the measure somewhat and recommended $56,062,405,890. The House accepted the money recommendations of its Committee and passed the measure Aug. 9 on a 348-2 roll - call vote. (For voting see page 168.) However it first refused to limit the number of American ground troops for Europe.

The Senate Appropriations Committee, in an unusual move, jumped the figure above budget requests and Sept. 7 recommended a total of $61,131,544,720. Most of the increase was in a $5 billion national emergency fund for air power expansion.

The Senate, after four days of debate, passed the bill on a roll - call vote of 79-0 Sept. 13. (See page 179.) As it was sent to conference, the measure totaled $59,508,009,630.

Conferees agreed Oct. 4 on a compromise figure of $56,939,568,030. The House accepted the conference report by voice vote Oct. 5; Senate approval followed Oct. 12 by voice vote. The bill was signed by President Truman Oct. 18.

Provisions — The bill provided a total of $56,939,568,030 for the Department of Defense and was distributed as follows:

Department of the Air Force	$20,642,785,000
Department of the Army	19,888,032,030
Department of the Navy	15,877,891,000
Secretary of Defense	529,100,000
National Security Resources Board	1,600,000
National Security Council	160,000
	$56,939,568,030

(For general provisions of the bill, see CONFERENCE section, below.)

The President's Requests

President Truman submitted to Congress April 30 a detailed version of his January military budget, calling for the appropriation of $60,679,414,690 in funds for the Department of Defense in fiscal 1952.

The President's January budget message to the legislators had included only a lump - sum defense estimate amounting to $62.5 billion. His April 30 amplification broke down the proposed appropriation in this manner:

$1,424,839,700 to liquidate prior authorizations

$4,500,000,000 for a large military public works program (to be recommended soon for authorization, the President said.)

Subsequently, Congress authorized a military construction program and appropriated $4,146,407,108 to finance it in the Second Supplemental appropriation Bill of 1952. (See page 162.)

The actual budget requests submitted by the Department of Defense, with which the House and Senate worked, totaled $57,605,014,390.

HOUSE

Committee

The Appropriations Committee reported the bill Aug. 6, recommending a total of $56,062,405,890. This amount did not include costs of the Korean war or construction or acquisition of bases and installations through the U.S. and the world.

The Committee said, however, the funds would support a 3.5 million-man force and provide for rapid expansion of the armed forces and defense industry.

More than half the amount approved — about 65 per cent — was earmarked for planes, ships, tanks and other military "hardware." Largest reductions were made in civilian personnel, production and procurement funds.

Of the total granted for the Department, the Army would receive $20,125,574,665, a cut of $685,321,500; the Navy, $15,552,143,225, a cut of $194,272,000; the Air Force $19,854,-128,000, a cut of $647,015,000; the office of the Secretary of Defense $528,-800,000, a cut of $16,000,000; and the Independent Agencies (the National Security Council and National Security Resources Board) would receive $1,760,000, no cut at all.

Floor Action

After refusing to limit the number of American troops for Europe, the House Aug. 9 passed HR 5054 on a 348-2 roll-call vote.

There were Republican complaints of "waste and extravagance" in the Defense Department, but no changes were made on the floor in the money recommendations of the Appropriations Committee. As it was sent to the Senate, the bill carried a total of $56,-062,405,890 — a reduction of $1,542,-608,500 below budget requests.

Rejected on an 84-131 standing vote was the troops - for - Europe limitation sponsored by Frederic R. Coudert, Jr., (R N.Y.). The amendment would have barred funds for financing more than six divisions of American ground troops to be sent to Western Europe. Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) accused Coudert of substituting his judgment for that of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Pat Sutton (D Tenn.) said the amendment would not really mean anything since the Army, under Tables of Organization, could put from 20,000 to 500,000 men in a division.

The House accepted on a standing vote, 81-71, an amendment by James E. Van Zandt (R Pa.) to cut off retirement pay of military men who leave the service for reasons other than age or disability. Van Zandt estimated it would save $1 million annually.

Release of Reservists

Also accepted, on a standing vote of 122 to 102, was an amendment requiring the release from active duty of volunteer or inactive reservists who have served for 12 months since June 26, 1950, and who served 12 months or more in World War II. The amendment, sponsored by Van Zandt, called for their release by Nov. 30, 1951.

George H. Mahon (D Tex.) opened debate on the huge money bill Aug. 8 with the warning that there was "only a minimum hope" that differences with Russia can be solved short of war. "Trends from cold to hot war, from little wars to big wars, do not have a tendency to reverse themselves short of an all-out explosion," he stated. Mahon, chairman of the Appropriations subcommittee which handled the bill, urged Congress to provide enough funds to "exert the maximum force for peace."

Another member of the Appropriations Committee, Richard B. Wigglesworth (R Mass.) cited the bill as only a "downpayment on tragic errors in judgment made at the conference tables of Teheran, Yalta and Potsdam." He added that "able, courageous and honest leadership in America in recent years would have made this enormous bill unnecessary."

House passage of its $56,062,405,500 version came on a 348-2 roll-call vote Aug. 9. Voting against passage were Fred Marshall (D Minn.) and Howard H. Buffett (R Neb.). John Phillips (R Calif.) voted "present."

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

James E. Van Zandt (R Pa.)—Bar retirement pay funds to officers or enlisted personnel who retire from service before reaching mandatory retirement age or before they are disabled. Standing vote, 81-71.

Van Zandt — Require by Nov. 30, 1951, release from active duty of volunteer or inactive reservists who have served 12 months since June 26, 1950, and who served 12 months or more during World War II by barring funds for payments to such members. Standing, 122-102.

Thomas B. Curtis (R Mo.) — Reduce from $25 million to $10 million amount received from sale of scrap or salvage materials available for transportation, demilitarization, and other preparation for sale or salvage of military supplies, equipment and material. Voice.

George H. Mahon (D Tex.) — Correct report of Appropriations Committee to provide $100 million for construction of aircraft and related procurement. Voice

Errett P. Scrivner (R Kan.) — Rephrase section requiring commissary sales prices to include all direct costs of maintenance, operation, management, etc. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Frederic R. Coudert, Jr. (R N.Y.) —Limit funds for financing American ground troops in Western Europe to no more than six divisions. Standing vote 84-131.

Gerald R. Ford, Jr., (R Mich.) — Bar funds for payments under any contract for construction, equipment, or supplies exceeding $10,000 unless contractor furnishes a performance bond to the U.S. Withdrawn by Ford after a point of order was raised by Mahon.

SENATE

Committee

More money for the military was proposed by the Senate Appropriations Committee which Sept. 7 recommended a total for the bill of $61,-131,544,720. The amount was $5,069,-138,830 above House figures. The largest single addition was $5 billion added to the national emergency fund for air power expansion. Plans would be subject to approval of the President and the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

The Senate group recommended $20,038,220,495 for the Army $15,553,-386,225 for the Navy and $20,001,585,-000 for the Air Force.

The group also proposed discarding the 70 - combat group Air Force limit and fixing a floor of "not less than 95 wings." Deleted from the bill was the House provision barring retired pay of military men who leave the service for reasons other than age or disability. Another House provision requiring the release from active duty of volunteer and inactive reservists who served 12 months in World War II and 12 months since June 26, 1950 also was marked by the Committee for deletion. Assistant Secretary of Defense Anna M. Rosenberg warned the Committee during hearings Aug. 27 that the House rider could disrupt the whole program of releasing reservists.

A new provision was added designed to penalize any government contractor who "offers any gratuity, gift or entertainment to any officer or employee of the government."

Floor Action

The Senate passed the bill Sept. 13 on a roll-call vote, 79-0, appropriating $59,508,009,630 for the military. (For votes, see page 179.)

Senate leaders had predicted fast action but the Senate spent four days in debate. Opening the debate Sept. 10 Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.) emphasized that the total amount appropriated would not be spent during the current fiscal year and therefore would not have the inflationary effect that might be expected to result from such an appropriation.

O'Mahoney also referred to "fantastic" new weapons. An unspecified amount for the development of such weapons was provided in the bill but the Senator did not spell out the nature of the weapons.

Before final passage of the bill, an economy fight was led by Paul H. Douglas, (D Ill.). But the major cut came when the Senate accepted by voice vote Sept. 13 an amendment by H. Alexander Smith (R N.J.) reducing the total appropriations by 2.5 per cent.

A block of four amendments sponsored by Douglas was rejected Sept. 12 and 13. The amendments would have effected total reductions of $183,294,000.

O'Mahoney said the Douglas proposals would cut down the guns and ammunition for the U.S. troops fighting in Korea. Douglas denied this and emphasized that the amendments were aimed at 10 per cent reductions in funds providing tools and machinery for private industry in expediting defense production.

"Flight Pay" Funds

Douglas then won acceptance, 49-31, of an amendment to bar funds for payment of flight pay for personnel whose assigned duties did not involve either actual combat missions or more than four flight hours a month.

Other Douglas amendments accepted by the Senate Sept. 13 were to reduce Research and Development funds scattered throughout the bill by $70 million and limit funds for the travel allowance of the Defense Department to amount of expenses actually incurred.

One of the items which produced heated argument and prolonged debate concerned a House amendment which the Senate Committee deleted from the bill. The section stricken was an amendment by Rep. Van Zandt barring funds to pay volunteer or inactive reservists who served 12 months in World War II and who have served 12 months since June 26, 1950. O'Mahoney said some sort of compromise for releasing reservists who served 12 months in World War II would be worked out in conference.

The Senate Sept. 12 voted to reduce by 30,000 the number of civilian employees for the Defense Department. The Department had requested 540,000 and the Senate Committee trimmed this to 530,000. By accepting an amendment by Everett M. Dirksen (R Ill.), the Senate set the figure at 500,000.

The Senate also voted that the 500,000 limit would include part - time employees and consultants as well as permanent employees. Sponsor of this amendment was Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.).

Payroll Slash

In a more pointed attack on civilian staffs, Douglas won acceptance of an amendment to reduce by five per cent the civilian payrolls of the Department of the Army in Washington, D. C.

The creation of a watchdog committee to keep check on military expenditures was proposed by Edward J. Thye (R Minn.). Objections were raised to the proposal as several Senators said that such a check would duplicate the work of the Senate Armed Services Preparedness Subcommittee, headed by Lyndon B. Johnson (D Tex.). Thye replied he did not mean to infringe on the Johnson Subcommittee but that it watched performance results while his proposed group would watch dollar results. The amendment was ruled out on a point of order made by Wayne Morse (R Ore.).

Accepting an amendment by Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.), the Senate limited the funds in the bill to two years. Holland stated it was implied in the language of the bill that some of the funds were for a period of longer than two years. The Constitution, the Senator said, prohibits Congress from making military appropriations for more than a two-year period.

Two recommittal motions were rejected by the Senate. The first, offered by Ralph E. Flanders (R Vt.), would have sent the bill back to the Appropriations Committee with instructions to reduce the total to $55 billion. This was defeated, 29-49.

The second, made by William Langer (R N.D.), would have instructed the Committee to reduce the total to $56 billion. This was rejected, 29-51.

In appropriating the huge amount the Senate granted more money than the military requested. Budget requests totaled $57,707,314,390. As the measure was passed by the Senate Sept. 13, 79-0, it carried $59,508,009,630.

CONFERENCE

Conferees agreed Oct. 4 on a compromise figure of $56,939,568,030. The $5 billion national emergency fund for air power expansion was reduced to $1 billion. The conference committee said in its report that the expansion program had not yet fully crystallized and budget estimates were insufficient. Of the $1 billion granted, two-thirds was earmarked for the Air Force, one-third for the Navy air arm. (For breakdown of funds by services, see Provisions section, above.)

The provision relating to the release of reservists was modified to provide for the discharge of enlisted members who served 12 months in World War II and 16 months since June 26, 1950. The measure also contained provisions limiting the number of full-time graded civilian employees to 500,000 and prohibited gratuities to government officers or employees by contractors.

A Senate provision reducing the total appropriation by 2.5 per cent was deleted by the conferees.

Conference decisions barred funds for payment of flight pay to personnel whose actual assigned duties did not involve operational or training flights. Payment also was barred to educational institutions for training of employees below the grade GS-5. Retirement pay was barred to commissioned members of the service who voluntarily retired unless retirement was due to physical disability incurred in duty, to achieving retirement age or sanctioned by the Secretary of Defense in the interests of the service or to avoid individual hardship cases.

The House approved the conference report by voice vote Oct. 5, the Senate by voice vote Oct. 12. The President signed the bill into law Oct. 18. It became Public Law 179.

Mutual Security

Summary—The Mutual Security Appropriation Bill provided $7,328,903,976 in new funds to operate the foreign military and economic aid program, plus $816,727,306 in re-appropriated funds.

There was little debate on the measure in either Chamber; Congress completed action on the bill in 10 days. The House Appropriations Committee Oct. 10, 1951, recommended $7,482,527,790 — almost the full amount requested. The House defeated repeated Republican attempts to cut funds from the measure and approved the amount recommended by its Committee. Also approved were funds previously appropriated but not yet spent.

The Senate Appropriations Committee reduced the total by $274,126,390 and on Oct. 16 recommended $7,208,401,400. It added $100 million for aid to Spain. The Senate passed the bill as it was recommended by its Committee on a roll-call vote, 57-13, Oct. 18. It also re-appropriated the unexpended balance.

Conferees agreed on a compromise figure of $7,328,903,976 and approved the Senate provision adding funds for Spain. President Truman had requested $7,527,527,790.

The conference report was approved in both the House and Senate Oct. 20 by voice vote. The President signed the bill into law Oct. 30.

Provisions — The Mutual Security Appropriation Bill provided a total of $7,328,903,976 for foreign aid plus $816,727,306 in re-appropriated funds.

The distribution of funds in the bill:

	Military	Economic
Europe	$4,818,852,457	$1,022,000,000
Near East, Africa	396,250,000	160,000,000
Asia, Pacific	535,250,000	237,155,866
American Republics	38,150,000	21,245,653
TOTAL	$5,788,502,457	$1,440,401,519

Aid to Spain, totaling $100 million, was for military, economic and technical assistance.

Background — The Mutual Security appropriation for fiscal 1952 financed the new Mutual Security Program, which rolled into one package U. S. economic and military aid abroad.

The Economic "Marshall Plan" aid first was undertaken in 1948, after Gen. George C. Marshall, then Secretary of State, outlined in 1947 a proposal for American help to Europe. This aid program was renewed in 1949 and again in 1950. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, 1949, p. 334, and Vol. VI, 1950, p. 204.)

Military aid first was granted in 1949 under the Mutual Defense Assistance Act. It was set up to implement the North Atlantic Treaty, under which Western Nations agreed to band together for mutual defense. In 1950, the military aid program was renewed for another year. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, 1949, p. 351, and Vol. VI, 1950, p. 220.)

In 1951 Congress merged the military and economic aid programs. (For Congressional authorization of Mutual Security Program, see page 204.)

HOUSE

Committee

Stating that "Russia's apparent intentions are the destruction of the free world", the House Appropriations Committee Oct. 10 recommended almost the whole amount the President had requested for foreign aid. Recommendations totaled $7,482,527,790 — only $45 million below Mr. Truman's request. The Committee recommended against a $45 million fund for the United Nations Korean Reconstruction Agency.

The Committee's rcommendations were:

	Military	Economic
Europe	$5,072,476,271	$1,022,000,000
Near East, Africa	396,250,000	160,000,000
Asia and Pacific	535,250,000	237,155,866
American Republics	38,150,000	21,245,653

The Committee also favored re-appropriating $816,727,306 in funds previously appropriated for foreign aid but not spent. Thus as the bill went before the House, it called for a total of $8,299,255,096 for aid to other nations.

Floor Action

After defeating Republican-backed attempts to cut some funds, the House passed the bill Oct. 11 on a 222-99 roll-call vote. As it was sent to the Senate, the measure's total was $8,299,255,096 — the amount recommended by the House Committee. This included $7,482,527,790 for the Mutual Security Program and $816,727,306 in foreign aid money previously appropriated but not yet spent.

Distribution of funds in the House-passed bill was the same as that of the Committee's.

In opening debate, J. Vaughan Gary (D Va.) floor manager for the bill, said it was "for the safety of America," adding that Russia is "attacking on a world front" and "we must be prepared to meet aggression wherever it raises its ugly head." He asked the House not to reduce the funds.

John Taber (R N.Y.) however, called for deep cuts, without specifying where they should be made.

The first reduction attempt came in an amendment by Rep. Thomas B. Curtis (R Mo.), to take out the carry-over money for Europe aid. It was rejected on a standing vote 61-81, with Democrats virtually solid in opposition.

Similar defeats were handed to fund cut proposals by Lawrence H. Smith (R Wis.), Richard B. Wigglesworth (R Mass.) and Edward H. Rees (R Kan.).

After another amendment by Curtis was rejected, Curtis warned the House it was voting "a blank check" and would wind up as a "rubber stamp Congress."

In the 222-99 roll-call vote on final passage, Democrats supported the program 152-18. Republicans were more evenly divided but opposed the bill, 69 to 81. The lone Independent member voted for the bill.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

John J. Rooney (D N.Y.) — Earmark $10 million of the European aid fund to promote transfer of surplus manpower. Voice vote.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Thomas B. Curtis (R Mo.) — Cut $566,253,233 from funds for military aid for Europe. This was all in carry-over funds (previously appropriated but not spent). Standing vote, 61-81.

Lawrence H. Smith (R Wis.) — Cut $300 million from the carry - over funds. Standing, 105-134.

Richard B. Wigglesworth (R Mass.) — Cut $20 million from funds for administration of European aid. Standing, 105-131.

Curtis — Cut $1,383,000 from European economic and technical aid carry-over funds. Standing, 103-172.

Edward H. Rees (R Kan.) — Cut $32,681,500 from funds for India and Pakistan. Standing, 87-111.

William J. Green Jr. (D Pa.) — Earmark $200 million for military aid to Spain. Ruled out on point of order.

SENATE

Committee

The Senate Appropriations Committee stripped $274,126,390 from foreign aid funds and Oct. 16 recommended a total of $7,208,401,400. The Committee's cut represented a five per cent across - the - board reduction in both military and ecomonic aid. The group also recommended re-appropriation of the unexpended balance of $816,727,306 and added $100 million for military, economic and technical aid to Spain.

An attempt to earmark part of the military aid funds for specific use of Spain was ruled out on a point of order in the House. At that time, Rep. John J. Rooney (D N.Y.) said Spain would benefit from the $450 million of unallocated funds. The Senate Committee thus gave Spain special status, as none of the other recipient countries were mentioned by name in the bill.

The Committee also added a provision barring any aid to countries of which dependent areas failed, in the opinion of the President, to comply with any treaty to which the dependent area was a party with the United States. This was designed to prevent discrimination against U. S. business interests in French Morocco.

The Committee's distribution of funds was:

	Military	Economic
Europe	$4,818,852,457	$970,900,000
Near East, Africa	376,437,500	152,000,000
Asia, Pacific	508,487,500	225,298,073
American Republics	36,242,500	20,183,370
Military, Economic and Technical Aid to Spain		100,000,000

Floor Action

The Senate Oct. 18 passed the bill on a 57-13 roll-call vote after approving all cuts recommended by its Committee. No amendments were proposed on the floor and as it went to conference, the measure carried the amount recommended by the Committee — $7,208,401,400 plus $816,727,306 in previously appropriated funds.

However, in debate Democrats generally opposed and Republicans supported the Committee proposals for reduction. Brien McMahon (D Conn.) opened the discussion, saying the Appropiations Committee was "arrogant and foolhardy" in recommending cuts.

Majority Leader Ernest W. McFarland (D Ariz.), Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.), Herbert H. Lehman (D N.Y.) and Theodore Francis Green (D R.I.) joined in criticizing the cuts. Holland said the reduction would break faith with other anti-Communist nations.

Defending the money reduction, William F. Knowland (R Calif.) called it "very modest" and said Americans have done far more than their share in the mutual defense program.

Henry C. Dworshak (R Idaho) said "We are not turning our back on General Eisenhower nor our allies. We are trying to avoid a deficit. . ."

In the roll call on passage, Democrats favored the bill 40-1 and Republicans by 17-12. The only Democrat opposed was Olin D. Johnston (S.C.)

CONFERENCE

Conferees agreed on Oct. 19 on a compromise figure of $7,328,903,976 for foreign aid. It included $5,788,502,457 for military aid, $1,440,401,519 for economic aid and an additional $100,000,000 for aid to Spain.

The compromise was $120,502,576 above the amount voted by the Senate and $153,623,814 below the House figure. Actually the conferees accepted the Senate appropriation for military aid to Europe, adopted all other House-approved figures and added the amount for Spain.

Eliminated by conferees was a Senate provision forbidding any aid to recipient countries which violate U. S. treaty rights.

Distribution of the funds:

	Military	Economic
Europe	$4,818,852,457	$1,022,000,000
Near East, Africa	396,250,000	160,000,000
Asia, Pacific	535,250,000	237,155,866
American Republics	38,150,000	21,245,653
Military, Economic and Technical Aid to Spain		100,000,000

The House and Senate both approved the conference report Oct. 20 by voice votes. The measure was signed by President Truman Oct. 30 and became Public Law 249.

Treasury--Post Office

Summary—The Treasury and Post Office Departments Appropriation Bill for fiscal 1952 (HR 3282) Aug. 9, 1951, was sent by Congress to the White House, where President Truman signed it Aug. 11. It became Public Law 111, the first regular departmental appropriation of the 82nd Congress to go into the statute books. Even so, it did not become law until about six weeks after fiscal 1952 had begun. (The District of Columbia Appropriation Bill—see Almanac, p. 137 — was the first annual money measure of the year to become law, but dealt principally with revenue of the District only).

The Treasury-Post Office bill appropriated $2,928,398,000 for the two Departments, as against the President's request for $2,958,425,000. The Treasury Department was given $587,598,000 for operations in fiscal 1952, and the Post Office Department $2,340,800,000. Most of the latter funds, however, were reimbursible from postal revenue which, it was estimated, would total about $1,839,500,000 in fiscal 1952, leaving an estimated postal deficit of $521,374,000 to be financed from general federal revenue. The Post Office Department has operated under a deficit of about this amount for several years.

In addition to its regular annual appropriations, the Treasury Department also was given administration as usual of a large amount of permanent indefinite appropriations and expenditures from certain trust funds which are not a charge against general revenue. Funds of this kind are not carried in the Treasury appropriation bill. The largest permanent appropriation in fiscal 1952, as in other years, was "Interest on the Public Debt," estimated at $5,800,000,000 for 1952. From the trust funds administered by the Treasury — the largest of which are the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance and the Unemployment Trust Funds — expenditures totaling $5,619,937,490 were authorized. These are not charged against general revenue.

Treasury and Post Office were the only two Departments of the government which totally escaped both the year's personnel reduction riders, that of Rep. Ben F. Jensen (R Iowa) and that of Sen. Homer Ferguson (R Mich.). Jensen did not seek to apply his rider, designed to limit the filling of job vacancies to 25 per cent. In the Senate, Ferguson did attach his amendment, reducing by 10 per cent the budget estimates for personal services of several agencies in the Treasury Department. But the House-Senate conference which ironed out differences in the two versions of the bill eliminated the Ferguson cuts. Afterwards, both the House—on Aug. 8—and the Senate—on Aug. 9—accepted the conference report on the bill and sent it to the White House.

It was signed by President Truman Aug. 11 without comment.

HOUSE

Committee Report

The House Appropriations Committee reported the Treasury-Post Office Departments Appropriations Bill for 1952 (which included also authorization for the Export-Import Bank of Washington to spend corporate funds for administrative purposes) to the House on March 16. It was the first action of the year on a regular appropriation bill. The Committee recommended a total cash appropriation for the two Departments amounting to $2,835,308,700. This was $88,021,800 more than the appropriation for the agencies in fiscal 1951, but it was $36,525,000 less than the 1952 budget estimates.

Omitted was the usual outlay for operations of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. In its report, the Committee said it deferred action on the RFC budget program until Congress acted upon then-pending reorganization of the lending corporation. (See page 339.) The only government corporation provided for in the bill was the Export-Import Bank of Washington, which was authorized to spend $950,000 of its funds for estimated administrative costs in 1952.

For the Treasury Department's regular operations, a total of $586,100,000 was recommended, an amount that was $11,151,000 below the budget estimates. The principal decreases recommended by the Committee were $2.9 million in funds for the Bureau of the Public Debt; $800,000 in the Bureau of Customs; $3.5 million in the Bureau of Internal Revenue; $800,000 in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing; and $1 million for construction and improvements by the U.S. Coast Guard.

In addition to its regular appropriations, the Treasury was provided with a number of permanent indefinite appropriations and the authority to make expenditures from certain trust funds not chargeable against general revenue.

Public Debt Interest

The largest permanent appropriation was — as usual — for interest on the public debt, which was estimated at $5.8 billion for fiscal 1952, an increase of about $175 million over 1951. The total of the permanent appropriation was estimated at $5,823,962,482, including not only interest on the public debt but also such items as $16 million for customs refunds and drawbacks, $2 million for refund of moneys erroneously received and covered into the Treasury, and $4.9 million for interest on uninvested trust funds.

From the trust funds administered by the Treasury Department — the largest of which are the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund and the Unemployment Trust Fund — the Treasury was authorized to make expenditures totaling $5,619,937,490 in fiscal 1952. These expenditures are never charged against general revenue since those persons for whom expenditures are made are also those from whom the funds are collected.

For the Post Office Department, a total appropriation of $2,335,500,000 was recommended. Of this, an estimated $1,839,500,000 was to be derived from postal revenues, leaving the postal deficit for 1952 at about $521 million — or about the same amount it was in fiscal 1951. The recommended appropriation was $25,374,000 below estimates, most which was taken by the Committee from the estimate for postal operations. Despite the recommended cut, the Committee said in its report that the appropriation would be 3.7 per cent more than the $1,793,000,000 available for postal operations in fiscal 1951. The Committee said that since the Department had estimated the volume of mail and special services in 1952 would also increase by 3.7 per cent, the recommended additional appropriation should be sufficient to meet costs.

Legislative Provisions

Legislative provisions recommended by the Committee included a limitation of 17,500 on the number of motor vehicles that the Department might own and operate. The Committee stated that the purpose of the limitation was not to curtail postal service in any way, but was intended to force the Department to get rid of obsolete and worn-out equipment as rapidly as possible.

The only other legislative provision prohibited the Post Office from transporting mail by helicopters, if it were more costly to do so than to use other available and equally satisfactory routes or means.

The later provision drew a dissent in the Committee report from Rep. Gordon Canfield (R N.J.). He said the amendment was legislative in nature and was therefore "improper procedure" on an appropriation bill. It "poses a possible threat to our total national interest in time of conflict to employ the use of a legislative rider to an appropriation bill in order to alter the purpose and intent of the Civil Aeronautics Act under the name of economies which are disputable."

Floor Action

The House took up the Treasury-Post Office funds bill on March 21 and passed it, by voice vote, the same day.

Reductions effected through floor amendments reduced the total appropriation for the two Departments by another $2,773,000, in addition to the $36,525,000 from budget estimates recommended by the House Appropriations Committee. (The Committee-recommended cuts were approved in full.) All floor reductions were taken from Treasury funds, and were concentrated on agencies which already had been cut by the Committee, such as the Bureau of the Public Debt, and the Bureau of Customs.

Thus, as the measure was sent to the Senate, it carried $2,918,827,000.

Though the economies written into the bill were not notably large, a bloc of Republicans and Southern Democrats scored a temporary victory in a drive to more sharply trim the bill. While the House was acting tentatively on floor amendments in Committee of the whole, the coalition made tentative cuts in the bill totaling $24,773,000. This included a single, $22 million cut in postal operation funds. But Administration forces managed a last-minute comeback that defeated the postal economy amendment on a separate vote, and restored the full amount of the cut on a narrow, roll-call ballot, 136 to 138.

The only other major floor action resulted in defeat for the Committee-proposed ban on the use of helicopters for mail delivery service. Robert Crosser (D Ohio), chairman of the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, offered an amendment in Committee of the Whole to delete the so-called helicopter provision and it passed on a standing vote, 71 to 34. A separate vote was demanded later on the Crosser amendment and it was then ratified, also by division, 147 to 56.

As the bill went to the Senate, it carried a total of $2,918,827,000—$583,327,000 for the Treasury and $2,335,500,000 for the Post Office.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

James C. Davis (D Ga.) — Cut $248,000 from salary funds of Office of Secretary of Treasury. Standing vote, 111 to 48.

John Taber (R N.Y.) — Reduce by $200,000 funds for Treasury's Bureau of Accounts. Standing, 107 to 54.

Glenn R. Davis (R Wis.) — Cut $450,000 from Division of Disbursement, Treasury. Standing, 112 to 67.

Gerald R. Ford Jr., (R Mich.)—Cut $1 million from Bureau of Public Debt. Standing, 92 to 38.

William M. Colmer (D Miss.)—Cut $200,000 from Bureau of Mint. Standing 86 to 39.

Crosser (D Ohio) — Delete provision denying Postmaster General authority to use funds for transportation of mail over more costly routes. Standing, 71 to 34. (Later ratified by separate standing vote, 147 to 56).

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Richard B. Wigglesworth (R Mass.) — Cut $22 million from Post Office operational funds. Agreed to on standing vote, 79-57, but later rejected on roll-call vote, 136-138.

Wigglesworth — Cut $3 million from Bureau of Internal Revenue funds. Voice.

H. Carl Andersen (R Minn.) — Reduce P. O. funds for transportation of mails by $30,800,000. Standing, 63 to 67.

George H. Fallon (D Md.) — Add $75,000 to funds for Bureau of Narcotics. Voice.

SENATE

Committee

The Senate Appropriations Committee reported the Treasury-Post Office measure on July 19. More generous than the House, it recommended the addition of a total of $18,867,647 to the appropriation, raising the sum to $2,937,694,647. However, this left the funds still $20,730,353 short of budget requests.

Of the additional money, $9,967,647 was for the Treasury and $8,900,000 for the Post Office. Recommended appropriations totaled $593,294,647 and $2,344,400,000 for the two Departments.

Most of Treasury's additional funds were for personal services required in activities where the workload had been expanded because of defense activities, the 1950 amendments to the Social Security Act, or the collecting of revenue. For example, restoration of $3 million of the House cut in funds for the Bureau of Internal Revenue was recommended, as was $2,993,704 for the Bureau of the Public Debt.; $1,124,700 for the Bureau of Customs; $725,000 for the Bureau of Accounts, and $665,800 for the Bureau of the Mint.

The Senate Committee's recommendations for several Treasury activities, though they were greater than the House appropriations, nevertheless reflected five per cent reductions in budget estimates for personal services. Such reductions were meted out to the Office of the Secretary, Bureau of the Public Debt, Office of the Treasurer, and Bureau of the Mint.

The $8.9 million in additional funds for the Post Office Department were recommended principally for postal operations and transportation of the mails. With two exceptions, major activities of the Post Office Department escaped application of a personal services reduction. The exceptions were the Postal Inspection Service and the Bureau of Accounts, the personnel of both of which were to be reduced 10 per cent under budget estimates (instead of the five per cent applied to Treasury activities.)

Under general provisions, the Committee added a section reducing public information staffs of the two Departments by 25 per cent. Also added was an amendment cutting out three of the seven civilian chauffeurs serving Treasury officials.

Floor Action

Consideration of the Treasury-Post Office measure was begun by the Senate July 20. After a week of debate, interrupted frequently for the chamber to act on other matters, the bill was passed July 27 by voice vote.

Cut from the bill by floor amendments was a total of $16,176,303, all from the Post Office appropriation. Of this, $16 million was trimmed from transportation of the mails and the remaining $176,303 was cut from general administration funds. In addition, annual leave for postal employees was increased.

During the first day of debate on the bill, the Senate adopted the Committee's recommendations, which had the effect of increasing funds for the Departments over the House appropriations. However, it rejected by a roll-call vote of 28 to 30, an amendment by Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) to reduce funds for postal operations by $36.1 million. Douglas criticized the Post Office Department for inefficiency and reluctance to adopt labor saving devices. He contended the reduction he proposed was justified in view of the then pending increase in postal rates (see page 318) which, he argued, would decrease the volume of mail flowing through the Department's hands.

Reduction Proposals

On July 27, the day the bill finally passed, several reduction amendments were offered — principally by Douglas and Homer Ferguson (R Mich.) — and most of them were adopted.

One was the Douglas amendment cutting $16 million from funds for transporation of the mails. This was passed on a roll-call vote of 35 to 33. Another Douglas amendment, increasing annual leave for postal employees from 15 to 20 days (placing it on a par with leave then proposed for employees of other federal agencies, (see page 118), was adopted by voice vote, after it was modified, as proposed by Frank Carlson (R Kan.), to extend the increased leave privileges to temporary as well as permanent postal employees. The Douglas proposal was first ruled out of order on the ground that it was not germane. But Douglas then entered a motion to suspend chamber rules which motion was adopted on a 63-0 roll-call vote. His leave amendment then was passed by voice vote.

Also accepted by the Senate were two amendments by Ferguson. The first, passed on a 43-23 roll call, increased to 10 per cent the Committee-proposed cut in budget estimates for personal services in all agencies of the Treasury Department except the Bureaus of Customs, Internal Revenue and Narcotics, and the U. S. Coast Guard and Secret Service. Then the Senate adopted the other Ferguson amendment by voice vote. It eliminated all funds for Treasury and Post Office chauffeurs, except for the Secretaries of the two Departments.

As passed on voice vote and sent to conference from the Senate, the bill carried a total of $2,921,518,344 to run the two Departments in fiscal 1952. Of this amount, $2,328,223,697 was for the Post Office Department and $593,294,647 was for the Treasury Department.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) — Reduce funds for transporation of mails by Office Department by $36,100,000. Roll-call vote, 28-30.

Styles Bridges (R N.H.) — Reduce funds for general administration of the Post Office by $176,303 and limit funds for personal services to $17,-105,765. Roll call, 38-29.

Homer Ferguson (R Mich.) — Reduce appropriations for Treasury personal services by 10 per cent below budget estimates but exempt Customs, Internal Revenue and Narcotics Bureaus and Secret Service and Coast Guard. Roll call, 43-23.

Ferguson — Bar funds for payment to civilian employees as chauffeurs unless such appropriation is specifically authorized but exempt the Secretary of the Treasury and Postmaster General. Voice.

Douglas — Increase annual leave of Post Office Department workers from 15 to 20 days (as modified by Sen. Frank Carlson (R Kan.) amendment which extended leave changes to temporary employees.) Douglas amendment first was ruled out on point of order but then passed by voice vote after Senate agreed on roll call, 63-0, to Douglas motion to suspend rules.

MOTION ACCEPTED

Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) — Motion to suspend rules and consider postal employees annual leave amendment (see above). Roll-call vote, 63-0.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) — Reduce funds for Postal operations of Post Office Department by $36,100,000. Roll-call vote, 28-30.

Homer Ferguson (R Mich.) — Reduce funds for general administration for Post Office by $1,076,606 and limit amount for personal services to $16,-205,462. Roll call, 29-33.

MOTION REJECTED

Carl Hayden (D Ariz.) — Motion to reconsider vote by which committee amendment providing $1,852,000,-000 for postal operations was approved. Voice vote.

CONFERENCE

The House-Senate conference appointed to iron out differences in the bill had as its members the following:

From the House: J. Vaughan Gary (D Va.), Otto E. Passman (D La.), Alfred D. Sieminski (D N.J.), Clarence Cannon (D Mo.), Benjamin F. James (R Pa.) and Earl Wilson (R Ind.).

This group produced its compromise version of the bill on Aug. 2, 1951.

Principal Features

The principal features of the conference report were these:

Total appropriation agreed upon was $2,928,398,000, of which the Treasury's share was $587,598,000 and the Post Office's $2,340,800,000. The total was more than either the House or the Senate had approved. This came about because on most all items the conferees arrived at a figure that approximately split the difference between the amount approved by the House which was usually lower, and the amount approved by the Senate, which was generally the higher of the two; and because the conferees restored $15 million of the $16 million cut by the Senate from the funds for transporatation of the mails.

The Senate's 10 per cent cut in funds for personal services for certain Treasury and Post Office agencies was removed.

The Senate increase in annual leave for postal employees was removed from the bill, inasmuch as legislation equalizing leave privileges for postal and other federal employees was then before the Senate.

The Senate prohibition against the employment of civilian chauffeurs by the two Departments, except for the Secretaries, was amended to prevent the hiring of only those employees whose "primary" duty would consist of acting as chauffeur.

The Senate 25 per cent cutback in information personnel was retained.

The House provision putting a ceiling of 17,500 on the number of vehicles the Post Office might own was accepted.

This conference report was accepted by both chambers. The House adopted it by voice vote on Aug. 8, and the Senate took like action Aug. 9.

President Truman signed the measure Aug. 11. It was the first regular money bill of the year — excluding the bill appropriating District of Columbia funds to be placed on the statute books by the White House.

HR 4329 — P.L. 106

Summary — The first regular appropriation bill to become law in the 82nd Congress was the measure financing operations of the District of Columbia in fiscal 1952. Passed by the House on June 7 and by the Senate on July 30, it was finally enacted by Congress in conference form on Aug. 1. President Truman signed it Aug. 3. One year — minus one day — before, on Aug. 4, 1950, the fiscal 1951 "omnibus" appropriation bill, which financed all arms of the government in a single package, had been passed by both House and Senate and had been sent to conference. With only the D.C. money bill for fiscal 1952 out of the way by that date in 1951, the Congress was further behind on appropriations than it ever was known to have been before.

Provisions — As it became law, the bill carried a budget appropriation of $138,216,150 to run the capital city of Washington in fiscal 1952, plus a contribution of $11.4 million to the city government from the federal treasury.

Background — While less than 10 per cent of the district's funds normally is derived from the federal revenue, the D. C. appropriation bill must go through Congress each year in the same manner prescribed for appropriations for the national departments and other agencies. The District, under present law, cannot spend its own money without Congressional approval. Customarily, the federal treasury compensates the city of Washington for water provided the national establishment and for such other factors as reduction in city taxes as the federal and foreign governments acquire additional holdings of non-taxable property. The present maximum authorized contribution is $12 million a year.

HOUSE

The House Appropriations Committee reported the D. C. appropriation bill (HR 4329) on June 5. It recommended a 1952 budget of $137,776,375 from the District's own general revenue fund, plus a flat $12 million contribution from the federal government. Budget requests had totaled $152,513,150, including the $12 million federal contribution. While it made no changes in the federal revenue item, the Committee had lopped off $2,179,360 from the amount of city money the District desired to spend. Most of the reductions were in funds for expansion of personnel and administrative facilities.

The House promptly took up the bill June 6, and passed the measure by voice vote June 7.

One amendment was adopted before final passage on June 7. It cut the federal contribution from $12 million to $10.8 million. The amendment, by Rep. H. Carl Andersen (R Minn.), was agreed to by a voice vote.

After that the bill was passed and sent to the Senate.

SENATE

The Senate Appropriations Committee reported the D.C. money measure July 25, after raising the House approved budget (from District revenue) by a net amount of $630,915, and restoring the $1.2 million cut by the House from the federal contribution. The Committee added funds to pay for fluoridation of Washington water and to increase payments to non-profit private hospitals for care of the indigent. The recommended appropriation, as it went to the floor, was $138,407,290.

The Senate took up the bill on the floor July 30. It was passed the same day by voice vote without amendment.

CONFERENCE

The conference committee readied its report on the bill within 24 hours. The report called for an appropriation of $138,216,150, plus a total federal contribution of $11.4 million. The conferees also accepted the Senate recommendations on Washington water fluoridation and for greater charity payments for indigents in private hospitals.

The compromise version was put before the House July 31, but final action was postponed a day, until Aug. 1, when it was agreed to without dissent by both the House and Senate. Votes in both instances were by voice.

Final Congressional action sent the bill to President Truman, who signed it on Aug. 3. It became Public Law 106.

Army Civil Functions

HR 4386—P.L. 203

Summary — The last regular money bill to become law in 1951 was the Department of the Army, Civil Functions, Appropriation Bill for fiscal 1952 (HR 4386), which provided a total of $597,262,713 for civil works (administered by the Corps of Engineers) in the areas of flood control and rivers and harbors improvements, and also for the Panama Canal Zone government and for cemeterial expenses of the Army Quartermaster Corps.

In addition, a trust fund appropriation (not a charge against general revenue) was provided for the U. S. Soldiers Home in Washington, D.C. The civil works appropriation, totaling $581,217,713, was by far the greatest part of the bill.

Budget estimates for all purposes covered by the bill totaled $662,437,843. Appropriations in fiscal 1951 had totaled $645,565,350.

The House originally passed the bill June 13, allowing $514,427,400. This represented a cut of about 20 per cent — one of the largest made by the House on any regular appropriation bill during the year — in budget estimates, which at that point totaled only $640,637,843. New projects were banned flatly.

After the measure reached the Senate, and while closed hearings were being held by the Senate Appropriations Committee, one of the most disastrous floods in modern history of the Mississippi River struck the Midwest. Damage was estimated in the billions. Congress was urged to take action to relieve the suffering and damage, and to prevent recurrences. President Truman sent supplemental estimates to the Senate Commitee, asking for an additional $21.8 million for specific flood control projects in the Midwest. And the Committee opened its hearings to witnesses from the Midwest and other areas who pleaded for these and other flood control funds.

As a result, the Senate Committee reported — and the Senate approved on Aug. 15 — a greatly increased appropriation totaling $638,578,213. The ban on new projects was lifted to permit initiation and continuation of several flood control works and a group of projects with hydro - electric output potential.

A House - Senate conference commitee produced the compromise total appropriation of $598,262,713 and agreed to modify the House's outright ban on new projects to permit funds for a limited number — 10 in all — including works in the flood-stricken areas and three multiple - purpose dams with facilities for hydro-electric energy output.

Provisions — Following is a breakdown of the appropriation:

HOUSE

Committee

The House Appropriations Committee reported the Army Civil Functions Appropriations Bill for fiscal 1952 (HR 4386) on June 8.

Recommended by the Committee was a total appropriation of $514,427,400. The budget estimates had been $640,637,843. The Committee's reduction, $126,210,433, or about 20 per cent of the budget, was one of the largest it recommended during the year in any regular appropriation measure.

Specifically, the Committee proposed $498,382,400 for the work of the Corps of Engineers, divided as follows: Rivers and harbors improvements, $162,860,500, and flood control projects, $335,509,900. For the Panama Canal, $11,595,000 was recommended, and $4,450,000 was provided for the cemeterial expenses of the Army Quartermaster Corps. For the U.S. Soldiers Home, the use of $3,366,000 in trust funds for maintenance and operation was authorized.

The proposed reductions principally were divided between rivers and harbors improvements, cut $57,618,343 below estimates, and flood control projects, reduced $60,355,100. The Panama Canal appropriation was $298,000 below budget estimates and the Quartermaster Corps was to get $550,000 less than it sought for its cemeterial expenses.

The big reduction in funds for Army civil functions — the total was $120,182,250 below the amount appropriated for the same purpose in fiscal 1951 — was predicated on three major factors, said the Committee in its report: It did not feel that any new project should be started at a time when the nation "is straining every effort to provide the necessary funds for its security and perhaps survival;" reductions were recommended for existing projects where new features, which had already been budgeted, might be eliminated without interfering with the "orderly completion of features presently under construction;" all funds requested for planning and surveying were eliminated, with a view, said the Committee, to forcing the Corps of Engineers to effect "greater economies and (to produce) a better integrated national program."

Approach Criticized

On the latter point, the Committee said it believed the Corps "might well consider" a revision of its approach to the development of the country's natural resources, based on better coordination with similar activities of other agencies of the government. Reference was made to President Truman's statement at the time he signed the Civil Functions Authorization Act of 1950 (HR 5472, P.L. 516, CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, 1950, p. 607), in which he said there were inadequacies of the Corps' present plans for development of American natural resources.

Specifically denied among the estimates for rivers and harbors improvements were: the Lake Worth Inlet, Florida, project; The Dalles Dam, Oregon; the Ice Harbor Lock and Dam, Washington; Old Hickory Lock and Dam, and Cheatham Lock and Dam, both in Tennessee. Denied also were these flood control projects: Gavins Point Reservoir, Nebraska, and the Dexter Re - regulating Dam, Oregon.

For the Panama Canal, an all-purpose appropriation, covering both costs of operating the canal and providing civil government in the U. S. Zone, was made to the Canal Zone government, in keeping with the reorganization of that government in the 81st Congress. Cuts were proposed in budget estimates for civil defense in the Zone, for rehabilitation of storage facilities and Gorgas Memorial Hospital in the Zone, and for the Zone government's low-cost housing operations.

Floor Action

The House took up the Civil Functions bill June 13, and passed it the same day by voice vote, after upholding the bill as it came from the Appropriations Committee.

Repeated efforts, numbering 16 in all, were made by Congressmen to add or restore funds for projects in their districts. All were rejected.

Written into the bill, however, was the amendment by Ben F. Jensen (R Iowa) designed to prohibit the filling of more than 25 per cent of the personnel vacancies occuring in fiscal 1952 in the agencies covered by the bill, with the exception of seasonal and casual workers, employees paid from trust funds and employees of the Canal Zone government. The Jensen amendment was first rejected in the Committee of the Whole—first by division vote, 80-92, and then again on a teller vote, 89-92. After action in Committee of the Whole was concluded, John Taber (R N.Y.) moved to recommit the bill with instructions to the Appropriations Committee to incorporate the Jensen amendment. This the House agreed to by roll-call vote, 170-165. (For voting, see page 170.)

With the Jensen amendment added, the House then passed the bill by voice vote and sent it to the Senate carrying a total of $514,427,400.

AMENDMENT ACCEPTED

Louis C. Rabaut (D Mich.) — Rename the Buggs Island Dam in North Carolina in honor of Rep. John H. Kerr (D N.C.). Voice vote.

Ben F. Jensen (R Iowa) — Prohibit filling of more than 25 per cent of the personnel vacancies occurring in the agencies under the bill in fiscal 1952, with certain exceptions. Rejected by division vote, 80-92, and by teller, 89-92, but incorporated into the bill after House voted by roll-call, 170-165, to recommit with instructions on a motion by John Taber (R N.Y.)

SENATE

The Senate Appropriations Committee was in the midst of executive hearings on the Army Civil Functions money measure during the period when the disastrous summer flood of 1951 struck the Midwest. The extent of the damage, reaching into the billions, aroused Executive and Congressional concern.

President Truman quickly sent new budget estimates totaling $21.8 million for repairing damage to flood protection devices and preventing recurrence of the same disaster. He also urged the group to restore House cuts in flood control funds. The President said the $21.8 million was for the following projects: Tuttle Creek and Toronto Dams in Kansas; Oolegah Dam, in Oklahoma, bank stabilization on the Arkansas River; and levee work on the Mississippi.

Hearings

The Committee opened its hearings to midwest delegations who came to Washington to appeal for funds to relieve the suffering in their area and to start the work of rehabilitation.

On July 27, Brig Gen. C. H. Corpenning, assistant chief of the Army Corps of Engineers, asked the Committee to approve $3.6 million for flood control work along the Mississippi River in southern Illinois. Sen. Everett M. Dirksen (R Ill.) and Rep. Henry O. Talle (R Iowa) asked for funds to continue the levee - building program begun several years ago. Mayor George E. Ring of Beardston, Ill., and Rep. Sid Simpson (R Ill.) appealed for support of a proposed new $3 million flood wall for Beardston.

The Senate group was asked to grant at least $5.1 million for the planning and construction of the Tennessee - Tombigbee Interwaterway project. The request came from Rep. John E. Rankin (D Miss.).

Georgia members of the House asked the Committee to restore a House cut of $900,000 for the construction of Buford Dam on the Chattahoochie River. Rep. James C. Davis (D Ga.), spokesman for the group, called it "absolutely essential."

Sen. Edward Martin (R Pa.) July 30 requested the restoration of a House cut of $1,657,000 for flood control and navigation in Pennsylvania. Sen. Homer Ferguson (R Mich.) sought $225,000 to remove dredged material from the Rouge River. Sen. Bourke B. Hickenlooper (R Iowa) asked for $418,000 for remedial work on the sewage system at Clinton, Iowa.

Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) asked approval of a $5.7 million nation-wide flood control survey. The House had denied funds for such a survey. Humphrey said it was "false economy."

Gov. Edward F. Arn of Kansas appealed to the group to help his flood - stricken state but made no specific requests. Sen. James P. Kem (R Mo.) asked in a letter that the group approve $5 million for completion of Tuttle Creek, Milford and Perry projects in Kansas.

Committee Report

The Senate Appropriations Committee reported the bill Aug. 10. Apparently as a consequence of the Midwest floods the Committee recommended restoring nearly all the funds cut from the civil functions budget estimates by the House.

In addition, the Committee recommended approval of the entire amount of President Truman's $21,800,000 supplemental estimates for various rivers and harbors and flood control projects designed to provide new and further protection for the areas of Kansas, Oklahoma, Missouri, and Illinois.

As it went to the Senate floor, the measure carried a recommended appropriation of $637,278.213. This was $122,805,813 more than the amount approved by the House. The Senate-recommended sum was only $8,287,-137 under the amount appropriated for Army civil functions in fiscal 1951.

For rivers and harbors improvements $213,932,613 was recommended, and for flood control $407,-211,600. Both funds included allotments totaling $3,765,000 for project planning, and $5 million for surveys and examinations, which the House had specifically denied. Likewise, the expanded appropriation included the full amount of the budget estimate, $20,770,000, for work on seven projects under continuing contracts, those for construction of large multi - purpose dams where units of work were not programmed for a single fiscal year. The Senate Committee said it felt too many large claims would be lodged against the government for contractors' losses and completed work would be left subject to deterioration, if funds were not provided for finishing budgeted contracts

All rivers and harbors and flood control projects specifically denied by the House were restored by the Committee, namely: Lake Worth Inlet, Florida, The Dalles Dam, Oregon, Cheatham Lock and Dam, and Old Hickory Lock and Dam, both in Tennessee, and Ice Harbor Lock and Dam, Washington; and Gavins Point Reservoir, Nebraska, and the Dexter Re-regulating Dam, in Oregon.

Restored to the bill by the Committee also was $73,000 of the House's reduction in Panama Canal funds. The additional money was provided for the Canal Zone government's low-cost housing operations.

Stricken from the bill were the general provisions for renaming the Buggs Island Reservoir, in Virginia and North Carolina, for Rep. John H. Kerr (D N.C.), and the Jensen amendment prohibiting the filling of more than 25 per cent of the personnel vacancies occurring in the agencies in fiscal 1952.

Floor Action

The Senate began consideration of the Army civil functions measure on Aug. 14, and passed it Aug 15 on a roll-call vote, 59-10. (For voting, see page 178.)

In the House all floor amendments had been directed at increasing the appropriation, but the Senate amendments primarily sought to slash the Committee - recommended funds. None of the reduction bids was successful. On the other hand, floor amendments were approved that added $1,300,000 to the bill.

One of these, by Lyndon B. Johnson (D Tex.), increased flood control funds by $300.000 for water-conservation and utilization facilities at the Lavon Reservoir in Texas. This was approved by voice vote. Another, by Herbert H Lehman (D N.Y.), provided $1 million for engineering and economic investigations pending authorized construction of projects for development and utilization of Niagara River waters allocated to the United States under a U.S. - Canada treaty.

Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.) won acceptance on a voice vote for his amendment to reduce the agencies' information and public relations staffs by 25 per cent.

The unsuccessful economy drives were led by Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) and Homer Ferguson (R Mich.). Douglas' efforts were all aimed at reducing the rivers and harbors appropriation, which he labeled a "pork barrel." He first attempted to reduce the funds for rivers and harbors improvements by $50,300,500, losing on a roll-call vote, 28-48. Then he proposed to cut $21,393,262 from the funds. This was defeated barely, 38-38. He finally attempted to reduce the fund by $3 million, but the Senate rejected the proposal by voice vote.

Moves to Recommit

Ferguson proposed to recommit the bill with instructions to the Appropriations Committee to reduce the funds, but this was defeated. His first recommittal motion carried instructions for reducing rivers and harbors and flood control funds by $50 million apiece. Before the vote, he modified the motion to instruct the Committee to cut $50 million from the total appropriation for these purposes, but this lost on roll-call, 28-48.

Again, Ferguson moved to recommit the bill, with instructions to trim the total appropriation to 90 per cent of the budget estimates. Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.) proposed, and Ferguson accepted, a modification of the motion which had the effect of including non-budgeted items, as well as those for which there had been budget estimates, in the reduction. This motion was defeated by roll-call, 32-39.

Unsuccessful also were several amendments to increase flood control funds for certain projects. Tom Connally (D Tex.) and Ernest W. McFarland (D Ariz.) both requested funds for flood control in their states, but, given assurance by Chairman Kenneth McKellar (D Tenn.) of the Senate Appropriations Committee that the projects would be carefully considered when the next supplemental appropriation was acted upon, Connally and McFarland withdrew their amendments.

John J. Williams (R Del.) also proposed, unsuccessfully, that the Senate suspend the rules and adopt a legislative change barring all funds for construction of any project unless the Secretary of Defense declared the project was essential to the national security or unless the Director of the Budget declared the suspension of partially completed projects would result in unnecessary loss to the government. The Williams amendment was defeated on a roll-call vote, 24-44. Williams made the unsuccessful motion to suspend the rules after McKellar raised a point of order.

An attempt by Edward Martin (R Pa.) to increase river and harbors funds by $20 million to provide for deepening the Delaware River channel from Philadelphia to Trenton was ruled out on a point of order made by McKellar.

After its 59-10 passage on a Senate roll-call, the bill was sent to a House - Senate conference committee, carrying a total of $638,578,213.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Lyndon B. Johnson (D Tex.) — Increase flood control funds by $300,000 for water conservation and utilization facilities at the Lavon Reservoir in Texas. Voice vote.

Herbert H. Lehman (D N.Y.) — Provide $1 million for engineering and economic investigations, pending authorization for construction of projects for development and utilization of Niagara River waters, allocated to the U.S. under the ratified treaty between the U.S. and Canada. Voice.

Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.) — Reduce payroll funds for information and publicity personnel by 25 per cent. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) — Reduce the rivers and harbors fund by $50 million. Roll-call vote, 28-48.

Douglas — Reduce the rivers and harbors fund by $21,393,262. Roll-call, 38-38.

Douglas — Reduce rivers and harbors funds by $3 million. Voice.

A. S. Mike Monroney (D Okla.) — Reduce flood control funds by $1.5 million to bar construction of Oolegah Dam in Oklahoma. Standing.

CONFERENCE

Conferees appointed from the House were: Clarence Cannon (D Mo.), John H. Kerr (D N.C.), Louis C. Rabaut (D Mich.), Glenn R. Davis (R Wis.) and Gerald R. Ford, Jr., (R Mich.)

Appointed from the Senate were: Kenneth McKellar (D Tenn.), Carl Hayden (D Ariz.), Allen J. Ellender (D La.), Milton R. Young (R N.D.) Guy Cordon (R Ore.) and William F. Knowland (R Calif.).

This group produced a report on Oct. 16, in the midst of the Congressional heat to adjourn. House Republican members of the conference, Davis and Ford, refused to sign the report. While they did not outline their disagreement in detail, they planned and attempted to recommit the bill when the conference report reached the House floor.

Major provisions of the House - Senate compromise:

A total appropriation of $598,262,713 was agreed upon, divided as follows: $388,544,100 for all flood control projects; $192,657,613 for rivers and harbors improvements; $4,450,000 for the cemeterial expenses of the Army Quartermaster Corps (this was not in disagreement, since the same amount had been approved by both House and Senate); $11,595,000 for the Panama Canal Government.

The House ban on the start of new projects was modified somewhat to provide that with the exception of 10 flood control projects, including three dams with facilities for hydroelectrical production, for which funds were appropriated in the bill, no new or resumed work could be begun where funds had not been allocated for construction in fiscal 1951.

The three multiple - purpose projects, having facilities for production of hydroelectric power, were The Dalles Lock and Dam, Oregon, Old Hickory Lock and Dam, Tennessee, and Gavins Point Reservoir, Nebraska. Others were projects at Pine Bluff, Ark., Pueblo, Colo., Vincennes, Ind., Hutchinson Kan., Aitkin, Minn., Quinby Creek, Va. and Clinton, Iowa.

The name of the Buggs Island Dam in Virginia and North Carolina was changed to the John H. Kerr Dam and Reservoir, as proposed by the House.

$300,000 was provided for construction of water conservation and utilization facilities at Lavon Reservoir in Texas as proposed by the Senate.

The provision for $1 million for Niagara power development as proposed by the Senate was deleted.

The $73,000 for housing operations of the Canal Zone government was deleted.

New funds for surveys were left at $800,000 and were confined to investigations underway — the New England - New York survey and the Arkansas - White - Red River Basin survey.

New funds appropriated for planning were trimmed to $1.5 million with $1 million for flood control and $500,000 for rivers and harbors.

Planning on other new projects, or continuation of planning on old projects (with three exceptions) were forbidden, unless the President certified such work as necessary to the defense effort under criteria established in connection with the allocation of funds in the previous year. Unobligated balances available to the Corps of Engineers from previous appropriations were allocated to continuation of planning on these three projects: Tuttle Creek Dam, Toronto Reservoir and Strawn Reservoir, all in Kansas.

The cut in information personnel to 75 per cent of the fiscal 1952 budget estimates was accepted, with the added modification that the provision not apply to the Panama Canal Company.

House Accepts

The House accepted the conference report on Oct. 17 on a standing vote of 143 to 77.

But the chamber first defeated, on a standing vote, 81-138, a motion by Davis to recommit the bill. Davis objected to the conference's approval of a large portion of the Senate's increases. He said the Midwest flood situation had been used as a "psychological weapon" to increase funds for many projects.

Senate Agrees

The Senate accepted the report Oct. 1 by voice vote, with no opposition.

President Truman promptly signed HR 4386 on Oct. 24, and it became Public Law 203.

War-Death Payments

H J Res. 340 — P.L. 169

Both the Senate and the House passed a joint resolution Oct. 4 granting the Veterans Administration an appropriation of $5 million to pay death benefits to families of servicemen killed during the Korean war. It was signed by the President Oct. 11.

The appropriation originally had been contained in the First Supplemental Appropriation Bill (HR 5212) which became Public Law 253. However Carl Gray, head of the VA, told Congress the money was urgently needed and Members agreed to appropriate the funds in a separate resolution.

The House Appropriations Committee recommended the measure Oct. 3 and the House passed it by voice vote Oct. 4. The Senate also passed it by voice vote Oct. 4. There was no debate in either chamber.

The measure became Public Law 169.

Disaster Relief

H J RES 292 — P. L. 80

Summary — Congressional action on an emergency resolution providing $25 million in flood relief funds was completed swiftly under the spur of disastrous mid-summer floods in the Midwest. The amount granted was $10 million more than the President requested.

There was little debate on the measure but in both the House and Senate Members took time to criticize Congress for failing to provide adequate flood control protection in the past.

Provisions — The joint resolution provided $25 million for disaster relief. The money was to be used by state and local governments to alleviate suffering and damages resulting from the 1951 floods in the Midwest. The funds were to be expended in accordance with Public Law 875, 81st Congress, which provided for federal assistance in cases of "major disaster." (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, 1950, p. 177.)

HOUSE

The House Appropriations Committee recommended the resolution carrying $15 million for flood relief July 16 and sent it to the House.

Later that day, the House approved the resolution by voice vote but first raised the amount of flood relief funds to $25 million. John W. McCormack (D Mass.) sponsored the amendment which increased the amount, and it was accepted by voice vote. Rejected by voice vote was an amendment by Ben F. Jensen (R Iowa) to earmark $2 million of the funds for the Army Engineers for channel maintenance and flood control on the Missouri River and its tributaries from Sioux City, Iowa, to Kansas City, Mo.

Several Members criticized Congress for failing to provide adequate flood protection in the past. Carl Elliott (D Ala.) said that Congress practically had halted flood control progress "under the hammer of the cry of pork barrel . . ." Paul C. Jones (D Mo.) called for a "reconsideration of the policy" Congress had followed in declining to consider "new projects."

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

John W. McCormack (D Mass.) — Increase funds for flood relief from $15 million to $25 million. Voice vote.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Ben F. Jensen (R Iowa) — Earmark $2 million for Army Engineers for channel maintenance and flood control of Missouri River and its tributaries from Sioux City, Iowa, to Kansas City, Mo. voice vote.

SENATE

The Senate Appropriations Committee proposed an amendment reducing the relief funds by $10 million. It recommended a total of $15 million July 17, cutting the resolution back to the total the President requested.

The Senate refused, on a standing vote the same day to accept the Committee's amendment and, by voice vote, approved the resolution carrying $25 million.

John L. McClellan (D Ark.) said the Missouri Valley flood was an expensive answer to critics who called flood control projects "pork barrel" legislation. Edward J. Thye (R Minn.), agreeing with McClellan, said that when he supported flood control projects he had been criticized for "playing politics."

Senate approval sent the flood relief resolution to the White House where it was signed July 18. It became Public Law 80.

Flood Relief Funds

H J RES 341 — P. L. 202

Summary — After disastrous floods swept the Missouri Valley, the 82nd Congress in 1951 voted $113,440,000 for the area in flood relief funds and loan authorizations. The program was less comprehensive and the total much less than was sought. The appropriation — $53,440,000 — was made in a joint resolution (H J Res 341) which also authorized an additional $60 million in Reconstruction Finance Corporation loans.

The President Aug. 20 asked Congress for a $400 million emergency appropriation for rehabilitation of the flood - damaged Valley area. He also recommended a system of flood insurance and an indemnity program. The House Appropriations Committee recommended a total of $113,440,000 and advised against the indemnity and insurance programs. The House upheld its Committee and the Senate passed the resolution Oct. 17, without changes.

In both chambers, attempts to include an indemnity program were ruled out on points of order.

President Truman signed the resolution Oct. 24. It became Public Law 202.

Provisions — The joint resolution provided a total of $113,440,000 for relief in the areas of the Midwest that were flooded in July, 1951. However, only $53,440,000 of this amount was in new cash appropriations; $60 million was an increase in limitation for RFC loans. The money was distributed as follows:

$30 million for the Disaster Loan Revolving Fund of the Farmers Home Administration of the Department of Agriculture, for repair of farm homes and facilities.

An increase from $40 million to $100 million in the limitation on the RFC Disaster loans for rehabilitation of business and home owners and an extension from 10 to 20 years of the time limit fixed by law on loans for acquisition or construction of housing.

President's Request

In a special message to Congress Aug. 20, President Truman requested a $400 million additional emergency appropriation for rehabilitation of the flood-damaged area. The President recommended a system under which the government would reinsure private insurance companies. He also recommended an indemnity program, which, he said, should be on a sliding scale.

The program outlined in the President's requests contained five points:

Indemnify flood victims for a part of their loss on real and personal property

Make and guarantee loans on liberal terms for building homes and businesses to replace those destroyed.

Help farmers rehabilitate their lands and buildings through on-farm assistance and disaster loans

HOUSE

The House Appropriations Committee Oct. 3 recommended against both the President's insurance and indemnification programs. The Committee said in its report that such programs would set a new national policy and should be further examined.

A total of $113,440,000 was recommended by the Committee. Of this amount, $53,440,000 was in direct cash appropriations while the remainder would be provided by an increase from $40 million to $100 million in the limitation on RFC disaster loans for rehabilitation of businesses and homes. It also would extend from 10 to 20 years the time limit on loans for acquisition or construction of housing.

The House by voice vote Oct. 4, approved the resolution as it was recommended by its Committee.

Before the measure was passed, two amendments were ruled out on points of order. Richard Bolling (D. Mo.), offered a substitute which generally followed the President's request. It included programs for indemnification, guaranteed and insured loans and flood insurance. Errett P. Scrivner (R Kan.) offered the other amendment which would have established a Federal Flood Claims Commission to provide for direct grants of from $300 to $3,000 to people in the flooded areas.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Richard Bolling (D Mo.) — Substitute a resolution to grant the President's requests, including indemnification, insurance, and loan programs. Ruled out on point of order by W. F. Norrell (D Ark.)

Errett P. Scrivner (R Kan.) — Establish a commission to provide for direct grants to persons in flooded areas. Ruled out on point of order by Norrell.

SENATE

The Senate Appropriations Committee reported the bill Oct. 16 without amendment.

The Senate passed the measure Oct. 17 by voice vote. Two amendments were offered but were ruled out on points of order. Thomas C. Hennings, Jr., (D Mo.) offered one to authorize indemnification for loss up to a $20,000 maximum in an individual case and not to exceed 80 per cent of the replacement cost of the property. Frank Carlson (R Kan.) offered the other, to increase by $3 million funds for disaster relief. The money would have been available for public assistance by states to families affected by the 1951 floods.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Thomas C. Hennings, Jr., (D Mo.) — Authorize indemnification for loss up to a $20,000 maximum in an individual case and not to exceed 80 per cent of the replacement cost of the property. Ruled out on point of order by Francis Case (R S.D.)

Frank Carlson (R Kan.) — Increase by $3 million funds for disaster relief. Ruled out on point of order by Kenneth McKellar (D Tenn.)

As it was sent to the White House, H J Res 341 thus carried the $113,440,000 in flood relief funds and loan authority as recommended by the House Committee.

The President signed the joint resolution Oct. 24. It became Public Law 202.

Omnibus Fund Plan

Summary — Proposals to return to the single-package method of appropriating funds for each fiscal year ran into stiff opposition from the House and Senate Appropriations Committee and never received floor action during the first session of the 82nd Congress.

Early in the session the House Appropriations Committee flatly rejected a plan to use the omnibus appropriation system during the 1951 session. Although a resolution providing for a consolidated appropriation bill was introduced in the Senate and reported favorably by the Rules Committee, the measure was not acted on by the Senate. Members of the Senate Appropriations Committee voiced strong opposition to the measure.

Background — The single-package method of making government appropriations was employed by early Congresses but appropriations began to be divided in 1794 when Congress passed two general acts — one financing the government, the other financing the military. But 1880, 13 separate annual appropriations were enacted and in subsequent years it took from 10 to 20 bills each year to finance the government.

In 1950, Congress returned to the omnibus approach (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, 1950, p. 113) but the plan was abandoned in 1951 and appropriations for the government were handled in separate bills.

HOUSE

Against the wishes of its chairman, Clarence Cannon (D Mo.), the House Appropriations Jan. 29 voted 31-18 to abandon the omnibus procedure. The motion for abandonment was made by Albert Thomas (D Tex.). Cannon, who put across the omnibus idea in the House in 1950, said 18 Republicans and 13 Democrats joined to defeat him, while two Republicans and 15 other Democrats supported him.

The chairman laid the blame for his defeat at the feet of the Democratic as well as the Republican leadership. He charged that House Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Tex.) and House Democratic Leader John W. McCormack (D Mass.) had joined with House Republican Leader Joseph W. Martin Jr., (R Mass.) in opposition to the consolidated bill. Cannon called the upset a "revolt against economy."

SENATE

While the Senate Appropriations Committee itself took no action on the omnibus appropriations issue, several of its members spoke out against the one-package plan.

Major backing for the omnibus method came from Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.), who with 47 other Senators sponsored a resolution (S Con Res 27) calling for a consolidated general appropriations bill.

Their proposal was sent to the Senate Rule Committee which after holding hearings filed a favorable report on the Byrd resolution Sept. 28.

A dissenting report by Carl Hayden (D Ariz.), chairman of the Rules group, was filed with the Committee recommendation. Hayden said the plan, tried in 1951, was "bulky, unmanageable and impracticable" and encouraged blanket reduction or percentage cuts by Congress and opened the way to legislative riders.

In his report, Hayden stated that the Chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, Kenneth McKellar (D Tenn.), and all nine subcommittee chairmen were opposed to the plan.

The Byrd resolution did not receive flood action during the first session.

State - Justice - Commerce

Summary — Among the last appropriation bills of the year to become law was the measure (HR 4740) financing the State, Justice and Commerce Departments and the Judiciary for fiscal 1952.

Sent to the White House on Oct. 12, it was signed into law by President Truman Oct. 22, nearly four months after fiscal 1952 had begun. It became Public Law 188. The measure provided a total appropriation of $1,042,867,887 (budget estimates were $1,258,296,141) for the four branches of the government in fiscal 1952.

In the House, which passed the bill July 26, an appropriation of $1,045,940,115 was voted, while the Senate, which passed the bill Aug. 24, approved a total of $1,045,452,863. The conference committee took the lower of the House and Senate figures, wherever there was a substantial difference.

Of the total approved, the State Department received $228,104,861, Justice $181,602,000, Commerce $607,242,911, and the Judiciary $25,918,115.

Congress' overall reduction in the budget estimates for these agencies amounted to about 18 per cent. State and Commerce were dealt the severest cuts, of about 19 and 22 per cent, respectively. Justice and the Judiciary were cut about two per cent each.

To State and Commerce, also, was applied the compromise personnel reduction amendment, sponsored by Rep. Ben F. Jensen (R Iowa), prohibiting the filling of more than 25 per cent of the personnel vacancies occurring in fiscal 1952, until a 10 per cent reduction in personnel force was achieved. Also written in to supplement the Jensen amendment was a Senate-sponsored 10 per cent cut in budget estimates for personal services.

Justice, with the exception of general administrative personnel, and Judiciary were excluded from the application of these amendments, and some agencies of both State and Commerce also were exempted, such as the Foreign Service and the Civil Aeronautics Administration.

As in earlier appropriation bills, the Senate struck out the Jensen amendment, and inserted instead a 10 per cent cut in budget estimates for personal services. However, the conference committee revised the Jensen amendment and restored it to the bill, and at the same time left intact the reduction in personal services budgets.

The House completed action on the conference report Oct. 11 and the Senate accepted it Oct. 12.

The President signed it Oct. 22 without comment.

HOUSE

Committee

The House Appropriations Committee July 10 reported the State, Justice and Commerce and Judiciary Appropriation Bill for fiscal 1952 (HR 4740). Leaders repeatedly had postponed bringing the bill to the House floor in fear of a promised Republican attempt to pass a rider ousting Dean Acheson as Secretary of State.

After the new fiscal year began, Administration leaders decided against further delay. But as the bill was reported, John Phillips (R Calif.) a member of the Appropriations Committee, said he would offer on the floor a so-called "get-Acheson amendment" to deny government policy-making posts to anyone who, during the previous five years, had been connected with a legal or business firm that had dealings with a foreign government. (Acheson's law firm had.)

Recommended for the four branches by the Committee was an appropriation totaling $1,051,715,115 as against budget estimates totaling $1,258,296,141. This was a cut of $206,581,026, or about 16 per cent, and was among the highest cuts, percentagewise, proposed by the Committee in any of the year's regular departmental money bills.

Biggest cuts recommended were in State and Commerce Department funds. These were, respectively, from a requested $283,686,476 to $231,432,000 and from $763,763,925 to $612,698,000. The State Department reduction was about 18 per cent under its budget, and Commerce was cut about 20 per cent.

On the other hand, the Justice Department, for which $181,667,000 was recommended against estimates amounting to $184,356,000, was cut only about 1.5 per cent; and the federal Judiciary, for which $25,918,115 was recommended against a budget of $26,489,740 was cut only a little more than two per cent. Both Justice and the Judiciary were to receive increases over their fiscal 1951 funds. Most of the Justice Department increase was for the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the additional funds for the Judiciary were earmarked to pay for newly - created federal judgeships.

In its report, the Committee pointed to its overall 16 per cent cut in the budget estimates. "This reduction is especially significant," the Committee wrote, "in view of the numerous agencies in the bill which are performing necessary services directly related to national defense which could not be reduced."

State Department

The Committee cited the dangers inherent in restricting the State Department's essential activities in an era of world tension, but it then proceeded to administer a scolding, and make item-by-item cuts in the Department's functions and activities. The Committee contended that sufficient funds had been permitted for essentials, and that allowance had been made for improvement of quality, rather than quantity, of operations.

Most severely cut was the Department's International Information and Educational Activities, the feature function of which is the Voice of America. A budget of $115 million had been proposed for the various activities but the Committee trimmed it by $30 million, leaving $85 million for fiscal 1952 operations, after noting that the Department had placed what it called "undue emphasis" on certain activities and included others on its program "the value of which is extremely questionable." Tight restrictions were applied to funds for salaries and expenses of the directional and managements staffs of the information program. The Committee said these staffs had been enlarged beyond the scope of the estimates previously presented to Congress, and without "prior consultation with . . . the Appropriations Committee and even contrary to the specific instructions" of the Committee.

In addition, disappointment was expressed by the Committee over the progress made in reducing this government's contributions to international organizations. A cut of $1,384,476 was made in the budget estimates of $30,684,476 for this purpose, leaving $29,300,000. Further reductions and withdrawals, where benefits were light or activities were duplicated, were recommended.

Further, the Committee alleged there was carelessness in the handling of State Department travel funds. It urged that Foreign Service personnel be held longer at their posts and required to adjust transfer travel to home leaves in the interest of economy. A provision that would have permitted Foreign Service personnel to travel on ships of other than United States registry was killed.

The only item untouched in the Department's budget was the Philippine Rehabilitation Program, for which $3 million to liquidate previous contract authority was provided.

Justice Department

Among the biggest cuts in Justice's budget was $500,000 trimmed from the Anti-Trust Division, leaving $3.2 million for the unit.

It also trimmed $500,000 from the $1.5 million requested for fees and expenses of witnesses, saying past experience showed the request was inflated. An appropriation of $90 million was recommended for the FBI; this was a reduction of $665,000 in budget estimates, but an increase of $20,728,000 over the 1951 appropriation. The increase was in accord with the "Bureau's need for discharging its many official responsibilities and confidential investigation commitments in the security field," wrote the Committee.

Commerce Department

Brunt of the 20 per cent cut in the Commerce budget was borne by the Civil Aeronautics Administration and the Bureau of Public Roads. But it was admitted that some of these cuts might be considered in a "phony" category. For example, $325 million was allowed for the federal-aid highway construction program administered by the Bureau of Public Roads, a cut of $95 million in the budget estimate. The Committee said it expected materials shortages would reduce the amount of road work during fiscal 1952, but it admitted that the Bureau had legal authority to take on any obligations up to $500 million a year, and if the roads should be built, Congress would be obliged to furnish the funds. Similarly, $15 million was cut from the $30 million requested to liquidate contract authority previously granted the federal-aid airport program run by the CAA. The full $30 million, of course, already had been committed and the money would have to be appropriated sooner or later, it was acknowledged. A total of $35,840,000 was allowed the federal-aid airport program.

In another category of cuts, however, the Committee trimmed $17,150,000 from the CAA's program for establishing air navigation facilities, leaving $20 million for the program. A budget item of $600,000 for the CAA to start a research program for testing and improving jet transports for government and commercial use was deleted entirely. The Committee declared the plane manufacturers and commercial airlines, and not the federal government, should finance such development.

Judiciary

This appropriation, for the expenses of all federal courts including the salaries and expenses of judges, provided funds for an additional judgeship for the first circuit of Hawaii, one for the new district court of Guam and two for the northern district of Illinois, and additional personnel to assist these judges, as well as an additional law clerk for Justice William O. Douglas of the U. S. Supreme Court.

For all four branches, requests for additional automobiles were denied and reductions of varying degree were made in allowances for car replacements.

State Department Reacts

Hardly had the committee reported to the House when Deputy Undersecretary of State Carlisle H. Humelsine wrote to Rep. John J. Rooney (D N.Y.), chairman of the Appropriations Subcommittee which handled the money measure, and presented his estimate of the effects of the "get Acheson amendment" proposed to be introduced by Phillips.

Humelsine reported that the Phillips proposal would cut off the pay of some 50 to 75 top officials of the State Department, including many prominent Republicans.

Floor Action

The House began debate on the bill July 23. Final passage came July 26, after an acrimonious four-day debate that centered on two big issues: funds for the Voice of America and the Republican drive to tack on a rider cutting off the pay of Secretary Acheson. The total appropriation after passage, was $5,775,000 less than the Committee recommended.

Off-the-Floor Action

The Republican's "get Acheson" strategy occupied the GOP both on and off the House floor after debate began on the appropriation bill, the proposed vehicle for the amendment. Phillips was the nominal author of the amendment but before he brought it up on the floor, it was rewritten considerably and officially adopted by the House GOP membership. The first rewriting was done by Phillips himself, after the State Department attacked its broad application and revealed it would hit many high officials. Phillips denied the Department's contentions but nevertheless rewrote it to "narrow" its effect so that it would deny pay only "to the head of any executive department" who had been affiliated within the previous five years with a firm that represented a foreign government.

On July 24, a House GOP Policy Committee met to scrutinize the anti-Acheson proposal. The group recommended that the rider be changed to provide that the salary of any official, otherwise banned by the amendment, might be paid if his nomination were "submitted or resubmitted" for Senate confirmation. On July 25, this version was presented to the House Republican membership, which promptly approved it by a vote of 71 to 33.

And In The Chamber

With these activities in progress backstage, Republican debaters in the House had been laying down a two-day barrage against the Voice of America. They denounced it as "fuzzy-headed," mismanaged and ineffectual, and, in short, "a $100 million flop." Sharing in the criticism were the other programs of the Department's International Information and Educational Activities and the man who headed them, Edward A. Barrett, Assistant Secretary in charge of Public Affairs.

Clarence J. Brown (R Ohio) called the VOA the "Voice of Acheson" and classified Barrett as "part and parcel of this fuzzy-minded, timid cabal" in the State Department. Brown agreed that the VOA should not be abolished but added, "I can see no way to improve the product so long as it remains in the hands of the present Administration."

He advocated a slash in the Voice's funds, in the meantime. The Ohioan particularly criticized a statement by Barrett that a little land reform in some countries might be worth 20 divisions of troops in preventing Communist seizures of power there. But John W. McCormack (D Mass.), House Majority Leader, answered by pointing to Gen. Douglas A. MacArthur as one of the many advocates of Asian land reform.

George A. Dondero (R Mich.) criticized the VOA for sending "picture books overseas showing well - fed and well-clothed Americans." From what he heard, said Dondero, "the people of Europe and Asia are getting tired of such infantile attempts at propaganda."

Calls Program "Flop"

Richard B. Wigglesworth (R Mass.) accused the VOA of having failed to meet its responsibility of encouraging people in Russian - dominated areas. Complaints from Poland, he said, were that VOA programs were filled with detailed reports about American internal affairs incomprehensible to the Poles and that international affairs were presented in a way often "irritating and offensive." Also, Wigglesworth asserted, there was exaggerated praise of German achievements and of the Tito regime in Yugoslavia.

John Taber (R N.Y.), termed the whole VOA program "a flop." William S. Hill (R Colo.) asked why the Voice, with its large permanent staff, had found it necessary to pay $443,-926 to outside free lance writers in fiscal 1951. Among the latter group were, he said, several broadcasters of the Columbia Broadcasting System, including Charles Collingwood, William Downs, Griffing Bancroft and Eric Sevareid.

"In hiring these men," Hill stated, "the State Department, to put it mildly, has placed itself in a highly dubious position. As political commentators, they frequently have occasion to pass judgment and express opinions regarding the same State Department that is making cash payments to them." Hill said CBS "has the reputation of being a strong supporter of the Truman Administration and of socialistic tendencies generally."

On July 25, the day after Hill leveled his attack on these four, Assistant Secretary Barrett wrote to Rep. Rooney in defense of the men and called the attack "a gross injustice." Barrett stated that the commentators deserve "very sincere thanks from the nation."

Prince H. Preston Jr., (D Ga.) challenged the Republicans to offer an amendment to "wipe out" the Voice. He suggested that some of the GOP speeches on the subject had been written by the Republican National Committee and expressed doubt some Republicans were stating their own opinions.

"Oust Acheson" Drive

The Republicans, having readied the Phillips amendment for presentation to the House, trained their guns on the Secretary July 26.

It was the method of ousting him, rather than the objective itself, that became the main issue before the House and provoked one of the most heated debates of the session.

Lawrence H. Smith (R Wis.) said Acheson had caused "irreparable damage to the United States." Referring to a Polish loan which Acheson's law firm supported after the war (Poland was its client at the time), Charles J. Kersten (R Wis.) said it was Acheson who was responsible for "setting up the police state of Poland." George H. Bender (R Ohio) blamed the Secretary for "all the casualties in Korea."

For the Democrats, Rooney led the defense. "If you want to get Acheson out of office," Rooney advised, "do it the honest way. Do it the way the Constitution prescribed. Do it with your head held high. Do not grovel in the slum of irresponsible flouting of the law. Impeachment is the proper course if you feel the present Secretary of State unfit for the office he holds . . ."

Joseph W. Martin, Jr., (R Mass.), House Minority Leader, protested, angrily making a point of order that the New Yorker was violating House rules by reflecting on the integrity of Republican members. House Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Tex.) said he could hardly agree that Rooney's remarks were "quite proper" and upheld Martin's point of order.

In defense of the State Department, Alfred D. Sieminski (D N.J.) accused its Republican critics of having "no guts."

Decision on "Ouster"

Finally the Phillips amendment came up for a decision. The proposal, as approved by the Republican conference (requiring resubmission of Acheson's nomination to the Senate if his pay was to continue), was ruled out of order. It was then revised, leaving out the renomination provision, to simply forbid payment of the Secretary's pay.

This provision was then defeated on a standing vote, 81 - 171.

The Republicans suffered another setback when the House refused to slash funds for the State Department's information services, including the VOA. The latter action was taken on amendment by Cliff Clevenger (R Ohio) to cut $15 million from the funds. The House turned it down on a standing vote, 137 - 167. Later Clevenger offered a motion to recommit the bill with instructions to the Appropriations Committee to make the $15 million cut, but again he was defeated, this time on a roll - call vote, 142-245. (For voting, see page 168.)

When the battle was over, however, funds for the State Department had been reduced by $5,057,000 in addition to the $52,254,476 in Committee cuts which the House had also approved. Among floor cuts was a $2.3 million reduction in funds for American contributions to international organizations, offered by James C. Davis (D Ga.), and approved by roll-call vote, 117-102, Subsequently adopted was a parallel amendment, by John Bell Williams (D Miss.), which provided that American contributions to any international organization should not exceed one-third of the estimated total annual cost of the organization. This amendment was challenged on a point of order, but was sustained and then accepted on standing vote, 155-137.

In addition, $100,000 was trimmed from the Justice appropriation, and $600,000 from Commerce. No changes were made in the appropriation for the Judiciary.

The amendment added by Ben F. Jensen (R Iowa) to most other regular appropriation bills of the year was written into the measure. With the exception of the Justice Department, the Judiciary and the Civil Aeronautics Board, it prevented the filling of more than 25 per cent of the personnel vacancies occurring in the agencies in fiscal 1952. Smith (R Wis.) was defeated, however,when he attempted to add his amendment cutting domestic information staffs by 25 per cent.

As the bill went to the Senate, the total appropriation was $1,045,940,115, divided among the four agencies as follows:

State Department — $226,357,000
Justice Department — $181,567,000
Commerce Department — $612,098,000
Judiciary — $25,918,115.

SENATE

Committee

The Senate Appropriations Committee reported on Aug. 21 its version of the State, Justice, Commerce and Judiciary Appropriation Bill, with a recommended appropriation of $1,022,882,263. This was $23,057,852 short of the sum approved by the House and $235,413,878 or about 18.7 per cent under budget estimates.

Principally responsible for the overall reduction was the Senate Committee's decision to strike out the House's Jensen amendment prohibiting the filling of more than 25 per cent of the personnel vacancies occurring in the agencies under the bill in fiscal 1952, and to propose substituting a 10 per cent reduction in budget estimates for most personal services in the State and Commerce Departments. The Justice Department and the Judiciary were exempted from this cut, though their general budgets were reduced and they were warned not to exceed their budgeted amounts for personal services.

In the case of State, the 10 per cent reduction was not applied to Americans in the Foreign Service, since, the Committee said, "it might seriously affect the ability of the Department to carry out the foreign affairs of the United States." In Commerce, the reduction was applied only to personnel engaged by the CAA in administrative activities and not to persons operating facilities.

State Department

The total amount recommended for the State Department was $205,877,838 a reduction of $20,479.162 below the House figure and $77,808,638 below the budget estimates. The largest reduction was in the Department's International Information and Educational Activities (including the VOA) which the Committee cut $22 million under the House appropriation of $85 million (budget estimate: $115 million). Contributions to International Organizations were increased from the House's $27 million figure to $30,297,861, the amount requested. The Committee struck out the House language, flatly prohibiting American payment of more than one - third of the total annual cost of any international organization, and inserted a provision requiring the State Department to get approval of the House and Senate Appropriations Committees before it committed the American government to a contribution larger than one-third of the organization's budget.

Justice Department

The House appropriation of $181,567,000 for Justice was approved in full by the Senate Committee. However, funds for operating the Office of Alien Property (not derived from Treasury revenue but from enemy property vested in the Attorney General under the Trading with the Enemy Act) were cut from the $3.6 million recommended by the House to $3 million. The Committee noted that the Office had a total of 187 attorneys and said this was "entirely" too many.

Commerce Department

The Committee recommended an appropriation of $609,500,560, a decrease of $2,597,440 from the House bill and $154,263,365 under the budget estimate.

The $20 million approved by the House for the CAA to establish air navigation facilities was raised to $25 million.

The House - approved $15 million for liquidation of contract authority under the federal-aid airport program was cut by the Committee to $10 million (the CAA "volunteered" a reduction in these contract liquidation funds from $15 million to $11.8 million, noted the Committee in its report). A fund of $597,500 was restored to the bill for the CAA to proceed with development of jet - transport aircraft (the requested $600,000 was deleted by the House). The House reduction in budget estimates for the federal-aid highway program (from $420 million to $325 million) was approved.

Judiciary

An appropriation of $25,936,865 was recommended, an increase of $18,750 over the House bill. The increase was made to provide funds to equip a library for the new United States court about to be completed in the District of Columbia.

General Provisions

Recommended for insertion in the bill were the following general provisions, also included in several previous appropriation bills, which:

Required the ratio of employees engaged in personnel work to those in other regular activities to be 1 to 115.

Banned the employment by any of the agencies of full - time chauffeurs in the District of Columbia except for automobiles assigned to the Secretary of State and Commerce, the Attorney General and for operation by the FBI. The Foreign Service was limited to the employment of not more than 500 full-time chauffeurs in countries outside the U. S.

Public information staffs of the various agencies were reduced to 75 per cent of their 1952 budget, except in the cases of disseminators of information necessary for enforcement of law by the FBI, the Immigration and Naturalization Service, the promotion of safety of human life by the CAA and the Weather Bureau, scientific experimentation by the National Bureau of Standards and the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

Floor Action

The Senate took up the bill Aug. 22, and passed it by voice vote Aug. 24.

As in the House, the main issue of controversy during the Senate debate was the State Department's International Information and Educational Activities — Voice of America program.

Before final action on the bill, a total of $22,570,600 was added through floor amendments, the greatest portion of which — $22 million — went to the international information program. The latter amount was added under an amendment by Karl E. Mundt (R S.D.), which was approved on roll-call, 52-16. It restored the full amount cut from the program by the Committee. In other amendments affecting the program, all offered by Mundt and approved by voice votes, the Senate increased the sum, within the total appropriation, earmarked for "exchange of persons" from $5 million recommended by the Senate Committee to $10 million, as requested in the budget estimates; and raised the limitation on funds for personal services to $33,200,000.

The other $570,600 added to the bill was for the Justice Department — restoring the $500,000 cut by the House from the Anti - Trust Division, and $70,600 of the $113,000 cut from the Department's general administration funds. Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) sponsored both these additions. He said the general administration addition would be used to put into effect the National Youth Correction Act approved by the 81st Congress.

During the three days of debate, the VOA received both praise and criticism. Mundt described the Voice as "the only overseas campaign we have to keep this country out of war — most of our other overseas programs are designed to help win a war if we get into it."

Benton Sees "Dividends"

William Benton (D Conn.) said "money invested in this area now, in the coming critical year, in my judgment will pay dividends not only in the present but for many, many decades." Benton proposed to restore the full budget estimate ($115 million) for the information and educational activities, and he offered an amendment to this effect; however, he later withdrew it in favor of Mundt's amendment restoring the Senate Committee cut.

Pat McCarran (D Nev.), however, supported the $63 million budget proposed by the Committee. McCarran, who headed the Appropriations Subcommittee that drafted the recommendations on the bill, said $63 million "would allow necessary things to be done but will suffice . . . to prevent frivolous and ill-conceived projects to go forward."

While the Senate made only additions to the bill, it nevertheless was confronted with numerous amendments to make reductions in various appropriations. But all were rejected.

Four reduction amendments were offered by Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.). All were rejected. The Illinoisan tried to cut the funds for salaries and expenses of the State Department by $4,487,777, but this was rejected on voice vote. Then, Richard M. Nixon (R Calif.) attempted to cut the salaries and expenses fund by $207,115, but his amendment also was rejected on a roll-call vote, 28-45. (For voting, See Page 178.)

Thereafter, Douglas tried to cut $2 million from funds provided for the State Department to acquire buildings abroad (the House provided $8 million, the Senate $7 million for this purpose). The Senate rejected the amendment on a 36-36 roll call, when Vice President Alben W. Barkley broke the tie with a negative vote.

In another amendment, Douglas tried to reduce by $175,000 the State Department's "representation allowances," the funds used to establish and maintain relationships with foreign officials. The Senate rejected this too, 25 - 40. Douglas' last effort was an amendment to cut by $25 million the funds for federal highways. It was rejected by voice vote.

As the bill went to conference the total appropriation was $1,045,452,863, divided:

State Department—$227,877,838.
Justice Department—$182,137,600.
Commerce Department — $609,500,560.
Judiciary — $25,936,865.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Pat McCarran (D Nev.)—Increase from $144,000 to $147,500 limitation on expenditures for personal services in the care of building and ground funds for the Supreme Court. Voice vote.

Carl Hayden (D Ariz.) — Exempt employees of the Foreign Service of the U. S. from ratio limitation imposed on employees engaged in personnel work. Voice.

Karl E. Mundt (R S.D.) — Increase by $22 million funds for International Information and Educational Activities of the State Department. Roll call, 52-16.

Mundt — Provide $10 million of the International Information and Educational Activities fund for the exchange of persons. Voice.

Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) — Increase by $70,600 funds for general administration of the Justice Department. Voice.

Kefauver — Increase by $500,000 funds for the Anti-Trust Division of the Justice Department.

McCarran — Increase by $1,270,290 the limitation on funds for personal services of the Weather Bureau of the Department of Commerce. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) — Reduce by $4,487,777 salaries and expenses fund of the State Department. Standing vote.

Richard M. Nixon (R Calif.) — Reduce by $207,115 salaries and expenses funds of the State Department, and bar funds for compensation of Division of Liaison employees. Roll-call vote, 28 - 45.

William Benton (D Conn.) — Increase by $52 million funds for the International Information and Educational Activities of the State Department. Withdrawn by Benton.

Douglas— Reduce by $175,000 funds for representation allowance of the State Department. Roll call, 25-40.

Douglas — Reduce by $25 million funds for federal aid for highways. Voice vote.

CONFERENCE

Appointed to the conference committee from the House were: John J. Rooney (D N.Y.), Daniel J. Flood (D Pa.), Prince H. Preston, Jr., (D Ga.), Fred Marshall (D Minn.), Clarence Cannon (D Mo.), Cliff Clevenger (R Ohio), John Taber (R N.Y.) and Ben F. Jensen (R Iowa).

From the Senate were appointed: Pat McCarran (D Nev.), Kenneth McKellar (D Tenn.), Allen J. Ellender (D La.), Theodore Francis Green (D R.I.), Styles Bridges (R N.H.), Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.) and Homer Ferguson (R Mich.).

It was six weeks before the conference was able to reach an agreement On Oct. 10, a report was issued, containing the following major compromises:

A total appropriation of $1,042,867,-887 (less than the amount voted by either House or Senate) was approved. (The conferees generally accepted the lower figure, wherever there was a difference between House and Senate appropriations.) For the State Department, $228,104,861 was approved; Justice received $181,602,-000; Commerce, $607,242,911; and the Judiciary, $25,918,115.

The $30,297,861 approved by the Senate for contributions to international organizations was accepted. House conferees, however, would not accept the Senate's revision of the House provision limiting American contributions to international organizations to one - third of the organization's budget, but said they would ask for a separate vote of the House.

No "Voice" Cut

A sum of $34 million was earmarked for personal services for the State Department's International Information and Educational Activities (within the total appropriation of $85 million) instead of the $33.2 million proposed by the Senate. Also, $6.5 million was provided, within the total appropriation, for the "exchange of persons" program, instead of $10 million proposed by the Senate. The VOA, one of the "activities," was alloted the full amount of its budget estimate, $25,164,655.

$3.2 million was appropriated for the Justice Department's Anti - Trust Division, instead of the $3.7 million proposed by the Senate.

$22.5 million was appropriated for the CAA to establish air navigation facilities, instead of the $20 million proposed by the House and $25 million by the Senate.

A total appropriation of $28.7 million was appropriated for the federal-aid airport program, as proposed by the Senate, with $10 million provided for liquidation of prior contract authority, also as proposed by the Senate.

The Senate appropriation of $597,-500 for the CAA to develop jet - transport aircraft was removed.

Retain Jensen Rider

The House's Jensen amendment, prohibiting the filling of more than 25 per cent of the vacancies in the agencies in fiscal 1952, was restored with the added limitation that it was to apply only until the total number of personnel had been reduced 10 per cent below budget estimates for 1952. Excluded from its application were the following: Offices or positions required to be filled by appointment of the President, the Department of Justice (except general administration personnel), the FBI, the Judiciary, the CAA, operational personnel of the Weather Bureau, Coast and Geodetic Survey and the Bureau of Public Roads, the Patent Office, the Civil Aeronautics Board, Americans in the Foreign Service, and employees in Civil Service grades CPC 1 and 2.

Where the Senate had made 10 per cent reductions in budget estimates for personal services (see Senate Committee section), these were allowed to stand, with only an occasional modification, as a supplement to the revised Jensen amendment.

The Senate amendment establishing a new ratio for employees in personnel work compared to other employees of 1 to 115 was accepted, but with the added proviso that under "unusual requirements" the President might approve a ratio of 1 to 85. The Foreign Service was excluded.

The Senate limitation on employment of chauffeurs was modified to permit the continued employment in the District of Columbia of half the number on the payrolls of the four agencies as of July 1, 1951.

The Senate amendment reducing the number of persons engaged in information and public relations activities was stricken.

Republicans Disagree

Republican conferees of both the House and Senate disagreed with conference action in striking out the amendment reducing public relations staffs. The Senate members signed the conference report with the notation that they would move for a new conference on this point.

Chambers Accept Report

The House took up the report first, on Oct. 11, and passed it by voice vote, after first accepting by roll-call vote, 200 - 126, the Senate revision of the amendment with respect to American contributions to international organizations.

The Senate likewise accepted the compromise, on Oct. 12, approving the report by roll-call vote, 31-27.

Before final passage, however, Ferguson urged the Senate to vote against acceptance and to recommit the bill with instructions to the conferees to restore the limitation on information and publicity activities. Ferguson said that most other appropriation bills had carried such a limitation and the State-Justice-Commerce-Judiciary bill should not be excepted. But Blair Moody (D Mich.) said publicity staffs should not be cut at a time when "there is so much controversy about the foreign policy of the U.S."

President Truman signed the measure Oct. 22, and it became Public Law 188.

Stop-Gap Bills

HJ RES 277 — P.L. 70

Summary — Congress began fiscal 1952 without having completed action on a single regular departmental appropriation bill. In order to insure operation of government agencies beyond the June 30 expiration date of the fiscal 1951 appropriations, Congress passed an emergency resolution (H J Res 277) granting funds for the month of July, but stipulating a reduced spending rate. It completed action on the resolution June 30, the day before the start of the fiscal year.

Congress later granted three extensions of the resolution.

The House Appropriations Committee reported the resolution June 26. The House passed it June 28 by voice vote after defeating, on close roll-call votes, Republican attempts to block the measure. The Senate Appropriations Committee June 29 added amendments which generally reduced spending rates for both the regular government agencies and foreign aid programs. Despite a letter from President Truman criticizing the cut in foreign aid spending rates, the Senate June 30 accepted its Committee's changes. It passed the measure by voice vote.

Provisions — The emergency resolution granted temporary appropriations on the following basis:

For agencies whose appropriation bills at that time had been acted on by the House and Senate, the spending ceiling would be set by the lower amount passed. For those whose bills had been acted on by the House only, the House figure would set the rate. In no case, however, would spending exceed 1952 budget estimates.

If appropriation bills had received no action, the expenditure rate would be governed by that of the first quarter of fiscal 1951, except that the Department of Defense was granted expenditures 50 per cent over the last quarter of fiscal 1951.

Spending for mutual defense assistance, China area aid, ECA, International Development, and the Institute of Inter-American Affairs was based on that of the last quarter. However ECA was limited to $145 million and the International Development program was limited to $2.5 million.

Purchase of automobiles was barred unless specifically authorized in the appropriation bills for 1952.

HOUSE

Committee

The House Appropriations Committee June 26 approved the resolution (H J Res 277) providing temporary appropriations for July 1.

The resoution provided that if the regular appropriation bill had passed the House, the rate of spending for the agencies was set at the figure carried in the House bill or the figure appearing in the 1952 budget estimate, whichever was lower. If regular appropriation bills had not received action, the rate of spending in the last quarter of fiscal 1951 would set the ceiling.

Exception was made for the Office of Defense Mobilization. The bill permitted the ODM to spend at the rate it did in June, 1951.

Spending ceilings for mutual defense assistance, ECA, China area aid, the International Development program and the Institute of Inter-American Affairs were set at the rate of expenditure during the last quarter of fiscal 1951.

Floor Action

The emergency resolution was passed by the House June 28 despite repeated Republican attempts to defeat the measure.

The funds bill reached the floor under the "closed rule" procedure which barred amendments by individual lawmakers. Republicans failed by only a slim margin — on a 196-192 roll-call vote — to open the resolution to amendments. Four Democrats joined the 188 Republicans who voted against the closed rule procedure. One Independent and 195 Democrats supported the rule.

The rule struck a direct blow at Republicans who had hoped to offer amendments denying operating funds — even in an emergency measure — to the State Department in an attempt to force the resignation of Secretary of State Dean Acheson.

Republicans also protested that the resolution did not permit operation of limitations approved by either the House or the Senate. The limitations referred to were the Jensen - Ferguson - Douglas amendments to restrict the filling of vacancies, personnel and government annual leave. The closed rule stymied plans of Rep. John Taber (R N.Y.) to clamp these restrictions on the stop-gap money and plans of Rep. A. L. Miller (R Neb.) to offer an amendment to eliminate the State Department from the emergency measure.

Rpublicans were unsuccessful, too, in their attempt to block consideration of the emergency legislation. The move was defeated on a 195-191 roll-call vote.

Rep. John Taber (R N.Y.), terming the resolution a "menace," offered a motion to recommit the bill with instructions to cut most items, except the Department of Defense, by 10 per cent and reduce foreign aid funds one-third. House Democrats defeated the motion by only 10 votes on a 190-200 roll-call vote. Only one Republican, Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) voted against recommital while three Democrats, Burr P. Harrison (D Va.), W. M. (Don) Wheeler (D Ga.), and John Bell Williams (D Miss.) joined Republicans supporting the motion.

Passage of the resolution by the House was by voice vote.

SENATE

Committee

The Senate Appropriations Committee recommended the resolution June 20 with amendments which generally reduced rates of spending.

The Senate group's version provided that if appropriation bills had not been acted on by the House, the spending rate would be determined by expenditures in the first, rather than the last quarter of fiscal 1951. The amendment meant a cut in the rate of appropriations since expenditures reached a peak in the last few months of fiscal 1951. The Committee exempted the Department of Defense from this rule, recommending for it a top spending rate 50 per cent over the last quarter.

The Committee also proposed to take account of new mutual defense projects started since the first quarter which required additional funds. It recommended adjustments by limiting July outlays to one third of the first quarter's total or one third of the quarter in which they were initiated. These provisions covered such activities as mutual defense assistance, ECA, China area aid, the International Development program and the Inter-American Affairs program.

A new section was added prohibiting the purchase of automobiles unless such purchase was authorized in 1952 appropriation act.

Floor Action

The Senate passed the resolution June 29 by voice vote after accepting an amendment of a technical nature by Sen. Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.).

CONFERENCE

The conference report, filed June 30, recommended allowing military and defense programs to continue the last quarter (fiscal 1951) spending rate but put expenditures for other governmental activities on the basis of the first quarter.

Spending for mutual defense assistance, China area aid, ECA, International Development program, and Inter - American Affairs was based on the fourth quarter under Conference recommendations, but limitations of $2.5 million for the International Development program and $145 million for ECA were set. Funds reappropriated for ECA were available only for purposes of the India Food Emergency Aid Act.

Final Action

Meeting in unusual Saturday sessions to beat the fiscal year deadline, the House and Senate June 30 accepted the conference report. Passage in the House was on a 256-12 roll - call vote. The Senate, with only seven Members present, agreed to it by voice vote.

The resolution was signed by President Truman July 1 and became Public Law 70. The President June 30, in a letter to the Chairmen of the House and Senate Appropriations Committees, had protested the Senate Committee's proposed limits on foreign aid funds.

Conferees agreed on a compromise in a hurried session June 30. Generally, spending ceilings for foreign aid were eased but those for the regular government agencies were set at the lower Senate rate. The House accepted the report June 30 on a 256-12 roll-call vote; the Senate agreed by voice vote the same day. For voting, see page 170.)

The resolution was signed by the President July 1 and became P.L. 70.

Extended Three Times

The resolution was extended three times by Congress before action was completed on all the appropriation bills. The bills granting extensions were:

H J Res 302, granting temporary funds through Aug. 31. Passed by House and Senate on voice vote July 30. Signed July 31, P.L. 97.

H J Res 320, granting temporary funds through Sept. 30. Passed by House and Senate on voice vote Aug. 21. Signed Aug. 29, P.L. 132.

H J Res 335, granting temporary funds through Oct. 31. Passed by House on voice vote Sept. 27. Passed Senate by voice vote Sept. 28. Signed Sept. 28, P.L. 156.

HJ RES 207 — P.L. 11

Congress completed action March 22 on a $21,250 supplemental appropriation for the District of Columbia. The money was for salaries and expenses of the D. C. Office of the Rent Control Administrator, from Jan. 31 to March 31, 1951, and was to be paid from D.C. revenues.

The measure also repealed the limitation on payment of $34,000 for employees' terminal leave. The limitation was part of the First Supplemental Appropriation for 1951. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, 1950, P.130) The House Appropriations Committee recommended unfreezing the leave funds in lieu of an appropriation to cover rent control operations during the April 1-June 30 period. (Rent control money beyond June 30, 1951, was provided in the regular District of Columbia appropriation for fiscal 1952.)

There was no debate on the measure in either chamber and action was completed swiftly. The House Appropriations Committee recommended the $21,250 March 19 and the House approved by voice vote the same day. On March 22 the Senate Appropriations Committee recommended the bill without amendment and the same day the Senate, by voice vote, passed and sent it to the White House.

It was signed by President Truman March 24 and became Public Law 11.

H J RES 311—P.L. 113

Summary — A Supplemental Appropriation (H J Res 311) for the Department of Labor provided $950,000 to carry out an amendment to the Agricultural Workers section of the Agriculture Act of 1949. The amendment, passed earlier in the 82nd Congress' first session (see page 95), was the so-called "wetback" bill for the immigration of Mexican farm laborers.

The House Appropriations Committee Aug. 9 recommended a total of $950,000 and the House passed the measure the same day by voice vote without amendment. The Senate passed the bill Aug. 10 by voice vote. The House Aug. 13 agreed to a minor Senate change and the joint resolution was signed by the President Aug. 16.

Provisions — The joint resolution provided a total of $950,000 for the Department of Labor to be used by the Secretary of Labor to recruit and place Mexican farm laborers. The law required that employers reimburse the government in amounts up to $15 a worker to cover the costs of transportation, and subsistence while traveling and at reception centers. Of the $950,000 granted, $750,000 was earmarked for a working fund to be reimbursed by such payments. The remaining $200,000 was for administrative expenses, including operation of migration, recruitment centers in Mexico, reception centers in the U. S. and costs of medical examinations for the workers.

HOUSE

The House Appropriations Committee Aug. 9 recommended a supplemental appropriation of $950,000 for the Department of Labor. Of this amount $750,000 was for a working fund and the remaining $200,000 was for administrative expenses.

The House approved the resolution by voice vote Aug. 9. There was no debate on the measure and it was sent to the Senate without amendment.

SENATE

The Senate Appropriations Committee Aug 10 recommended the measure without amendment. Later that day it was taken up in the Senate, where an amendment by Tom Connally (D Tex.) was approved by voice vote. The amendment authorized the Secretary of Labor to appoint Mexican nationals for service in Mexico. Connally modified his amendment to limit it to a period of 120 days.

The bill was passed by the Senate Aug. 10 by voice vote.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Tom Connally D Tex.) — Authorize the Secretary of Labor to appoint Mexican nationals for service in Mexico for a period not to exceed 120 days. Voice vote.

House Agreement

The House agreed to the Senate amendment, by voice vote Aug. 13. The measure was signed by President Truman Aug. 16 and became Public Law 113.

Legislative

Summary — Both House and Senate on Oct. 4, 1951, completed action on the Legislative Appropriation Bill (HR 4496) which provided $73,805,507 for the legislative branch — including Congress — during fiscal 1952.

The House Appropriations Committee June 18 recommended $60,335,370 for the legislative branch but the total did not include funds for the Senate. The House permits the Senate to set its own allowance.

The House accepted the money recommendations of its Committee but added an amendment exempting the Digest of Public General Bills from a publication limitation imposed on the Legislative Reference Service. It passed the measure by voice vote June 19.

The Senate Appropriations Committee added Senate funds and recommended increases in other funds over House figures. It reported the bill Sept. 12, recommending a total appropriation of $73,767,651. The Senate accepted two amendments adding $52,856 to the total. It passed the $73,820,507 bill by voice vote Sept. 14.

Conferees agreed Oct. 1 on a compromise at $73,805,507, which the House and Senate both accepted by voice votes Oct. 4. President Truman signed the bill Oct. 11.

Provisions — The bill provided $73,805,507 for the legislative branch in fiscal 1952. Of this, the largest share went to finance Congress. The Senate received $12,395,605; the House of Representatives almost twice as much — $22,822,109. The distribution:

House of Representatives	$22,822,109
Senate	12,395,605
Government Printing Office	21,900,000
Library of Congress	8,695,160
Architect of the Capitol	7,501,868
Miscellaneous Agencies	490,765
	$73,805,507

HOUSE

Committee

The House Appropriations Committee June 18 recommended $60,335,370 for the legislative branch. This did not include funds for the Senate. As a courtesy, the House, which originates appropriation bills, leaves to the Senate the determination of its own allowance.

The Committee figure was a reduction of $8,617,950 from budget requests. The group spared the House from most of the cuts. Of the cut, $5,073,300 was taken from Government Printing Office, $2,480,000 from Architect of the Capitol and $982,920 from Library of Congress funds.

Fred E. Busbey (R Ill.), in a minority report, demanded an investigation by the Federal Bureau of Investigation of conditions of the House Folding Room with regard to shortage of publications and assignment of personnel. An investigation by the General Accounting Office in 1950 revealed that 30 employees who were charged to the payroll of the folding room did not actually work there.

The largest single fund — $22,791,925 — went to finance the House of Representatives. Other recommendations were: Government Printing Office, $21,900,000; Library of Congress, $8,455,280; Architect of the Capitol, $6,717,400; and miscellaneous agencies, $470,765.

Floor Action

The House considered the appropriation bill June 19 and passed it by voice vote without making any changes in the money recommendations of its Committee. It did accept by voice vote an amendment, by Ken Regan (D Tex.), to exempt the Digest of Public General Bills from a publication limitation imposed on the Legislative Reference Service.

There was little debate on the measure and as it was sent to the Senate, it carried $60,335,370 for the legislative branch.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Ken Regan (D Tex.) — Exempt Digest of Public General Bills from publication limitation imposed on Legislative Reference Service. Voice vote.

SENATE

Committee

The Senate Appropriations Committee recommended an increase of $13,432,281 above House figures. Most of the increase — $12,342,749 — was earmarked for the Senate. Other increases included $784,408 more for the Architect of the Capitol, $245,880 for the Library of Congress and $30,184 for the House of Representatives.

As it was reported to the Senate Sept. 12, the Committee recommendation totaled $73,767,651.

Floor Action

Before the Senate passed the bill Sept. 14, it accepted two amendments, both by Allen J. Ellender (D La.), adding $52,856.

One amendment added $50,000 to Senate committee employee funds. Ellender said that the additional funds would permit the Appropriations Committee to expand its staff and possibly establish a new "watchdog unit" to check on government spending. The other amendment added $2,856 to provide for an additional engineer for the Joint Senate and House Recording Committee.

An unsuccessful attempt was made by Homer Ferguson (R Mich.) to bar funds for payment of chauffeurs except for the Vice President, the Speaker of the House and the attending physician of the Capitol. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) also was unsuccessful when he proposed barring funds to pay Senate barbers who supply free haircuts and shaves for Senators.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Allen J. Ellender (D La.) — Increase by $50,000 funds for Senate committee employees. Voice vote.

Ellender — Increase by $2,856 funds for joint recording facilities. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Homer Ferguson (R Mich.) — Bar funds for payment of chauffeurs except for Vice President, Speaker of the House and attending physician of the Capitol. Standing vote.

Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) — Bar funds for Senate barbers unless fees are charged to cover costs of such services. Voice.

Senate passage of the measure Sept. 14 was by voice vote. As it was sent to conference, the bill provided $73,820,507 for the legislative branch.

CONFERENCE

Conferees agreed Oct. 1 on a compromise figure of $73,805,507 for the legislative branch. The House-Senate group accepted Senate figures in most cases. Of the total, $12,395,605 was for the Senate and $22,822,109 for the House of Representatives.

Both the House and Senate accepted the conference report Oct. 4. Agreement in both Houses was by voice vote.

The appropriation bill was signed by President Truman Oct. 11 and became Public Law 168.

Legislative Supplemental

HJ RES 267 — P.L. 49

Both the House and Senate completed action in one day, June 11, on a supplemental appropriation for the Legislative Branch which provided an additional $150,000 for fiscal 1951. The money was for Senate investigations.

The House Appropriations Committee recommended the full amount requested — $150,000 — June 11 and the House passed the measure by voice vote the same day. The Senate Appropriations Committee recommended it without change and the Senate, by voice vote, sent it to the White House. The President signed the bill June 15 and it became Public Law 49.

Legislative Deficiency Funds

H J Res 195 — P.L. 7

Both the House and Senate March 12 gave quick passage — by voice votes — to the 82nd Congress' first deficiency appropriation measure (H J Res 195), providing $831,155 in funds for cash-short operations of Congress itself.

The measure was the first money bill of any kind drawing completed action from the 82nd Congress. It was introduced by Rep. Christopher C. McGrath (D N. Y.) the same day it was passed by both houses. President Truman signed it into law on March 19.

Funds provided by H J Res 195 were:

$400,000 for Senate inquiries and investigations.

$200,000 for Senate housekeeping and "miscellaneous" items, such as telegrams and cablegrams, long-distance telephone calls, local telephone service, electric and standard typewriters and equipment, office rental, janitor supplies, laundry and news ticker service.

$5,000 for "Biographical Congressional Directory."

$35,000 for salaries of House Appropriations Committee.

$150,000 for contingent expenses of House special and select committees.

First, Second 1951 Supplementals

The First and Second Supplemental Appropriations Bills, 1951, were actually passed by the 81st Congress in 1950 to augment regular appropriations earlier granted for fiscal 1951 — the year between July 1, 1950, and June 30, 1951.

The extra money carried in the supplemental bills was needed because costs of the mobilization effort were exceeding the funds provided in the regular ("omnibus") appropriation measure of 1950.

But even the funds in the First and Second Supplemental Appropriations bills were not enough to tide the government's military and civil operations over to July 1, 1951, and the start of a new fiscal year. A chief reason was the entry of Communist China into the Korean war, calling for even greater expansion of America's defense preparation drive.

It became clear early in 1951 that more funds would be needed, and the Third and Fourth Supplemental Appropriations Bills, 1951, were the result.

(For information on the First and Second Supplemental bills, and the Omnibus Appropriation Bill, 1951, refer to CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, 1950, Pages 104-143.)

Third Supplemental

HR 3587—P.L. 45

Summary — During the first few weeks of 1951, President Truman requested a total of $843,463,579 in supplemental appropriations to keep a number of government departments and defense agencies running for the remainder of fiscal 1951. Under the pressures of the mobilization effort, the agencies concerned were in danger of running out of funds already appropriated for them for the year ending June 30, 1951.

The largest requests from the President were for the Federal Civil Defense Administration, the Defense Production Authority, the State Department's "Voice of America" program and the Post Office Department. Most all his requests, however, suffered short shrift at the hands of the Congress.

The House approved $473,165,368 for the President April 10. The Senate cut this down to $431,102,477, on May 10. A conference committee reduced the figure to $366,963,717. When the bill was sent to Mr. Truman May 21, it carried less than half of the funds he had requested.

Moreover, the bill carried a feature Mr. Truman harshly criticized when he signed the measure June 2. This was a provision drawn by Sen. James Kem (R Mo.) barring United States economic aid to any country shipping strategic materials to Russia or other Communist countries. The President called this curb "seriously defective" and suspended its operation for 90 days.

Provisions — These were the sums ultimately approved in the "Third Supplemental Appropriation Bill, 1951".

District of Columbia (to come out of the District's revenues)	$ 1,122,740

Agriculture Department	3,300,000
Interior Department	7,652,000

Federal Civil Defense Administration	31,750,000
Claims	3,103,881

In addition, the bill carried a legislative section (the so-called Kem rider) placing a restriction on the use of any funds appropriated for "economic or financial assistance (other than military assistance) to foreign nations." The restriction — to be in effect whenever American armed forces "are actively engaged in hostilities while carrying out any decision of the Security Council of the United Nations" — was as follows:

"No economic or financial assistance shall be provided . . . to any country which exports" materials which Russia, or her satellites, or Communist China and Korea could use in the "manufacture of arms, armaments or military material."

The Secretary of Defense was directed to certify to the Economic Cooperation Administration what articles would be embargoed under this provision. The ECA was made responsible for enforcing the ban. Exceptions to it were authorized "upon an official determination by the National Security Council that such exception is in the security interest of the United States."

In addition, nations receiving American economic aid were required to certify that they had not sent arms, armament or other war materials to Communist areas before they could receive further aid. This certification requirement was to go into effect 15 days after the measure became law.

The National Security Council also was required to report not only at once on each exception it might make to the trade ban, but also to submit a report every three months reviewing the exceptions it had approved and analyzing the trade with the Soviet bloc countries in cases where an exception had been made.

Background — President Truman sent special messages to Congress on two of the major projects the Third Supplemental Appropriation Bill was to finance. On March 1, he asked for an additional $1,454,000,000 for the defense production and civil defense programs. He sought: $1 billion in borrowing authority for the Defense Production Administration, plus $51 million in cash appropriations for the same agency; and $403 million in cash appropriations for the new Federal Civil Defense Administration.

The $1 billion in borrowing authority was asked to enable the DPA to make loans for expansion of plant production capacity and supply under the Defense Production Act. A central provision of that Act authorized the DPA to make loans of $2 billion through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the General Services Administration and the Department of Interior, to spur production of materials needed for defense. Substantial loans already had been made, said the President.

The $51 million in cash was requested to finance operations during the remainder of the fiscal year of the new defense agencies as well as regular departments and agencies having additional emergency duties.

The $403 million requested for the FCDA included: $128 million for operations; $250 million for protective facilities, and $25 million for the civil defense procurement fund.

Later, on March 5, Mr. Truman asked for an additional $97.5 million for the "Voice of America."

"Present world conditions", he said, "make it imperative that we avail ourselves of every possible means for presenting the truth to the rest of the world and for counteracting the distortions and untruths that the Communist leaders and their puppets are spreading."

The money, he said, would go to complete radio broadcasting facilities to cover "critical areas in the world".

HOUSE

Committee

The various subcommittees of the House Appropriations unit buckled down to work on President Truman's requests for $843,463,579 shortly after all were received. Officials from the agencies affected by the bill testified at hearings before the subcommittees. By the first of April, the full Committee has reached agreement on the kind of a supplemental money bill it wanted. As formally reported April 6, the measure carried a recommended total of $478,586,368.

The deepest Committee slashes were made in the State Department's Voice of America program, for which Truman had requested $97,500,000, and the $403 million appropriation sought for the Federal Civil Defense Administration.

Despite a Presidential appeal for approval of the full amount of the VOA outlay for a proposed new transmitter "ring" around Russia, the Committee reduced the item to $9,533,939, contending the program was mismanaged and poorly planned and projects already under way should be completed before new ones were undertaken.

Civil defense funds were slashed by $216,250,000 to $186,750,000. The money actually granted was, moreover, further limited by the fact that $100 million was earmarked as an "emergency fund" to be available only upon declaration of a state of civil defense emergency. The Committee held that the agency's plans were still "nebulous" and coordinated "only slightly" with those of the military forces.

The size of the government defense payroll and the nature of the national emergency drew some sharp observations from the Committee in its report. "This nation has been in an emergency since the end of (World War II)," it flatly stated. It described this period, then, as only a "normal emergency."

Had government agencies after World War II pointed their activities "toward national defense" instead of showing all-out postwar haste to resume "normal peacetime functions," said the Committee, much of the money sought to expand staffs would not be necessary.

Even so, it characterized recruitment of "a new army of specialists" as "unrealistic . . . and wholly unreasonable." It said the existing 2,300,000 federal civilian employees should be enough and that those needed for the defense program should be transferred as needed from those already on the payroll.

Floor Action

The House opened debate on HR 3587 on April 9. The Committee's cut of $364,877,211 was sustained and the House also agreed to two floor-proposed cuts, totaling $5,421,000. These were:

$4,971,000 from the $38,000,000 requested for the Office of Price Stabilization, and

$450,000 for the Army Corps of Engineers to proceed with a study of power development of the Niagara River. (Technically, this item remained in the bill but Members decided on a standing vote, 68 to 14, to remove it from the cash total and require instead that the sum be derived from already-available flood control funds.)

The OPS money was reduced at the suggestion of Appropriations Committee Chairman Clarence Cannon (D Mo.) who said the agency had not been able to recruit all the employees it wanted and wouldn't need all the funds originally requested. The House endorsed the reduction by voice vote.

While voting tentatively in the Committee of the Whole on April 9, the House approved by voice vote an amendment reducing by $750,000 the amount available to the Commodity Credit Corporation for administrative expenses. A separate vote was demanded on April 10 — as House rules permit with respect to any amendment approved in Committee of the Whole — and Members subsequently rejected the CCC cut on a roll-call ballot, 159 to 250. (See vote, p. 000.)

Just before the final vote on the bill, an anti-strike, anti-Communist rider that has appeared in nearly all appropriation bills since 1942 was stricken on a parliamentary technicality. Rep. Samuel W. Yorty (D Calif.) protested against language in the rider making it a felony for any federal employee, paid from the bill's funds, to belong to an organization that asserts the right to strike against the government. The rider also applies the same penalty to workers who strike against the government. Yorty contended only that employees should not be prohibited from belonging to strike-advocating organizations, and he raised a point of order against this part of the rider. But Cannon then raised a point of order against the entire provision. He said the House should accept all or nothing. The Cannon point was upheld on the ground that it was legislation on an appropriation bill.

Then the House passed the entire bill by a voice vote. As sent to the Senate, the $473,165,368 bill carried these funds:

	Requested	Granted
Legislative	$ 293,500	$ 293,500
State-Justice Commerce-Judiciary	113,929,384	23,839,323
Treasury-P. O.	169,080,000	160,980,000
Labor-FSA	3,000,000	3,000,000
Agriculture	7,521,150	3,000,000
Interior	8,503,000	7,652,000
Independent Offices	72,637,500	47,622,500
Foreign Aid	12,500,000	5,000,000
Defense Agencies	454,000,000	219,779,000
Claims & Judgments	1,999,045	1,999,045

John W. Heselton (R Mass.) — Cut $750,000 from administrative funds of Commodity Credit Corporation. Teller vote, 69 to 57.

Glenn R. Davis (R Wis.) — Transfer $450,000 from general flood control funds for survey of proposed power development of Niagara River, instead of making an appropriation. Division, 68 to 14.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

William E. Miller (R N.Y.) — Recommit bill for purposes of striking out entire Niagara power study fund. Voice.

Heselton (R Mass.) — Separate vote on amendment reducing CCC funds, demanded by Cannon (D Mo.). Roll call, 159 to 250.

SENATE

Committee

After its various subcommittees had studied the House-passed bill, the Senate Appropriations Committee April 30 approved a totally revised version. As the Committee sent it to the floor, the measure recommended $430,102,477 in funds, even less than the $473,165,368 approved by the House. President Truman had submitted a budget request of about twice as much — $896,116,293.

Major actions of the Committee were:

1. It approved, on a 10-9 party-line vote, the House's 90 per cent slash in funds for the State Department's "Voice of America" program. The Committee agreed with the House decision to provide the program an additional $9,533,939 instead of the $97,500,000 sought for speeded-up construction of a transmitter project to ring Russia with Voice outlets.

2. It cut deeply into funds for the Federal Civil Defense Administration, recommending a total of only $84 million for civilian preparations against atomic attack, as compared with the House appropriation of $186,750,000. The Committee reversed the House's plan for spending the appropriation. It recommended $74 million for stockpiling medical equipment, where the House had provided $1,750,000; and $10 million for purchase of organizational equipment for the states, as compared with a House appropriation of $5 million.

3. It cut out the House's $100 million civil defense emergency fund, to be available only upon proclamation of a civilian emergency, in line with a protest by FCDA Administrator Millard Caldwell that the fund was an "idle gesture". (Caldwell, a transcript of Committee hearings on the bill revealed, said funds for pre-emergency preparations were much more vital.)

4. Cut out entirely was $80 million approved by the House for federal contributions to the states to aid in building protective shelters and providing communications. No explanation was given.

5. Further cuts were made in House funds for agencies performing functions under the Defense Production Act of 1950 — where the House had granted $33,029,000, the Committee recommended $27,331,895. To this, however, would be added approximately $11 million from funds already appropriated for other purposes.

6. One major increase was approved. It was $50 million for federal grants for emergency school construction in defense areas, under a program authorized last year by Congress in Public Law 815. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 181.) (This estimate was submitted to the Committee by President Truman after the House had acted on the bill.)

Floor Action

The Senate moved into action on HR 3587 on May 9, and rejected by a standing vote a proposal by William F. Knowland (R Calif.) that would have provided the Federal Civil Defense Administration with $25 million to make grants to states and municipalities for civil defense and bomb protective facilities. The House had included $80 million in the bill for this purpose, as against a request by President Truman for $250 million. The vote by which the Knowland amendment was rejected was not officially counted, but only three Senators — Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.), Edward J. Thye (R Minn.) and Knowland — were seen to stand in support of the proposal.

Sen. Styles Bridges, (R N. H.) during the debate, asked Knowland if he looked on the $25 million as a "stepping stone" toward huge federal funds for a civilian defense program. Knowland said he only thought the program should be started, since it had been authorized by the 1950 Federal Civil Defense Act. Homer Ferguson (R Mich.) said he thought it would be better to deal with the question as a regular appropriation for fiscal 1952 instead of as a deficiency appropriation for 1951. Guy Cordon (R Ore.) said Civil Defense Administrator Caldwell had admitted he didn't know now "what kind of shelter should be built" and, he argued, the appropriation should be held up until basic research had been completed.

Kem Rider

In a major action May 10, the Senate voted to cut off all United States economic aid to nations that ship war-making materials to Russia and China. The action was taken on an amendment sponsored jointly by Sens. James P. Kem (R Mo.), Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.), Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.) and George W. Malone (R Nev.). Its sponsors said they wanted to force the Administration to take a sterner attitude toward British shipments of strategic materials to Communist China.

Wherry recalled that he had successfully offered an identical amendment last year when the First Supplemental Appropriation Bill for 1951 was before the Senate and that it had been blocked by the House which insisted on a mere "permissive" ban. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, 1950, p. 136.) The Nebraskan said he hoped the Senate would refuse to approve "watered-down, permissive legislation."

Sen. Carl Hayden (D Ariz.), floor manager of the appropriation measure, accepted the Kem amendment on behalf of the Appropriations Committee. Had he raised a point of order against it, the amendment would have been stricken unless a two-thirds vote had been mustered in favor of suspending the Senate rules which forbid legislation on an appropriation bill. Kem's proposal involved legislative language. The Missourian had filed a notice of intention to move suspension of the rules, but Hayden's agreement to take the amendment to conference with the House eliminated necessity for the suspension move.

However, Hayden insisted the amendment was ill-advised in two repects: (1) it covered only a period when the United States was engaged in war, and (2) it applied only to economic and not to military assistance.

The Senate also defeated May 10 by roll-call vote, 35 to 41, an attempt by Sen. Robert S. Kerr (D Okla.) to make available an additional $50 million for surveys and school construction in areas where enrollment has jumped because of government installations. (For vote, see page 175.) The bill contained $50 million for this, but Kerr sought to double the sum. He said even $100 million would not be enough for the government to meet half the need in defense-harassed school districts.

Among its other actions on the bill, the Senate approved a Committee-sponsored amendment striking out a House provision which would limit the price shipping companies could get from the government for ships originally purchased from the government, to the price paid for the ship, less depreciation value. But before doing this, the chamber adopted by voice vote an amendment by John J. Williams (R Del.) establishing the courts as the final arbiter of "just compensation" which the owners might claim for the vessels.

By voice vote on May 10, the Senate then approved its version of the bill. A total of $431,102,477 was supplied. Because this differed greatly from the $473,165,368 authorized by the House bill, the two measures were sent to conference.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

William F. Knowland (R Calif.) — Add $1 million to civilian defense funds for training and education of defense workers, and research and development of defense methods. Standing vote.

John J. Williams (R Del.) — Permit ship owners to resort to courts for determination of compensation for ships purchased from government and sold back to, or requisitioned by, government. Voice.

James P. Kem (R Mo.) — Ban economic aid to countries shipping war-making materials to Russia or China. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Knowland (R Calif.) — Add $25 million for grants to states for bomb protective facilities. Voice.

Robert S. Kerr (D Okla.) — Add $50 million to school construction grants. Roll call, 35-41.

CONFERENCE

The conferees reached agreement May 18. The compromise bill they reported still carried the so-called Kem rider banning Marshall Plan aid to any country sending war-making materials to Russia or China. Other provisions made deep reductions in appropriations requested for the State Department's Voice of America and for the new Federal Civil Defense Administration.

The civil defense fund was slashed by the conferees from a proposed $403 million to only $31,750,000. The State Department's Voice of America was pared from $97.5 million to a mere $9,533,939.

The economic aid ban was strengthened by these additional features authored by the conferees:

1. Nations receiving American economic aid were to certify that they had not sent arms, armament or other war materials to Communist areas before they could receive further aid. This certification requirement was to go into effect 15 days after the measure became law.

2. The National Security Council was required to report not only at once on each exception it might make to the trade ban, but also to submit a report every three months reviewing the exceptions it had approved and analyzing the trade with the Soviet bloc countries in cases where an exception had been made.

The $31,750,000 granted the FCDA was earmarked primarily for grants-in-aid to states for the purchase of medical supplies and equipment and for training and education of civil defense workers. The language of the provision specified this distribution of the appropriation: $1,750,000 for operations of FCDA; $5 million for a procurement fund to match state appropriations for organizational materials; and $25 million to "be equally matched with state funds, of which $20 million shall be for medical supplies and equipment and $5 million for training and education."

Eliminated altogether in the compromise was a $100 million emergency fund earmarked for use only upon proclamation of a civil defense emergency. The House had proposed the fund, but the Senate disagreed. The Senate had proposed $75 million for civil defense communications systems but this was disapproved by the House.

The $9,533,939 allowed the Voice of America was for completion of radio construction projects already under way. The VOA had asked for a total of $97.5 million for construction of 13 additional transmitting facilities, including several located on ships, to form a ring around Russia and the Soviet bloc countries.

Funds for this project were knocked out entirely by both House and Senate, after the House Appropriations Committee reported that the VOA project "lacked definiteness and was so devoid of specific data that it could not be considered a plan of action."

The Committee reaffirmed its belief in a "strong, effective Voice of America" but deplored what it called "mismanagement and poor planning" in both administrative and engineering phases of the program.

The House and Senate approved the conference report by voice votes May 21, which cleared the bill to the White House.

FINAL ACTION

President Truman June 2 signed the Third Supplemental Appropriation Act for 1951 (HR 3587) but only after strongly objecting to a "seriously defective" section barring United States economic aid to any country shipping strategic materials to Communist countries.

In a 2,500-word statement, he said that he signed the bill because its funds were "urgently needed" for essential government activities, implying he would, otherwise, have vetoed it.

He criticized the Kem "rider" for making "broad and sweeping changes in our procedures for restricting trade between the free world and the Soviet Union and its satellites." He called for prompt repeal of the provision, and asked for separate legislation if Congress decided some restrictions were necessary.

". . . If we cut our aid to a friendly country, we might hurt ourselves more than we hurt the Soviet Union," the President pointed out. " . . . Cutting off this aid could strike a death blow at the tremendous defense effort in which the free nations are now engaged."

Mr. Truman also observed that the restriction was a "major piece of legislation affecting our foreign policy" that had not been considered by the foreign policy committees of either the Senate or House of Representatives.

Mr. Truman listed three principles for an "improved" measure:

1. Its purpose should not be "blindly to cut off as much trade as possible, but to cut off trade only when such action will add to the security of the United States and the rest of the world."
2. It should compare the value of the goods received from the Soviet bloc to those sent to those countries, distinguish between commodities of various types, and consider the value of the increased strength of freedom provided by United States economic assistance.
3. It should provide for "simple, effective and straightforward administration."

Sen. Kem, sponsor of the amendment, made it plain in a statement that he was not satisfied with the President's position. "This State Department jargon is unconvincing," he said. "It will not persuade the American people that they should send aid to Marshall Plan countries to be used to shoot down our sons in Korea."

On June 4, Kem delivered a speech in the Senate, accusing President Truman of a "thinly veiled intimation" that he does not intend to carry out a directive of Congress to cut off economic aid to any country which lets war materials go to Communist areas. Kem answered Mr. Truman's plea for modification of the ban by demanding further strengthening of its restrictions. He said it should also cut off military aid.

Nevertheless, Mr. Truman took the advice of his National Security Council June 15 and suspended operation of the Kem rider for 90 days.

Emergency Defense Funds

H J Res 238—P.L. 22

Both the House and Senate approved by voice votes April 23 an emergency resolution (H J Res 238) making $10 million available immediately for continued defense production activities of the government. President Truman signed the measure April 25.

The appropriation was earmarked for all departments and agencies of the government having functions under the Defense Production Act of 1950.

The money was to be charged against the then-pending Third Supplemental Appropriations Act. (See page 154.)

Summary — Congress completed work May 28 on the Fourth Supplemental Appropriation bill for 1951 (HR 3842), carrying $6,442,668,000 in additional funds for national defense in the fiscal year ending June 30. President Truman signed it May 31, without comment.

Except for $59,323,000 for the Atomic Energy Commission and $3,672,000 for the Interior Department, all the money went to the Army, Navy and the Air Force for immediate procurement of military "hardware" such as tanks and planes.

The House passed the bill April 26, authorizing a total of $6,468,206,000. The Senate approved the bill May 24, after chopping $25,538,000 off that figure. The lower chamber acceded to the cut.

HOUSE

After deliberations by its various subcommittees, the House Appropriations Committee submitted April 25 an emergency defense appropriations bill to provide the military services $6,468,206,000 for their immediate needs. The bill (HR 3842) bore the official designation: "Fourth Supplemental Appropriation Bill, 1951."

The amount it carried was thus in addition to the $48 billion already voted the military for the 1951 fiscal year ending June 30. Also, it was not a part of the regular military budget for fiscal 1952, beginning July 1, which was expected to reach at least $60 billion.

Most of the multi - billion - dollar grant was to be used to buy weapons of war — tanks, guns, guided missiles and airplanes — and for tooling and expanding production capacity of government-owned or privately owned facilities. Much of the money for equipment also was to go to meet cost increases since the war began in Korea. These were among points noted in the House Appropriations Committee's report on the bill, which was submitted April 25.

Here is a resume of the big allotment:

	Requested	Granted
Navy	1,645,812,000	1,645,812,000
Air Force	1,925,000,000	1,925,000,000
Army	2,850,869,000	2,850,594,000
Atomic Energy Commission	51,300,000	46,800,000

The AEC funds were earmarked for construction work, including a "Project X", a top-secret development which the Committee reviewed "off the record."

A cut of $4.5 million was made in the total request, though no reduction was made in "Project X". The Committee said "revaluation and the elimination of unessential features of projects, without curtailing utility, should permit substantial savings."

The $275,000 cut in Army funds came from the Army Finance Service and had the approval of the Army, said the Committee.

The House passed the emergency measure April 26 by voice vote, without making any changes in the Committee's draft.

SENATE

The Senate's Appropriations Committee studied the House-passed bill, and made changes in it. As reported to the Senate May 22, the bill carried a total of only $6,438,996,000. The Committee earmarked $59,323,000 for the AEC ($12,523,000 more than the House had approved) but chopped down the Defense Department figure to $6,379,673,000.

Of the latter amount, the Army was to get $2,847,500,000, the Navy $1,645,400,000 and the Air Force $1,886,600,000.

The Committee, in its report on the bill, attacked the inflated costs of military items, and noted that "in special items increases in cost have ranged as high as 340 to 380 per cent." However, it said these cases were "by no means typical" and that it was more likely defense buying power had been reduced by "20 to 30 per cent" by increased costs.

The Senate debated the bill May 24. Sharp criticism of military officials for "failing" to hold down skyrocketing cost of arms was expressed by Sen. Burnet R. Maybank (D S.C.). He said military leaders had "completely failed" to hold down prices, largely through "lack of interest." He asserted also that present costs of military equipment were "utterly ridiculous." He said Defense Department officials had failed to bring small business into the defense program and that prices shot up as a result.

Sen. Homer E. Capehart (R Ind.) also insisted there was "no justification" for the tremendous increases in price of military equipment.

Late May 24 the Senate passed HR 3842 by a voice vote after the Senate rejected an amendment to cut the military funds by $318,984,000. Sponsored by Sen. Francis Case (R S.D.), it would have required the Defense Department to "save" 5 per cent of the total amount of its appropriation. Case asserted there was nothing "sacred" about defense bills. Sen. Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.) argued against Case, saying inflation had already reduced the defense dollar too greatly to permit further cuts.

All money recommended by the Appropriations Committee when it reported the bill—a total of $6,438,996,000—was approved by the Senate. In addition, the Senate adopted an amendment by Sen. Carl Hayden (D Ariz.) giving $3,672,000 to the Interior Department for work on the Bonneville Dam in Washington.

Only one Committee recommendation was turned down. This would have provided for a transfer of $25 million from the Defense Department's funds to the Office of Education, Federal Security Agency, for construction of schools on federal property at defense installations. This was rejected by division vote after Sen. Everett M. Dirksen (R Ill.) described the provision as a possible "opening wedge" for the socialization of education. Also rejected by voice vote was a floor amendment by Sens. Theodore Francis Green (D R.I.) and John O. Pastore (D R.I.) to add $1,243,000 for construction and repair of sewage facilities at the Newport, R.I., naval base.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Carl Hayden (D Ariz.) — Add $3,672,000 for the Interior Department for work on the Bonneville Dam in Washington. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Theodore Francis Green (D R.I.) and John O. Pastore (D R.I.) — Add $1,243,000 for construction and repair of sewage facilities at the Newport, R.I., naval base.

As passed by the Senate, the bill carried a total of $6,442,668,000, which was $25,538,000 less than the $6,468,206,000 approved by the House. A joint conference committee to reconcile this difference seemed necessary at first, but on May 28 the lower chamber accepted the Senate cuts. This eliminated the need for a conference, and cleared the measure to the White House, where President Truman signed it into law May 31.

Summary — As it became law, the first Supplemental Appropriation bill for fiscal 1952 (HR 5215) carried a total of $1,676,246,976 in additional appropriations. The measure was designed to take care of fund needs which developed after Congress began consideration of the regular appropriation bills and to provide funds for the emergency agencies to carry out provisions of the Defense Production Act and the Civil Defense Act.

The House passed the measure Aug. 20 after sanctioning deep cuts made by its Committee and approving additional reductions made on the floor. While the President had requested $2,302,871,116, the House - approved bill carried $1,586,587,316. Biggest slashes were made in funds for the defense production and civil defense activities. In some cases the House denied any funds at all for defense production functions.

Some of the House cuts were restored by the Senate Appropriations Commitee which Oct. 6 recommended a bill carrying $1,751,196,781. The Senate passed the measure Oct. 8 after making slight reductions in Committee recommendations. As it was sent to conference, the bill's total was $1,745,263,126. Most of the amendments reducing funds were sponsored by Sen. Styles Bridges (R N.H.).

Conferees agreed Oct. 19 on a compromise figure of $1,676,246,976 in supplemental funds. The House and Senate accepted this conference version Oct. 20 and the bill was signed into law Nov. 1.

Provisions — Funds provided in the Supplemental Appropriation bill fell into three categories: Those for the regular federal agencies which needed more money to cover operating costs during fiscal 1952, those for both special mobilization agencies and regular agencies carrying out provisions of the Defense Production Act, and those for special agencies to carry out functions of the Civil Defense Act.

Most of the appropriation — $1,437,156,101 — was granted as supplemental money for a number of regular government operations. These included Executive Departments, the Legislative Branch, the District of Columbia, the Federal Security Agency and some 30 independent offices.

The independent offices received the largest share of the $1.4 billion which went to the regular agencies. Among them, the Atomic Energy Commission received $265,965,000. The Displaced Persons Commission was granted $1,475,000 by the unfreezing of certain funds and the National Science Foundation was allowed $3,500,000. The General Services Administration received $790,216,500 for strategic and critical materials, $2,850,000 for operating expenses and $31,500,000 for emergency operating expenses.

Defense Production Funds

The next largest chunk of the money — $164,145,875 — was provided to carry out defense production activities. For civil defense functions, $74,945,000 was appropriated.

The measure also provided new "Whitten amendment" regulations regarding job security and promotions of federal employees. Changes made included these provisions:

Transfers of permanent employees made on a temporary or indefinite basis since Sept. 1, 1950, would be changed to a permanent basis.

Reemployment rights would be provided for permanent employees who transferred to defense activities.

Promotions would be made only after employees served one year in the next lower grade but exceptions would be made in some cases.

Permanent employees who transferred from one agency to another would be permitted to retain the permanent status held in the previous post.

(The Whitten amendment was offered in 1950 by Rep. Jamie L. Whitten (D Miss.) to the Supplemental Appropriation law financing U.S. entry into the Korean war. CQ Almanac Vol. VI, 1950, pp. 130, 134, 137.)

HOUSE

Committee

The House Appropriations Committee reported the first Supplemental Appropriation bill Aug. 17 recommending a total of $1,677,566,316 for the agencies during fiscal 1952. This was $625,304,800 below budget requests. Largest cuts were made in the Civil Defense Administration and Emergency Agencies' funds.

The Committee, criticizing the lack of a "realistic, well - co-ordinated plan" for civil defense, slashed proposed CDA funds about 88 per cent — from $535,000,000 to $65,255,000.

Budget requests for defense production activities totaled $262,409,000 but the House group chopped off $68,319,000 and recommended $194,090,000 for the mobilization agencies.

Reductions also were made in fund-requests for the regular federal departments; cuts here totaled $87,240,000. Reduced most were the fund recommendations for the independent offices group; they were trimmed $65,363,000.

For Independent Offices

Among the independent offices, the Atomic Energy Commission's appropriation request was reduced $13 million to a total of $260 million. The Displaced Persons Commission was denied any of its $2,431,000 request and the Federal Communications Commission was granted $1 million — a reduction of $340,000. The General Services Administration requested $800 million for its strategic and critical materials fund, $3,050,000 for operating expenses and $42,778,000 for emergency operating expenses. For these purposes the Committee recommended $790,216,500, $2,500,000, and $21,389,000 respectively. The National Science Foundation another independent offices agency, was handed a 98 per cent cut; the Committee recommended that it be appropriated only $300,000 of its $14 million request.

The Committee inserted in its report a new procedure to be followed by the Chief of the Army Engineers prior to any authorization for construction of projects. It would require a complete planning report to be submitted to Congress before appropriations were made, to be followed by progress reports. The group lashed out at the Engineers in its report and accused them of adding to the taxpayers' burden by misleading Congress on the cost of civil works projects.

The Committee also made changes in the 1950 Whitten amendment which relates to Federal employees. Under the changes, transfers in the same or lower grades would be made on a permanent rather than temporary basis, promotions would be made only after employees served at least one year in the next lower grade, reemployment rights in activities from which employees are transferred to defense work or military service would be protected, and rights accompanying permanent status would be preserved for employees changed to temporary status.

Floor Action

The bill was brought to the floor and passed by voice vote Aug. 20. During the one day of debate the House approved Republican - sponsored amendments which slashed over $90 million from the Committee recommendation. As it was sent to the Senate the bill provided $1,586,578,316 in supplemental funds.

Biggest House reductions came with acceptance of two amendments cutting funds for the emergency agencies. One amendment, by Rep. George R. Schwabe (R Okla.), cut $52,600,000 from the salaries and expenses fund of the Economic Stabilizations Agency.

The other amendment, sponsored by Rep. Norris Cotton (R N. H.) and accepted on a 114-75 standing vote, deleted sections providing $5,250,000 for the Interior Department, $600,000 for the Federal Security Agency, $290,000 for the Agriculture Department, $2,550,000 for the Labor Department, $800,000 for the Housing and Home Finance Agency, and $150,000 for the Justice Department. This left the agencies with no funds to carry out provisions of the Defense Production Act.

Despite warnings from Rep. Melvin Price (D Ill.) that Russia had more and larger atomic bombs than previously was believed, the House approved its Committee's cut in the Civil Defense Administration funds.

Funds for the independent offices agencies underwent further trimming on the House floor. Accepted on a 81-73 standing vote was an amendment by Rep. John Phillips (R Calif.) deleting a section providing $1 million for the Federal Communications Commission. Another Phillips amendment accepted on a 85-59 standing vote, denied $2.5 million to the General Services Administration for operating expenses and a third amendment by Phillips, accepted on a 114-78 standing vote, denied GSA $21,389,000 for emergency expenses.

The House refused, however, to accept its Committee's recommendation that a new procedure for authorization requests be followed by the Army Engineers. It accepted, on a 113-57 standing vote, an amendment by Rep. Henry D. Larcade, Jr., (D La.) to eliminate the section but several House Members severely criticized the Engineers for waste and extravagance.

Also accepted by the House was an amendment by Rep. Lawrence H. Smith (R Wis.) limiting to 50 per cent of the amount provided in the bill the funds for persons engaged in information and publicity programs.

SENATE

Committee

The Senate Appropriations Committee reported the bill Oct. 6 after restoring many of the House cuts. The Committee recommended a total of $1,751,196,781 in supplemental funds.

Restoration of some funds for defense production activities which the House denied was recommended by the Senate Committee but the amounts were below budget requests. Agencies receiving these funds were the Federal Security Agency, the Departments of Interior, Agriculture, Justice, Labor and the Housing and Home Finance Agency.

Supplemental funds for the independent offices generally were increased. Senate Committee recommendations were: Atomic Energy Commission, $271,928,655; General Services Administration, $790,216,500 for critical materials, $3,080,000 for operating expenses, and $35,692,350 for emergency opearting expenses; and National Science Foundation, $6,300,000.

The Committee followed House action in granting no funds for the Displaced Persons Commission but recommended that limitations on certain DPC funds be decreased, thus "unfreezing" $1,975,000 for the agency.

The Senate group also recommended funds for several agencies to which the House had denied funds.

Although the Committee proposed an increase in funds for the Civil Defense Administration by $32,380,000 over House figures, the amount — $97,635,000 — was still far below requests of $535,000,000.

The Committee eased some of the curbs on promotions on federal employees by allowing the House's one year ban on promotions to be waived in certain cases and allowing promotions of more than one grade in some instances.

Floor Action

The first Supplemental Appropriation bill was passed by voice vote by the Senate Oct. 8 after slight reductions were made in the Committee recommendations. As it was sent to conference, the measure carried $1,745,407,981. This was $158,820,665 more than the House voted.

The reduction drive was led by Sen. Stlyes Bridges (R N.H.) who gained acceptance of six amendments reducing funds for defense production activities. Bridges accused the agencies of "riding on the coattails of defense."

On a 42-20 roll - call vote, the Senate accepted an amendment by Bridges to reduce by $1,251,625 the funds for functions of the Department of Interior under the DPA. It also accepted, on a 40-32 roll call, another Bridges amendment reducing by $532,175 funds for functions of the Department of Commerce under the DPA. (For voting, see page 181.)

The Senate accepted an amendment by Olin D. Johnston (D S.C.) to delete a House rider which would have forced the new defense agencies to cut salaries of their employees.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Styles Bridges (R N.H.) — Reduce by $500,000 Treasury funds for administering public debt. Voice Vote.

Carl Hayden (D Ariz.) — Increase by $384,000 limitation on personnel service fund of Bureau of Reclamation. Voice.

Bridges — Reduce by $1,250,000 fund for Alaska housing under the Housing and Home Finance Agency. Voice. Vote was later reconsidered and reduction was changed to $750,000. Voice.

Bridges — Reduce by $532,175 funds for functions of Department of Commerce under Defense Production Act. Roll - call vote, 40-32.

Bridges — Reduce by $1,415,625 fund for functions of Department of Interior under Defense Production Act, modified by Bridges to reduce fund by $1,251,625. Roll - call, 42-20.

Bridges — Reduce by $674,414 funds for functions of Department of Agriculture under Defense Production Act. Voice.

CONFERENCE

The conference committee reported the bill Oct. 19, agreeing on a total of $1,676,246,976 in supplemental appropriations.

Of this amount, $164,145,875 was granted for agencies to carry out defense production activities and $74,945,000 was allowed for the Civil Defense Administration. The remainder — $1,437,156,101 — was distributed among the regular federal agencies.

Among the independent offices, the Atomic Energy Commission received $265,965,000 and the House agreed to grant the Displaced Persons Commission $1,475,000 by decreasing limitations on funds. The House also agreed to appropriate funds for operating expenses of the General Service Administration but the amount was below Senate figures.

The House conferees accepted the Senates modifications of the Whitten amendment.

Information staffs of the mobilization agencies were spared drastic cuts as the conferees eliminated the House provision reducing appropriations for such staffs by 50 per cent of budget requests.

Both the House and Senate accepted the conference report Oct. 20, by voice votes.

The President signed the bill Nov. 1 but criticized the "tragically insufficent" funds for civil defense. He also attacked the cuts in funds requested for defense production activities and said, "there is no economy in short - changing these programs."

Summary—Funds for the big construction program which Congress authorized in the Military and Naval Construction Bill were appropriated in a $4,146,407,108 Second Supplemental Appropriation for fiscal 1952.

Action on the construction authorization (HR 4914, see page 293) was completed Sept. 18, 1951. The Second Supplemental bill, providing the money for construction plus some other funds, was sent to the President Oct. 20.

Most of the money — $3,890,296,392 — in the supplemental appropriation was earmarked for the Department of Defense, to be used by the Army, Navy and Air Force for construction of barracks, depots and bases in this country and abroad. The measure also provided funds for continuing construction of the atomic energy plant at Savannah River, S. C. Smaller amounts were included for the legislative branch, the Federal Security Agency, the Department of Interior and the independent offices.

Budget requests totaled $5,146,495,570 but the House Appropriations Committee reported the bill Oct. 8, recommending $4,440,559,420. The House whittled at the measure and sent it to the Senate Oct. 11 carrying $4,428,357,970. The only real dispute in the House was over an appropriation for expanding the Grandview, Mo., Airport near the family farm of President Truman. The House refused, 127-183, to accept a motion by Rep. H. R. Gross (R Iowa) to recommit the bill to delete the section, and would not accept a Gross amendment to cut it from the bill.

The bill underwent further trimming in the Senate Appropriations Committee which Oct. 18 recommended a total $4,016,698,266.

Slight increases were made in the Senate, which passed the bill Oct. 19 by voice vote. The Senate pegged the total at $4,020,198,266 and the bill was given to a conference committee to resolve differences.

Conferees agreed Oct. 20 on a $4,146,407,108 total.

Later that day, House and Senate agreed to the conference report. In both chambers, the final voting was by voice. The bill was signed into law Nov. 1.

Provisions—Most of the money in the Second Supplemental Bill went to the Defense Department. Of the $4,146,407,108, the Defense Department received $3,890,296,392 for construction. Of this the Air Force share was largest — $2,071,200,000. The Army received $1 billion and the Navy $819,096,392.

The measure also carried additional funds for the regular federal agencies:

Defense Department	$3,890,296,392
Independent Offices	245,603,000
Federal Security Agency	4,250,000
Interior Department	3,635,000
Claims for Damages, Audited Claims, Judgments	1,885,416
Legislative Branch	550,500
Agriculture Department	186,800

Most of the funds for the independent offices went to the Atomic Energy Commission. The AEC was granted $200 million for continuing construction of the Savannah River, S. C., atomic energy plant.

General provisions included an amendment barring funds for payment of work done in the U. S. under a cost-plus-a-fixed-fee contract if estimates exceeded $25,000, unless approved by the Secretary of Defense. Also barred were funds for construction or replacement of laundry or dry-cleaning facilities in the U. S., unless approved by the Secretary of Defense.

HOUSE

Committee

The House Appropriations Committee reported the bill Oct. 8 with a recommended appropriation of $4,440,559,420. This was $705,936,150 below budget requests. For defense installations in this country and abroad, the Committee recommended $4,198,523,208. Of this amount, $2,112,172,550 was for the Air Force, $1,159,326,198 for the Army and $927,024,460 for the Navy.

In reducing funds for military public works, the Committee said some estimates had been made hastily and were excessive. It recommended "better management" of construction funds by the Defense Department.

The balance of the money in the bill principally was for the Atomic Energy Commission. The Committee recommended $200 million for the Commission for continuing construction of the Savannah River, S. C., atomic energy plant. The AEC had requested $484,240,000 for this purpose.

Small funds were also recommended for the regular federal agencies. These included the Legislative Branch, the Federal Security Agency, the independent offices, and the Departments of Agriculture and Interior.

Floor Action

Consideration of the measure began in the House Oct. 10 and it was passed on a roll-call vote, 301 - 19, on Oct. 11. Before final passage, however, the House stripped $12,201,450 from its Committee recommendations. As it was sent to the Senate, the House bill carried $4,428,357,970.

The only floor fight centered around a $12,821,000 appropriation for improvements on the Grandview, Mo., Airport near the family farm of President Truman. H. R. Gross (R Iowa), led the unsuccessful battle to eliminate the project. The House refused, by a roll-call vote of 127 to 183, to recommit the bill with instructions to delete the item. (For voting, see page 000). It also refused, on a standing voice, 81 - 36, to accept an amendment by Gross to cut the airport appropriation from the bill.

The House Appropriations Committee reported that the 823 - acre airport was to become an interceptor, headquarters and operational base. Gross charged that the proposed money was a "scheme to turn an already dead horse into a big winner" and already had started a "Truman land boom."

Gross also said a candidate picked by President Truman to defeat former Rep. Roger Slaughter (D Mo.) in the 1946 primaries, Enos A. Axtell, was buying up Grandview land and intended to convert the property into "profitable housing projects" with the aid of loans from the Federal Housing Administration, which is headed in Kansas City by Vivian Truman, the President's brother.

The House by voice votes accepted three amendments, then gave the bill final passage on a 301-19 roll-call vote.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

J. Caleb Boggs (R Del.) — Strike out $805,450 for improvements on Bethany Beach, Del., anti - aircraft artillery range. Voice vote.

Harry R. Sheppard (D Calif.) — Eliminate $11,396,000 for Santa Margarita River dam to improve water supply at Camp Pendleton. Voice.

Lawrence H. Smith (R Wis.) — Cut by 50 per cent sums from appropriation available for public information service. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

H. R. Gross (R Iowa) — Eliminate $12,821,000 project for improvements of Grandview, Mo., airport. Standing vote, 36 - 81.

Gross — Recommit bill, with instructions to eliminate Grandview airport item. Roll call, 127 - 183.

SENATE

Committee

The bill underwent further trimming in the Senate Appropriations Committee which Oct. 18 recommended a total of $4,016,698,266 — a reduction of $411,659,704 from the House figure.

A rider was inserted by the Committee reducing by 25 per cent funds for information and publicity activities in the Departments of State, Justice, Commerce and the Judiciary. It allowed some exceptions.

The group barred funds for payment on work done in the U. S. under a cost-plus a fixed-fee contract unless specifically approved by the Secretary of Defense. It also barred funds for construction of laundry or dry cleaning facilities, unless so approved.

Floor Action

The Senate passed the bill by voice vote Oct. 19 after increasing slightly the amount recommended by its Committee. As it was sent to conference, the measure carried $4,020,198,266.

Senate increases came with acceptance of two floor amendments. One, sponsored by Clyde R. Hoey (D N.C.), added $3 million for construction of a railroad line between Camp Lejeune and Cherry Point, N. C. Another amendment, by Sen. Ernest W. McFarland (D Ariz.), provided $500,000 for drought relief on the Navajo Indian Reservation in Arizona and New Mexico.

A third, by Lister Hill (D Ala.), made available to local educational agencies funds for operation of schools in critical defense housing areas. The money had been authorized by the 81st Congress.

After the Senate accepted the Commitee changes en bloc, Blair Moody (D Mich.) made a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to cut by 25 per cent funds for information specialists in the State - Justice - Commerce Departments. Moody argued that the State Department needed a full staff of information personnel to explain the nation's foreign policy. The Senate accepted on a 44-21 roll-call vote a motion by Kenneth McKellar (D-Tenn.) to table Moody's motion.

A Moody proposal to exempt information specialists employed to disseminate news regarding the foreign policy of the U. S. from the hiring limitations was ruled out on a point of order.

Senate passage Oct. 19 was on voice vote. A conference was necessary to reconcile differences between the House and Senate versions.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Clyde R. Hoey (D N.C.) — Provide $3 million for construction of a railroad line between Camp Lejeune and Cherry Point, N. C. Voice vote.

Ernest W. McFarland (D Ariz.) — Provide $500,000 for drought relief for the Navajo Indian Reservation in Arizona and New Mexico, modified by Carl Hayden (D Ariz.) to clarify language and by Dennis Chavez (D N.M.) to provide that development be made after consultation with and approval by the Navajo Tribal Council. Standing vote.

Lister Hill (D Ala.) — Make available to local educational agencies funds authorized by 81st Congress for operation of schools in critical defense housing areas. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Blair Moody (D Mich.) — Exempt from hiring restrictions in State-Justice - Commerce Departments those employed in disseminating information about the foreign policy of the U. S. Ruled out on point of order.

CONFERENCE

The House-Senate conference committee reconciled most of the differences at its sessions but reported disagreement on some points. These were settled in the House and the decisions were approved by the Senate. As it was sent to the White House, the measure carried a total of $4,146,407,108.

Of this amount, $3,890,296,392 was for the Defense Department. The Army received $1 billion, the Air Force $2,071,200,000 and the Navy $819,096,392. Most of the rest went to the Independent Offices, which received $245,603,000.

Eliminated by the conference group was the Senate rider cutting by 25 per cent the information staffs of the State, Justice and Commerce Departments.

The House approved the conference report Oct. 20 by voice vote but first settled numerous differences in specific amounts on which the conference committee reported disagreements. It accepted most of the Senate amendments, with qualifications. It agreed to accept the rider barring funds for payment of work done in the U. S. under a cost-plus-a-fixed-fee contract — if estimates exceed $25,000.

The Senate approved the report Oct. 20, by voice vote.

President Truman signed the bill Nov. 1 but criticized it as insufficient. He particularly attacked the cuts in funds for defense community facilities. Requests for such funds totaled $25 million but only $4 million was granted.

The bill became Public Law 254.

Defense Housing

Summary — Congress authorized $1.635 billion worth of federal aid for housing in critical defense areas and ordered relaxation of credit restrictions on low-cost homes.

By its key provision the legislation (S 349) expanded the National Housing Act to extend additional Federal Housing Administration mortgage insurance to privately financed defense housing. It also provided for some government - constructed housing in areas where private construction was not adequate, and authorized $10 million for land condemnation in isolated areas to prevent speculation.

Federal aid for housing was the subject of another controversy when lawmakers reduced the number of public housing units that could be constructed in 1952. This was done in the Independent Offices Appropriation (see page 115). "Public housing" is intended for low-income families. "Defense housing" is for workers moving to defense plant areas where existing housing is critically short.)

For defense housing, the Administration requested $3 billion, but the House on March 14 refused to consider a bill for this amount. The Senate Banking Committee halved the sum before reporting its bill to the Senate March 21. After two days of debate the Senate April 9 passed the scaled-down S 349 by a voice vote.

When the Senate bill came up for House debate Aug. 14, Jesse P. Wolcott (R Mich.) led a two-day fight to defeat the measure, then sought to cut its life from two years to one and to eliminate the authority for the government to furnish "community services." Several limiting amendments were accepted before the House approved the bill on Aug. 15. Two of the House disputes were settled on roll call (see p. 200).

Most of the House provisions were accepted by the conference committee. Its compromise version was approved by the Senate Aug. 20 and by the House Aug. 21.

The bill was signed by the President Sept. 1 and became Public Law 139.

Provisions — Major provisions of the bill as enacted were:

Money authorized	(in millions)
Government-constructed housing	$50
Community facilities and services	60
Loans to prefabricated housing builders	15
Land condemnation in isolated areas	10
FHA mortgage insurance on privately constructed housing	1,500
	$1,635

Other Provisions

Limit authority of Act to "critical defense housing areas."

Provide housing by the following steps:

1. Announce publicly the number of permanent dwelling units needed; 2. Drop credit restrictions on housing; 3. Make government mortgage insurance aids available; 4. Permit federal construction if no private builders make bonafide applications to avail themselves of mortgage insurance aids within 90 days.

Provide federal aid for community services and facilities only when local government is unable to do it.

Provide aid in following order of preference:

1. Loans; 2. Grants where loans would mean an excessive increase in local debt; 3. Direct federal construction and operation where first two choices would be ineffective. Terminate the Act June 30, 1953.

Mortgage Insurance

Authorize the Federal Housing Administration to insure mortgages on one and two - family houses, not to exceed 90 per cent of value, or not to exceed $8,100 for one-family, $15,000 for two-family units ($9,000 and $16,000 in high - cost areas), for 30 years at 4 1/2 per cent.

Authorize FHA to insure mortgages on multi-family rental projects at 90 per cent of value or $7,200 a unit or, for units larger than four rooms, $8,100 ($900 a unit additional in high-cost areas).

Increase FHA mortgage authority $1.5 billion for this purpose.

Authorize FHA to set rents and method of operation.

Government Construction

Authorize government to construct units for sale if no private builders were interested.

Sell such units on 25 - year, four per cent basis.

Authorize government construction of temporary units where need was temporary.

Limit government construction costs to $9,000, $10,000 and $11,000 for two, three and four-bedroom units (plus $1,000 increase in high-cost areas and 50 per cent increase outside United States) and authorize $50 million for this purpose.

Authorize government loans, grants or construction and operation of community facilities and services, and authorize $60 million for this purpose.

Land Acquisition

Authorize Housing and Home Finance Administrator to condemn land and plan housing developments in isolated areas in order to preclude land speculation, reimburse local government for tax loss on government land, and authorize $10 million for this phase of the program.

Authorize $15 million for loans for production and distribution of prefabricated housing.

Extend to July 1st, 1953, authority for insurance on mortgages for privately owned rental housing near military installations (Wherry Act).

Limit maximum downpayments required on homes financed under the GI bill to four per cent for homes costing $7,000 or less, six per cent for homes up to $10,000, and eight per cent for those up to $12,000.

Permit President to extend life of Lanham Act housing and permit rent increases.

Extend to June 30, 1953, authority for Veterans Administration direct housing loans to veterans.

Limit credit restrictions on all housing to 10 per cent downpayment on homes costing less than $7,000, 15 per cent for $10,000 homes, and 20 per cent on $12,000 homes.

(The law in setting maximum downpayments which price control officials could require did not prevent officials from lowering or withdrawing entirely required downpayments on homes. It thus set a maximum on what they could require home buyers to pay down, but did not set a minimum.)

Background — In his State of the Union message Jan. 8 and again in his Economic Report to Congress Jan. 12 President Truman called for expanded defense housing, specifically asking that private construction of rental housing for defense workers be encouraged and publicly financed housing and related facilities be provided where necessary.

On Jan. 4 Sen. Burnet R. Maybank (D S. C.) and Rep. Brent Spence (D Ky.), chairmen of the Senate and House Banking and Currency Committees announced they would introduce defense housing bills after delivery of the President's message. The measures were presented promptly to the two chambers — in the Senate Jan. 11 and the House Jan. 12.

SENATE

Hearings

J. William Fulbright (D Ark.) on Jan. 11 introduced the defense housing bill (S 349) in the Senate on behalf of Maybank. With provisions as requested by the Administration, the bill called for a $3 billion housing program. Committee hearings were underway within a week.

Raymond M. Foley, Housing and Home Finance Administrator, urged approval of the proposed legislation Jan. 16 because it "would be most unwise not to establish now the necessary authority to meet fully, effectively and promptly" all foreseeable housing needs arising from the nation's rearmament drive. He described the program as largely "standby in character."

At Committee sessions, one of the severest critics of the huge program was Sen. A. Willis Robertson (D Va.). He declared that even without the proposed credit program the nation faced one of its greatest threats ever from inflation. The Senator said the proposal would form the basis for $18 billion in new credit, declaring that every dollar of initial credit was always "magnified six times" in the long run as a result of a chain of developments.

Franklin D. Richards, Federal Housing Administration commissioner, said Jan. 17 that without the proposed legislation, Congress would have to be called on to authorize an additional $2 billion for the FHA to carry on its regular mortgage insurance program for another year.

In view of this, Sen. John J. Sparkman (D Ala.) said the "additional impact" of the defense housing bill would amount to only about $1 billion. Sparkman said he agreed the Administration program could increase inflationary pressures. He added, however, that the plan was vitally important and should be undertaken despite the inflation danger.

Shift to Defense Jobs

The Committee was told by John L. Thurston, Assistant Federal Security Administrator, that two million workers would transfer from non-defense to defense jobs during the next six months. He said the Labor Department made the estimate.

Sen. Wallace F. Bennett (R Utah) said Mr. Thurston was implying there would be a vast migration of workers from their present communities to new localities.

Mr. Thurston said he did not mean to imply it would happen, but he recalled that during World War II about nine million workers migrated to other communities "in the interest of the war effort."

The Deputy Director of Installations for the Air Force, Brig. Gen. Colby M. Myers, told the Committee the Air Force "has lost much of its potential combat effectivenes" since World War II because of a lack of family housing units near air bases.

But Sen. Irving M. Ives (R N.Y.) charged that the whole program lacked "co-ordination" because it was impossible to plan housing until the location of defense installations was known.

Two Atomic Energy Commission officials, Walter Williams and Carroll Towne, testified in favor of the bill on Jan. 18. They said the program would mean housing in the vicinity of plant sites for atomic energy installations.

The Committee Feb. 1 heard William Levitt of Levitt Brothers testify "that we've got to have war housing legislation" and that the pending bill was "no better or worse" than others.

Direct opposition came from Lawrence A. Epter, of the Mortgage Bankers Association of New York, Inc., who said Feb. 2 the defense housing bill was "another attempt of the Administration to foist public housing" upon private industry.

Witness Scolded

Hearings were temporarily interrupted, but soon resumed. Chairman Maybank scolded a Chamber of Commerce witness Feb. 14.

"I wish that when the Chamber of Commerce comes before this Committee it would suggest something advantageous for the country, and not always delay, delay, delay . . . Every time we delay we help only one person — that is the fellow who lives in Moscow," Maybank said.

Norman P. Mason, chairman of the Chamber's construction committee, had told the Committee additional defense housing legislation "is not necessary now."

Wallace J. Campbell of the Cooperative League suggested that the amortization period be extended beyond 25 years so that rents would be lower than the anticipated $75-$93 a month rental of the defense units. A. T. Lundberg and B. A. Lilywhite, speaking for Arlington County, Va., suggested the legislation be extended to dispersal areas.

Dr. Walter B. Martin of Norfolk, Va., and of the American Medical Association, and Mrs. Jack B. Fahy of the American Parents Committee suggested that any hospital, educational, or welfare facilities construction be done under existing federal aid programs. Bernard Weitzer of the Jewish War Veterans favored S 349, but suggested that a renegotiation provision be added to it.

On Feb. 15, Richard Perrin of the American Municipal Association and several municipal officials urged enactment of the bill to help defense centers solve their housing problems.

"Artificial Shortage" Charged

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, testified Feb. 16 in favor of the legislation. He said if private industry could not meet the low - cost housing needs of defense workers, the government should provide for them through public housing. Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson in a letter to the Committee, urged quick action on a housing program "to avoid disruption of the entire defense program."

Alexander Summer of Newark, N.J., president of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, charged that an artificial housing shortage was being created through unnecessary regulations in order to build up a demand for government housing. He opposed the bill.

On Feb. 19 Leo Goodman and John Edelman of the CIO National Housing Committee told of serious need for housing in defense areas. They favored priority for military housing, relaxation of credit controls in defense areas, encouragement of prefabricated housing.

Feb. 20 David L. Krooth, president of the National Housing Conference, urged lower rents on public housing to meet the need for low - cost housing. W. P. Atkinson, president of the National Association of Home Builders, asked that credit controls be relaxed in defense areas so that private builders could carry most of the load on defense housing.

On March 1 a spokesman for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People supported the program but testified against any moves to put it on a segregated basis.

Committee

The Senate Banking Committee on March 20 approved S 349. Its version would have authorized:

$1.5 billion for federal insurance of home mortgages in defense areas. This was one - half of the amount asked in the Administration bill as introduced.

$60 million for federal grants or loans for schools, streets, etc., in defense areas.

$50 million to build homes in "isolated" defense areas where private capital could not provide housing.

$15 million for loans to prefabricated house manufacturers.

$10 million to buy land to prevent speculation in defense areas.

Floor Action

The bill was reported in the Senate March 21 and Senate debate opened on April 5.

Maybank told the Senate "the need for this legislation is urgent, very urgent. We are only at the very beginning of what will be a huge and gigantic defense effort." He said the bill was a compromise, but that it could not satisfy everyone.

Maybank noted that the CIO had opposed the measure. The CIO said the homes to be built under the bill would be too expensive for workers to rent. The Committee had estimated that rents would be from $75 to $95 exclusive of utilities.

Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) said the Republican Policy Committee had decided not to oppose the bill, but he added that some leaders would ask for certain modifications.

Following a three-day recess, the Senate resumed debate April 9. It passed the scaled-down S 349, after incorporating many provisions designed to prevent abuse either by private builders or government agencies. Altogether 12 amendments were adopted and only one rejected. Another by Sen. Everett M. Dirksen (R Ill.) limiting prefabricated housing loans to purposes of distribution only was withdrawn before a decision was made on it.

Curb on Builders

The amendment which provoked the most exchange provided that no private builder would be able to get a government-insured loan under the program unless he made a sworn statement that it did not exceed his cash investment in the building project. It was offered by Wallace F. Bennett (R Utah) and adopted upon voice vote, after it was amended by Russell B. Long (D La.), to exclude profits of the prime contractor from project costs for mortgaging purposes. Long said that, in most cases, the mortgagor was the prime contractor.

Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) who was consulted in the framing of the amendment, said it was designed to prevent repetition of an abuse that occurred during and after World War II, under a similarly attractive housing incentive program. At that time, he asserted, builders "in general did not put up any money at all and, in some cases, made money on the mortgages" by inflating costs. Long said some loans were as high as 150 per cent of costs.

Douglas, furthermore, proposed an inquiry into operations of the Federal Housing Administration, which makes government housing mortgages, to determine whether "favored groups" received special breaks in financing big housing projects, while others "were held at arm's length."

Maybank generally supported the Bennett-Long amendment but said "If we want to get houses built, the contractors are entitled to their shares of the profits." Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) felt the mortgage safeguards written into the bill were "a little bit better" but big contractors still would be "completely insured by Uncle Sam's dollars".

Jibing at critics of the welfare state and the intrusion of government, Humphrey said the housing program showed "it all depends on where the gravy is spilled." Homer E. Capehart (R Ind.) retorted that Humphrey's remarks convinced him the defense housing bill was one of the finest ever before the Senate and said his arguments against it were taken from a statement handed to Senators by a "CIO lobbyist."

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Everett M. Dirksen (R Ill.) — Prohibit any loan in excess of $500,000 for production of prefabricated housing. Voice vote.

John J. Sparkman (D Ala.) — Extend to July 1, 1953, authority of Veterans Administration to make loans for veterans housing when such loans are not otherwise available. Voice.

Francis Case (R S.D.) — Bar expenditure of funds for administrative expenses of FHA except by Congressional authorization. Voice.

Russell B. Long (D La.) — Modify Bennett amendment to exclude profits of the prime contractor from project costs for mortgaging purposes. Voice.

Wallace F. Bennett (R Utah) — Require a sworn statement from a contractor that the cost of his building project is not less than the amount received under the mortgage. Amended by Long (above), then adopted by voice.

Sparkman — Bar mortgagee from charging veteran any fee other than those authorized by law. Voice.

Sparkman — Permit applicant for mortgage prior to March 1, 1950, to transfer application when bill becomes law without payment of new fees. Voice.

William F. Knowland (R Calif.) — Extend powers for acquisition of land for privately financed defense housing to areas embracing two contiguous cities. Voice.

Dirksen — Limit government-constructed housing to areas which are "isolated or relatively isolated" in character. Voice.

Dirksen — Limit to $5 million the administrative expenses for maintenance and operation of federal housing properties under bill. Voice.

Bennett — Allow private builders 90 days instead of 60 to file applications to build defense housing in critical areas where the government otherwise would be permitted to build. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Everett M. Dirksen (R Ill.) — Require findings with respect both to the lack of facilities and private inability to finance housing before government could build. Voice vote.

HOUSE

Hearings

The companion bill in the House for the defense housing program was HR 1272, introduced by Chairman Brent Spence (D Ky.) of the House Banking and Currency Committee. The group opened public hearings Jan. 22, with Raymond M. Foley, Housing and Home Finance Administrator, as first witness.

Foley noted that the bill would give a green-light to direct federal construction in areas where private builders would not undertake the work. But Foley promptly discounted a suggestion from Committee Member Howard H. Buffett (R Neb.) that this feature might add up to a "socialized housing program"

The HHFA chief was on the witness stand for two days before completing his analysis of the measure. His remarks closely paralleled those he had previously made about S 349 before the Senate Banking Committee.

The House Committee received an endorsing statement Jan. 23 from Franklin D. Richards, Commissioner of the Federal Housing Administration which would handle the $3 billion program. The funds would be extended FHA in the form of power to issue insured mortgages in that amount. Some $150 million would go in cash to the HHFA.

Federal Security Administrator Oscar R. Ewing appeared Jan. 24—and urged that the FSA be granted control over health, welfare and educational features carried in the legislation. Community facilities not directly concerned with housing should be vested in his agency, he contended.

Health Officials Testify

Chairman Spence backed him up, asserting "I wouldn't like the HHFA to usurp the functions of Public Health." Foley, however, had said the HHFA intended only to "coordinate" the various phases of the program, not run them all.

Officials of the U. S. Public Health Service testified in favor of the bill's principles. Walter J. Williams, Atomic Energy Commission production director, approved the bill.

Among witnesses who testified Jan. 29 in favor of the bill were David Krooth, president of the National Housing Conference, Inc., Dr. Albert V. Whitehall, director of the Washington Service Bureau, American Hospital Association, Ralph Walker, president of the American Institute of Architects, and Rt. Rev. Msgr. John O'Grady, secretary of the National Conference of Catholic Charities.

Also John Williamson, vice chairman of the national legislative committee of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, Dr. Edgar Fuller, executive secretary, National Council of Chief State School Officers, John J. Gunther, legislative representative, Americans for Democratic Action, Mrs. Catherine Fahy, American Parents Committee, Mayor Royce S. McCelland, Wilmington, N. C., Mayor Eugene Swartz, Gary, Ind., and C. A. Harrell, city manager, Norfolk, Va., representing the American Municipal Association.

Witness Lawrence A. Epter, president of the Mortgage Bankers Association of New York, attacked "blank check" powers in the bill. Edward L. Wilson, managing director of the Trailer Coach Manufacturers Association, Earl Raymond, chairman of the Washington Committee of the Association, and James E. Redmond of Redmond Trailer Co., Alma, Mich., advocated amendments to the bill providing for financing for mobile housing.

William P. Atkinson, president of the National Association of Home Builders, and Fred G. Stiles of Stiles Builders, Grand Rapids, Mich., endorsed the purposes of the bill but sought relaxation of credit restrictions in defense areas. Brig. Gen. Colby M. Myers of the Defense Department said the war agency would need $3 billion just for its own defense housing program.

NAREB Views

The National Association of Real Estate Boards went on record against the Administration's bill as hearings continued Feb. 2. Alexander Summer, NAREB president, testified "no subsidies" were needed for private industry to do the job "better, quicker, and at less cost" than the government could.

Summer testified also that the bill might amount to "a toe in the door for public housing." He suggested a relaxation of federal curbs on building credit as a better alternative.

Representing the AFL's Building and Construction Trades Department, Richard Gray told the lawmakers HR 1272 did not go far enough in terms of housing that defense workers actually "can afford." Gray said allowable rents in defense housing projects should be limited to one quarter of a worker's income.

Leo Goodman, on behalf of the CIO's National Housing Committee, supported the bill, and declared that additional defense housing could be made available if the government would sell World War II housing to persons presently occupying it.

Reps. Leroy Johnson (R Calif.) and John J. Riley (D S.C.) went before the House group Feb. 6 to describe crowded housing conditions in their districts, and urge federal aid to relieve them.

Committee

The House Banking and Currency Committee on April 27 approved HR 1272 with nearly 30 amendments, including one suggesting lighter credit curbs in defense areas. Chairman Spence reported the vote as 15 to 8. The bill was replaced with a "clean" bill, HR 2988 and formally reported March 6.

By a roll-call vote of 170 to 219 (see p. 200) the House refused on March 14 to take up the legislation. Jesse P. Wolcott (R Mich.) led the opposition to the move to consider the bill saying the bill would put the government into the housing business. His stand was supported, in the final vote, by 176 Republicans and 43 Democrats, mostly Southerners. Supporting the motion to take up the Spence bill were 162 Democrats, seven Republicans and one independent.

In a Republican caucus March 13, GOP Representatives agreed to support a substitute bill (HR 3197) introduced March 13 by Wolcott. His bill called for $1.5 billion to guarantee mortgage lenders a gross profit on defense housing projects.

The House Banking Committee Aug. 2 recommended S 349, which the Senate had passed April 9, but proposed some changes. The recommended bill would have authorized an additional $1.5 billion for FHA insurance, including permanent non-defense programs, whereas the Senate bill provided $1.5 billion for use in defense areas only. The House Committee version also authorized $100 million for federal and local governments to build community facilities in critical areas, and $75 million for temporary or permanent housing if private builders did not attempt to fill an announced need within 90 days. Senate bill authorized $60 million and $50 million, respectively, for these programs.

Floor Action

On Aug. 15 the House approved S 349 but in substantially the same form as the Senate had approved it April 9.

The House debate opened Aug. 14. Spence, as head of the Committee having jurisdiction over the bill, explained its purpose to his colleagues.

"It is to provide defense housing and community facilities and services in critical defense housing areas and in military areas," he said. "Whether we think there is sufficient housing in the United States generally or not, housing is certainly needed in those areas. There are great installations being constructed in various sections of the country where there will be a great in-migration of military personnel and defense workers. Housing is as essential to these people as the building plants."

Ray J. Madden (D Ind.) said the bill "is a step in the right direction." He added, however, that it "does not set up, sufficiently, machinery which can adequately take care of the need for low-priced housing at military installations and industrial areas."

Wolcott led the opposition. "There is no need for this bill," he said. "Somebody has got into their minds that if they can make it tough enough for private enterprise, private enterprise will not or cannot build the units required. Then they activate the public - housing provisions of this Act and make it necessary for the federal government to come in and do the job. To me, that is socialism, if it is carried to any extreme at all."

Sees Decline in Housing

Buffett said the bill would result in less housing in defense areas. "This bill," he said, "will put a damper on private housing, as the socialistic-minded bureaucrats begin to move in. We will have a decline in housing."

Wolcott offered an amendment to drop from the bill authority for the government to furnish "community services." Spence insisted some local communities would not be able to provide these necessary services. The amendment was rejected on teller vote, 122-125.

Wolcott then offered an amendment to suspend entirely housing credit restrictions in critical areas. The bill had called for relaxation of these restrictions. Wolcott said his amendment would stimulate private construction. It was agreed to on teller vote, 108-105.

Another amendment by Wolcott to confine government construction to temporary housing was rejected on teller vote, 102-127.

Proposes One-Year Bill

When debate continued Aug. 15, Wolcott sought to cut the life of the bill from two years to one. He said it should be reconsidered after one year. Spence said it should continue for two years in order to be effective.

Wolcott offered his earlier termination proposal in the form of five separate amendments to different sections of the bill. At first all were approved on non - record votes. Later, however, the House took up the amendments again and voted on all of them at once. This time the cut was rejected in roll-call vote, 184-188 (see p. 200). Democrats opposed the cut 25-178; Republicans supported it 159-9.

The House accepted on voice vote an amendment by Spence to drop from the bill all reference to school construction or maintenance. Graham A. Barden (D N.C.), chairman of the Education and Labor Committee, warned that school aid would bring up religious controversies. The bill would have permitted local governments to rule on aid for construction of parochial schools. The Spence amendment removed school aid from the bill.

An amendment by Albert M. Cole (R Kan.) to strike out government authority to condemn land and plan housing developments in isolated areas was first approved on teller vote, 134-124, and later rejected on roll-call vote, 175-199. Cole said the section would permit socialistic planning. Wright Patman (D Tex.) said the provision was necessary to block land speculators and black marketeers in such areas as the H-bomb plant in South Carolina.

The House refused, on a 100-126 teller vote, to approve a Committee-sponsored increase in funds for government construction of homes and community facilities and services. The Committee recommended a $40 million boost for homes and a $25 million increase for facilities and services. Wolcott said such an increase over the Senate-approved figures was not justified.

Cole's motion to send the bill back to the Committee was rejected on voice vote. The bill was then passed on voice vote.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Jesse P. Wolcott (R Mich.) — Suspend all credit restriction in critical housing areas instead of relaxing restriction. Standing vote, 96-91.

Shepard J. Crumpacker, Jr., (R Ind.) — Provide that designation of a critical area be announced in a local newspaper. Voice.

Brent Spence (D Ky.) — Strike out authorization for school construction and operation. Voice.

Wolcott — Clarify directions for later sale of government-owned public housing. Voice.

Wolcott — Confine financing of "facilities" to those specifically named in the bill. Voice.

Wolcott — Confine financing of "services" to those specifically named in the bill. Voice.

John Phillips (R Calif.) — Increase rent on government - financed units not appraised since 1941-42. Voice.

Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) — Permit all veterans to take advantage of the past increase in the Veterans Administration mortgage guarantee maximum. Voice.

Charles B. Deane (D N.C.) — Permit the Federal National Mortgage Association to give prior committments in the case of defense housing projects, Wherry Act projects and disaster area projects. Standing, 125-42.

Winfield K. Denton (D Ind.) — Limit credit restrictions on all homes selling under $10,000 to not more than 10 per cent down payment and on homes selling under $12,000 to not more than 20 per cent down payment. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Jesse P. Wolcott (R Mich.) — Strike out authorization for government-provided "services." First agreed to on standing vote, 98-94, then rejected on teller vote, 122-125.

Albert M. Cole (R Kan.) — Permit the government to build houses only in isolated or semi-isolated areas. Standing, 85-98.

Wolcott — Ban government-construction of permanent housing units. Standing, 102-127.

Fred L. Crawford (R Mich.) — Increase from 90 to 150 the number of days private enterprise would be given to signify intentions to fulfill designated critical housing needs. Voice.

Wolcott — Cut life of bill from two years to one. This change was offered in a series of five identical amendments cutting the life of different sections of the bill. All were agreed to on a series of non-record votes; then the House rejected them in a single roll call vote. The first such amendment was agreed to originally on standing vote, 92-62, then on teller vote 102-78; the second was agreed to on standing vote, 85-67, then on teller vote, 107-79; the third was first rejected on standing vote, 75-77, then agreed to on teller vote, 109-95; the fourth was agreed to on standing vote, 120-104; the fifth on voice vote. All were then rejected on roll call, 184-188.

Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y) — Ban discrimination or segregation in community facilities and services built with tax money. Standing, 57-79.

Cole (R Kan.) — Strike out authorization for government condemnation and planning of housing developments in isolated areas. First agreed to on standing vote, 134-124; later rejected on roll call, 175-199.

CONFERENCE

On Aug. 16 the Senate requested a conference and the House agreed. The conference report was filed Aug. 20. It was approved by the Senate the same day and by the House on Aug. 21.

The House - Senate conference committee accepted most of the provisions approved by the lower chamber. Differences in major provisions were:

The House bill called for the suspension of credit restrictions in critical areas. The Senate bill ordered them relaxed, leaving details to the President. The conference bill specified that they be suspended for housing costing less than $12,000 or renting for less than $85 a month and actually needed in such areas for defense workers or military personnel. Other credit relaxation in such areas would be left up to the President.

The House put a ban on government aid to school construction or operation under the bill. The Senate included schools. The House ban was accepted by the conferees.

The House bill authorized the Federal National Mortgage Association to make advance commitments for the purchase of mortgages on $500 million worth of housing in critical areas, on Wherry Act housing and on disaster area projects, the commitments to be made before March 1, 1952. The Senate bill had no such provision. The conference cut the ceiling on commitments to $200 million and cut the time limit to Dec. 31, 1951.

Downpayment Requirements

The House bill set at six per cent the limit on the maximum downpayment which could be required on a GI - bill - financed veteran's home costing less than $12,000. The Senate bill had exempted from credit restrictions all homes sold to veterans employed in defense plants in critical areas. The conference set the requirement on homes costing $7,000 or less at four per cent, at six per cent for homes up to $10,000, and at eight per cent for those up to $12,000.

The House bill set a maximum down payment requirement on all other homes costing less than $10,000 at 10 per cent and at 20 per cent for homes up to $12,000. The Senate had no such provision. The conference agreed to 10 per cent for $7,000 homes, 15 per cent for $10,000 homes and 20 per cent for $12,000 homes.

The downpayment requirements which the conferees agreed to could not be exceeded by economic stabilization officials but still would permit the Administration to reduce or eliminate such requirements. This applied both to homes financed under the GI bill and to those financed otherwise.

Sen. Burnet R. Maybank (D S.C.)— urged Senate approval of the conference bill Aug. 20. He said the most controversial provision was the House ban on aid to schools. He said the conference accepted the ban only when Chairman Graham A. Barden (D N.C.) of the House Education and Labor Committee promised to bring out a separate bill on the subject "as soon as possible."

After brief discussion, the Senate agreed to the conference report on voice vote. The House agreed to it on voice vote Aug. 21 without discussion.

President Truman signed S 349 on Sept. 1, and it became Public Law 139.

GROUP STANDS

Labor and the housing industry generally agreed on the immediate need for a defense housing program but differed on whether the "worker" or the "builder" would benefit from the House and Senate versions of S 349.

Labor publications in general, regarded the legislation as more a "realtors' relief project" than as housing relief for defense workers and military personnel.

Realtor and home builder groups stressed the "socialized" aspects of the federal public housing program already in operation. They also argued that the public housing program competed for critical materials needed for the defense housing program.

For the most part, private builders said adequate mortgage insurance and less restriction on critical materials were necessary for their full participation in the program.

Labor Views

The International Association of Machinists (AFL) said the "real estate lobby wins another round on defense housing" in the Committee's version of S 349. The labor group declared that the bill "provides for almost no reasonably priced rental units," and that "what the bill does is to guarantee profits to private builders putting up homes and apartments in defense areas."

IAM President Al Hayes in a letter to the House Committee commented that "unless action is taken immediately to provide adequate housing at rents workingmen can afford, we will be unable to provide sufficient manpower to meet expanding production schedules."

IAM earlier had said that the Senate bill did not provide for a defense housing program but for a "realtors' relief project." it urged workers moving to defense areas to write to their Congressmen if they didn't like "tent life."

Labor's League for Political Education (AFL) said that housing rental units to be built under the mortgage insurance program would rent for "far more than most GI's and defense workers could afford."

CIO's monthly publication "Economic Outlook" devoted an entire issue to "The Housing Fiasco." Included was a warning that "Congress must put a stop to such practices as cost-plus profiteering and the outright subsidies allowed by the government insured mortgage program."

Housing Industry Stands

Following Senate passage of S 349, the National Association of Home Builders told its members that because of drastic changes and last minute floor amendments, the bill was of "negligible value" since it "only could at the most produce about 165,000 units and those only in designated critical locations."

Referring to the federal public housing program, Frank W. Cortright of the NAHB said "it is highly improper that billions of dollars of federal funds should be added to this burden for socialized public housing which does not serve the defense workers' needs." He added that the private home building industry was "unwilling to see public housing move up to more than 10 times its monthly volume. . .when critical shortages in steel, copper and aluminum are seriously limiting private building necessary to the war effort."

The National Association of Real Estate Boards said in its publication, "Headlines," that real estate industry opposition to the Senate bill "centers primarily on loopholes that could be used to give priority to public housing and prevent private enterprise from having a fair opportunity to build defense housing."

NAREB further commented that the "catch" in S 349's mortgage plan was that "the builder's profit, the cost of the land, off-site utilities and legal expenses cannot be included in the mortgage plan," resulting in an "actual coverage of considerably less than the intended 90 per cent."

In a telegram to the Senate Preparedness Subcommittee which previouly had reported on living conditions near military posts, Alexander Summer, NAREB president, said, "We have been aware of these sordid conditions for months and have pleaded with the Administration to free the industry so that such problems could be solved."

"If credit controls are lifted in defense areas," the wire continued, "our industry will quickly produce enough housing at prices and rentals that defense workers can pay to prevent serious shortages during the defense program. The job can be done if the government will loosen the bonds on the industry, and give priority to those builders producing housing for the lowest monthly rentals."

Aid To Medical Education

S 337

Summary — An emergency professional health training bill (S 337), known as the medical school aid bill, was reported by the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee Feb. 15, 1951.

The Senate debated the bill briefly on March 12, but took no action on it. The Labor Committee, in executive session on Sept. 21, agreed to propose an amendment. The bill was debated at length on Oct. 3-4 when the amendment was defeated and the bill recommitted.

The bill was reported again on Oct. 18, was called up on Oct. 19, objected to, and passed over. It still was on the Senate calendar when the session ended. In the House, the program had received no action although it was among President Truman's legislative requests. However, the House would have a chance to act at the second session.

Provisions — S 337 was a bill to amend the Public Health Service Act and the Vocational Education Act of 1946, to provide:

Federal grants to approved educational institutions in the fields of medicine, osteopathy, dentistry, nursing, and public health, to assist in meeting costs of instruction to provide means and incentive for increasing enrollments, and to aid in the improvement and expansion of existing facilities and in the establishment of new schools.

Scholarships for qualified students, selected on the basis of ability and financial need, in fields in which there are not enough qualified applicants to fill enrollment capacity in accredited schools.

Federal grants to states for assistance in the development of programs for practical-nurse training under approved state plans administered by state boards for vocational education.

Except for the practical-nurse training, which would be administered by the Commissioner of Education, administrative responsibility at the federal level would be assigned to the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service. It was specifically provided that the bill should not be construed as authorizing any federal control over the curriculum or administration of any school, or the admission of applicants thereto.

Background — A similar bill was introduced in 1949 and was passed by the Senate. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, p. 301). The Senate bill died in House committee.

In 1950, three bills were acted upon by the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee. One was favorably reported but no action was taken in the House. Two others were tabled. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, pages 180-1).

SENATE

Committee

Open hearings on medical school aid had been held in June 1949. No hearings were held in 1951, but on Feb. 7 the Labor and Public Welfare Committee unanimously approved S 337. The bill was reported Feb. 15. The Committee on Sept. 21, agreed, in executive session, to propose an amendment.

The original bill provided that medical schools receive $500 a year for every current student and $1,000 for every new one above the general average enrollment over the past few years. The amendment, introduced by John O. Pastore (D R.I.), decreased the grant for current students to $200 and increased that for new students to $2,200. The Senate rejected the amendment and recommitted the bill. The Committee, by a 7-0 vote, again reported it on Oct. 18.

Floor Action

The Senate debated S 337 briefly on March 12. Everett M. Dirksen (R Ill.) objected to consideration and attacked it as "an invasion of the educational field. . .it will be only a question of time until the federal government will be dominating the educational field."

Dirksen later renewed his objection to consideration of the bill, and the bill was passed over.

In the following months the Senate on seven occasions passed over the bill, but took it up Oct. 3 when Sen. John O. Pastore, (D R.I.) opened debate. He told the Senate it was designed to meet "a real and critical emergency situation"

James E. Murray (D Mont.) stressed the support of the bill by 18 organizations, said the American Medical Association was now the only organization in opposition and that it had supported the bill at the 1949 hearings.

Burden On Budget?

Lester C. Hunt (D Wyo.), speaking for the bill, pointed to the great number of hospital beds vacant because of insufficient medical and technical personnel. Lister Hill (D Ala.) emphasized that the bill "does not in any sense represent an invasion by the federal government" . . .

Robert A. Taft (R. Ohio) objected to the Pastore amendment. He said it would result in lowering standards of all medical schools. Taft added that he did not want to give the impression he would vote for the bill if the amendment were rejected, because "I intend to oppose the bill and make a speech on the bill itself." The program would be too expensive at this time, Taft declared, and called for striking out all "except the part creating a committee to study the entire problem of medical education."

On Oct. 4, debate continued with Taft stating that "I say frankly that this program is generally a meritorious one. . .I am in favor of it. . ." He submitted an amendment as a substitute, which would authorize only a study commission.

Rejects Amendment

The Senate then took up the Pastore amendment and rejected it by a roll-call vote of 23-42.

Pastore then moved to have the bill recommitted. The motion was agreed to. Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) moved to reconsider the recomittal vote.

Pastore spoke against reconsideration. He said Republicans had agreed to support the bill, but later had decided, after a meeting of the Republican Policy Committee, to abandon it.

Edward J. Thye (R Minn.) said Pastore was "misinformed." Taft said he had supported the bill in February, but that the world situation had changed since then, the Pastore amendment was objectionable to medical school heads and the bill was too expensive.

Thye, Ralph E. Flanders (R Vt.), and Willis Smith (D N.C.) said they would have voted for the bill, but not for the amendment.

On Oct. 17 Humphrey withdrew his motion to reconsider recommittal. However, the bill was again reported by the Committee on Oct. 18, and next day Tom Connally (D Tex.) asked that it be called up. It was called up. Connally objected. And the bill was passed over.

The first session ended with S 337 still on the Senate calendar. There had been no action by the House on the professional health training program, which was among the legislative requests President Truman presented early in the session.

GROUP STANDS

Witnesses representing the following professional organizations testified in favor of federal aid to education in the health professions: American Medical Association, Association of American Medical Colleges, American Council on Education, Association of Schools of Public Health, Association of American Universities, American Hospital Association, American Nurses Association, Association of Public Health Nursing, Association of Collegiate Schools of Nursing, American Association of Industrial Nurses, American Association of Medical Social Workers, Association of American Medical Social Workers, Catholic Hospital Association, National Association of State Universities, National League of Nursing Education, National Association of Public Health Nursing, National Association of Colored Graduate Nurses, National Association for Practical Nurse Education.

In addition, these other organizations endorsed the bill: American Legion, Disabled American Veterans, Regular Veterans' Association, Jewish War Veterans, American Dental Association, American Association of Dental Schools, American Public Health Association, Assocition of Land Grant Colleges, Association of Schools of Public Health, National Dental Association, National Health Council, National Grange, Cooperative Health Federation of America, National Council of Jewish Women, American Federation of Labor, Congress of Industrial Organizations, Indiana State Industrial Union Committee, International Association of Machinists, United Auto Workers (AFL and CIO), National Farmers Union, Montana Farmers Union, Cooperative League of U.S.A., and numerous professional schools.

Public Health Centers

Summary—The Senate March 10, 1951, passed and sent to the House a bill (S 445) authorizing federal grants to states for establishment and expansion of local public health centers. The vote was 38 to 35. The House did not act on the bill, but still would have a chance to do so at the 1952 session. (For voting, see page 202.)

Provisions—Purpose of the bill was to assist states and their local subdivisions in the establishment and maintenance of full-time local health units equipped and staffed to provide basic public health services. Federal money involved would amount to $1 for every $2 put up by states or local governments, and no more than $1.50 a person to be served could be spent for any one public health unit financed under the bill.

Background—The measure was similar to a bill passed by the Senate—but shelved by the House—during the 81st Congress. The Senate approved it in 1949, after extensive committee hearings and after a debate in which most Democrats favored and most Republicans opposed the proposal. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, 1949, p. 301).

Senate

The bill was reported out by the Senate Labor and Public Welfare

XUM

Committee Jan. 29. Lister Hill (D Ala.), floor manager for the measure, estimated the first-year cost of the program would be $15 million to $20 million.

Everett M. Dirksen (R Ill.), an opponent, argued that when the program was fully effective the annual cost to "John Q. Taxpayer" would be $240 million, with the federal government supplying $80 million and the states the other $160 million. He urged non-defense economy in the emergency period. But H. Alexander Smith (R N.J.) and Herbert H. Lehman (D N.Y.) argued the bill was related to national defense, adding that nothing is more vital to the nation than the health of its people.

Edward J. Thye (R Minn.) suggested an over-all limit on yearly appropriations, but Hill said this wouldn't be practical because funds then would have to be spent on a priority basis.

In the 38-35 vote on final passage, Democrats favored the bill 28-10 but Republican Senators opposed it, 10-25.

The Senate's measure was an attempt to carry out one of President Truman's legislative requests to Congress. Approval by the Senate sent the bill to the House, which took no action on it during the first session but still would have a chance to do so at the final session of the 82nd Congress.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Lister Hill (D Ala.)—Change effective date of the bill from July 1, 1950, to July 1, 1951.

Hill—Provide that no plan may be disapproved because the state or local public health unit excepts from application of any part of the program persons who are unwilling on account of their religious beliefs to be included.

Social Security Increase

Summary — A House revenue bill (HR 2416), amended in the Senate to provide an increase in social security payments, was stalled in the House Ways and Means Committee at the end of the 1951 Congressional session.

The bill, for tax purposes, would permit the exclusion from gross income of payments received on debts where evidence of the debt's existence, such as a note, could be furnished. The measure provided for the permanent enactment of a section of the Internal Revenue Code and for the extension of another portion of the code.

Although both House and Senate passed versions of HR 2416, the House had not agreed to a Senate request for a conference on differences and the bill was in the hands of the House Committee when adjournment came.

HOUSE

HR 2416 was reported from the House Ways and Means Committee April 11 and the House passed it April 12 by voice vote, with a Committee amendment.

As it was passed by the House, the bill was concerned only with tax procedures.

SENATE

In the Senate, the bill was reported May 17 from the Finance Committee, and the upper chamber passed it June 21 with the amendment which would raise the federal share of social security payments.

However, on June 26, the Senate withdrew its approval of the social security amendment. Acceptance by voice vote of a motion by Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) sent the bill back to the Finance Committee. As amended (and temporarily approved) the measure would have increased grants to the aged, blind and totally disabled by $5 a month and grants to dependent children by $3 a month.

Majority Leader Ernest W. McFarland (D Ariz.) sponsor of the social security increase, agreed to the delay after quick Committee action was promised. Taft had said the amendment gave no assurance the increases would be passed on to individuals by the states. He urged a stronger amendment requiring the states to match any increased federal contribution.

On July 6, the Finance Committee approved a compromise version of the amendment. The new version increased maximums for grants to the aged, blind and totally disabled by $3 a month and grants to dependent children by $2 a month. Estimated cost to the federal government through the revised amendment would be about $140 million instead of the $259 million estimated for the original proposal.

During the bill's sojourn in the upper chamber, three other amendments were accepted and four were rejected. Among those accepted was a controversial proposal by William E. Jenner (R Ind.) to permit states to open their relief rolls to public inspection without forfeiting federal matching funds. (This became law as a provision of the Revenue Act of 1951 which amended the Social Security Act. See page 000.)

The Senate July 19 passed the amended HR 2416 by voice vote and requested a House - Senate conference on the differences.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Ernest W. McFarland (D Ariz.) — Require states to transfer full increase of federal payments to recipients. Voice vote.

Francis Case (R S.D.) — Permit for one year beneficiaries employed in agriculture or nursing work to earn up to $50 a month without losing old age assistance. Voice.

William E. Jenner (R Ind.) — Permit states to open relief rolls to public inspection without forfeiting federal matching funds for assistance payments. Roll-call vote, 38-30.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Herbert H. Lehman (D N.Y.)— Increase payments to the aged, blind and totally disabled of Puerto Rico and Virgin Islands to $30 a month and limit federal contribution to two-thirds of first $26 and one-half of remaining $4 up to $30; increase aid to dependent children of Puerto Rico and Virgin Islands to $18 a month for first dependent child and $12 for each additional child and limit federal contribution to two-thirds of the first $16 and one-half of the balance up to $18. Voice vote, then standing vote.

Everett M. Dirksen (R Ill.)— Bar funds for benefits until Congress provides adequate taxes to cover expenditures. Voice.

Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.)— Increase grants to the aged receiving insurance benefits by $3 a month. Voice.

William Langer (R N.D.) — Provide federal assistance payments of $100 a month to the aged, exclusive of state contributions. Voice.

To Committee

After it passed HR 2416 July 19, the Senate immediately asked for a conference. But the House did not agree and on July 26 the bill was referred to the House Ways and Means Committee for consideration of the changes made by the Senate. There it remained at the close of the first session.

Drug Sales

A bill (HR 3298) to establish standards for over-the-counter sale of drugs, to ease prescription refill requirements and to tighten laws governing sale of certain drugs became law Oct. 26, 1951. It amended the Federal Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act.

The objectives of the measure as set out by a committee report were to protect the public from abuses in the sale of patent prescription drugs and to relieve pharmacists and the public from burdensome restrictions on dispensing drugs that were safe for use without medical supervision.

HOUSE

The bill was reported from the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee July 16. When the legislation came before the House Aug. 1, Joseph P. O'Hara (R Minn.) offered an amendment to witholding from the Federal Security Administrator authority to determine which drugs would be sold without a prescription. O'Hara said granting such power to the FSA chief would be "sugar - coated socialism." The amendment carried on a standing vote, 141 to 85. The bill was passed Aug. 1 on voice vote.

AMENDMENT ACCEPTED

Joseph P. O'Hara (R Minn.) — Drop provision empowering Federal Security Administrator to determine which drugs could be sold safely without prescription. Standing vote, 141-85.

SENATE

The House-passed bill was sent to the Senate where it was the subject of hearings Sept. 11-13, before the health subcommitee of the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee. Under Committee consideration also was a similar Senate bill (S 1186) which authorized the Federal Security Administrator to draw up a proposed list of drugs to be sold by prescription only.

The Committee decided to set aside the Senate bill. It then approved the House version and reported it to the upper chamber, after adding two minor amendments.

The Senate passed the bill Oct. 15 by voice vote.

The House agreed to the Senate amendments Oct. 17. On Oct. 26, the bill was signed by the President. This made it Public Law 215.

Narcotics Penalties

Stiffer narcotics controls were written into law in 1951 by the enactment of HR 3490, as Congress and the nation became acutely aware of the extent of drug addiction, especially among minors. Nineteen drug bills were introduced early in the session. During the entire 81st Congress only one narcotics control bill was introduced.

Giving special attention to growing addiction among teenagers were proposals which would made the selling of narcotics to minors a separate crime entailing a stricter sentence than would ordinary narcotics violations. Also, four bills introduced by New York Democrats would provide for establishment of a hospital for juvenile addicts. Three other suggested measures called for penalties of death or life imprisonment for narcotics violators.

The bill (HR 3490) that became law was placed in the hopper by Rep. Hale Boggs (D La.) on April 13 and was reported by the House Ways and Means Committee June 21. Its purpose was to make more stringent and uniform the penalties for violation of federal narcotic and marijuana laws. As enacted, the bill amended the Narcotic Drugs Import and Export Act and subjected narcotic violators, frequently drug addicts themselves, to longer periods of treatment or observation.

The measure provided that marijuana offenses would be put under the same scale of penalties as other narcotic offenses. Maximum penalties were set at $2,000 fine and two to five years imprisonment for the first offense, five to 10 years for the second, and 10 to 20 years for the third and subsequent offenses. There could be no probation or suspension of sentence on a second or subsequent offense. Offenses were the fraudulent importation, selling or buying of narcotics.

The House on July 16 passed the measure by voice vote. It was reported in the Senate Oct. 19 by the Finance Committee and was passed by the upper chamber by voice vote the next day.

On Nov. 2 President Truman approved the bill and it became Public Law 255. On signing the measure he said "the tragic effects of drug addiction. . .are only too self evident." The President also created an Interdepartmental Committee on Narcotics to study enforcement of narcotic laws and control of addiction.

Chemicals In Food

A special House committee during 1951 continued an investigation of the use of chemicals and synthetics in food products. Specifically it sought information to aid in drafting a proposed amendment to the Federal Food and Drug Act. The amendment would require food manufacturers to prove the human safety of chemicals before using them.

The committee — known officially as the Select Committee on Use of Chemicals, Pesticides and Insecticides In and With Respect to Food Products — was created June 20, 1950. The life of the Committee ended with the expiration of the 81st Congress.

The group, reporting Jan. 3, 1951, on its work during the previous six months, declared that existing laws were inadequate to protect the public from unsafe chemicals. Committee Chairman James J. Delaney (D N.Y.) said further hearings were necessary to study the proposed amendment.

Accordingly, the House Feb. 2, 1951, approved a resolution (H Res 74) to extend the Committee's life. A second resolution (H Res 447), to authorize the group to investigate the use of chemicals in cosmetics was passed Oct. 15.

To provide funds for the Committee's work, the House Feb. 20 approved a resolution (H Res 128) granting $50,000 for the investigation. This, with $30,000 provided by the 81st Congress, brought the total granted the Committee to $80,000.

The group held hearings at intervals throughout the year. Among those who testified were Farmer-Novelist Louis Bromfield and spokesmen for the Agriculture Department, the National Council of Farmer Cooperatives, chemical firms and the American Cancer Society.

Further hearings were planned for 1952.

Federal Jobless Pay

HR 5118

The House Oct. 4 refused by a 197-140 roll-call vote to suspend the rules to act on a bill (HR 5118) granting unemployment insurance to federal employees. (For voting, see page 200.)

The measure — a point in President Truman's legislative program on which he had requested Congressional approval — was approved Aug. 14 by the Ways and Means Committee. However, the Rules Committee refused to grant clearance of the bill to the House floor.

The measure would have provided unemployment benefits for about 2.5 million federal civilian workers employed in the United States, or elsewhere, if they were citizens of the United States. The bill provided that unemployment insurance laws of the state to which the workers' federal services and wages were assigned would govern the amount and duration of the benefits. The measure applied to workers unemployed after Dec. 31, 1951.

Rep. Aime J. Forand (D R.I.), sponsor of the bill, estimated the program would have cost between $15 and $20 million if it had been in effect during fiscal 1951.

Aid To Defense Area Schools

HR 5411

Summary — Legislation providing added authority for federal aid to schools in critical defense housing areas was completed by Congress Oct. 20 but died by pocket veto Nov. 2. In withholding his signature, President Truman said that while the purpose of the measure was a worthy one, it would promote segregation in schools.

The House Education and Labor Committee recommended HR 5411 Sept. 20. It was brought up in the House on a calendar day Oct. 15 and was vigorously opposed by Reps. Eugene J. McCarthy (D Minn.) and Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.). However, the House accepted on a roll-call vote of 257-55 (See page 200) a motion by Rp. Graham A. Barden (D N.C.) to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The Senate Labor Committee reported the measure Oct. 17 with an amendment to require schools receiving federal aid to conform to state laws. The Senate accepted the amendment and passed the bill without debate Oct. 19, by voice vote. The House agreed to the Senate amendment Oct. 20.

Provisions — The bill would have amended Public Laws 815 and 874, 81st Congress, which related to federal aid to schools in critical defense housing areas. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, 1950, p. 181.) It provided changes regarding eligibility of school districts, funds distribution, and method of payment by the federal government. It would have permitted critical defense areas to anticipate emergency school needs arising from federal defense activities and obtain funds in time to provide needed facilities.

Background — When the Senate April 9 passed the Defense Housing and Community Facilities and Services Act of 1951, it included provisions for federal aid to schools in defense housing areas. The provisions were deleted by the House when it passed the Act Aug. 15. In conference, Senate conferees agreed to omit the section with the understanding that the House Education and Labor Committee would recommend school aid in separate legislation. (See page 189.)

HOUSE

The House Education and Labor Committee recommended the bill Sept. 20.

On the House floor, Eugene J. McCarthy (D Minn.) lashed into the measure when it was considered on a calendar day Oct. 15. McCarthy charged the bill would aid segregated schools in the South but would ban payment of transportation costs in states which gave aid to parochial establishments. The bill called for "a pattern which insists upon discrimination where we do not have it and which underwrites it where we do have it."

Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) questioned whether federal funds could be used for purposes of segregated public schools. Graham A. Barden (D N.C.), who handled the bill on the floor, retorted that "the question of segregation of schools in North Carolina or South Carolina is no more the business of the gentlemen of New York than it is of mine as to what New York does in that field. . ."

Barden's motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill was approved on a 257-55 roll-call vote.

SENATE

The Senate Labor Committee recommended the bill Oct. 17 with an amendment to require educational authorities to operate schools receiving federal aid in conformity with the provisions of the laws of the states.

The Senate passed the measure Oct. 19 after a brief explanation and without debate. Passage was by voice vote.

The House accepted the Senate amendment by voice vote Oct. 20 and sent the measure to the White House.

President Truman permitted the period for signing to elapse Nov. 2 without approving the bill, thus giving it a pocket veto. The President said the purpose of HR 5411 was meritorious but objected to the provision requiring schools to conform to state laws. He said this would require racial segregation of schools on federal property now operating successfully on an "integrated basis."

Railroad Retirement

Summary — The Railroad Retirement Act of 1937 was amended in 1951 to increase annuities and pensions for retired railroad workers about 15 per cent and survivors' benefits about 33 1/3 per cent.

Both House and Senate conducted hearings on measures to increase benefits and make other changes in the law, and both passed bills to do so: the Senate on Oct. 15 (S 1347), and the House on Oct. 16 (HR 3669). The Senate then passed its bill under the House bill number, on Oct. 17.

A conference group retained the provisions largely as passed by the Senate, but it was under the House bill number, HR 3669, that the law was enacted.

On October 19 both Chambers approved the conference report, the House by a 340 to 0 roll-call vote (see page 200), and the Senate by voice vote.

The President signed HR 3669 on Oct. 30 and it became Public Law 234.

Provisions — These were the provisions of the bill:

Increase annuities and pensions to retired railroad workers by about 15 per cent.

Increase survivors' benefits by 33 1/3 per cent, with the provision that in no case would a survivor's benefit under the Railroad Retirement Act be less than it might be under Social Security.

Increase lump-sum death payments by 25 per cent where survivors were not eligible for other benefits.

Credit railmen with work performed after 65 years of age.

Grant to spouses benefits equal to 50 per cent of employees' annuities with a maximum of $40 a month.

Transfer to the Social Security program employees with less than ten years' experience on railroads at time of retirement. Also transfer the funds such workers and their employers would have contributed had they been under social security during the time.

HOUSE

More than 30 bills were introduced in the House to amend the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937. Chairman Robert Crosser (D Ohio) of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Commitee on April 12 introduced his plan for increasing annuities and survivors' benefits and providing annuities for wives of railroad workers (HR 3669).

Hearings

The Committee conducted daily hearings, on HR 3669 and the other bills to amend the Railroad Retirement Act, between May 15 and May 25. Eight Congressmen who had introduced bills on the subject testified. They were:

Reps. Paul Cunningham (R Iowa), Charles W. Vursell (R Ill.), Clement J. Zablocki (D Wis.) and Thor C. Tollefson (R Wash.) filed statements.

George E. Leighty, president of the Order of Railroad Telegraphers (AFL) and chairman of the Railway Labor Executives' Association, testified May 15. He told the Committee that in urging increased benefits under the retirement system, the workers did not want to endanger the solvency of the railroad retirement account.

Actuarial experts of the Railroad Retirement Board estimated the cost would be aproximately 14 per cent of the payroll, Leighty said, while the tax rate beginning in 1952 would yield 12.5 per cent of the payroll. "When the tax rate is within as little as 1.5 per cent of an estimated cost running to perpetuity, prudent financing does not require a change in the tax rate," he declared.

Counsel for the Railway Labor Executives Association, Lester P. Schoene, in appearances May 16, 17, and 18, gave a general and detailed discussion of retirement annuities, pensions and survivors' benefits.

J. P. Shields, grand chief engineer, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Cleveland, Ohio, also testified May 18. On May 21 Dorrance C. Bronson, actuary, and Clifford D. O'Brien, counsel, of the Brotherhood of Railway Engineers, testified.

The Committee May 23 heard from Thomas Stack, president, National Railroad Pension Forum, Inc., Chicago. Another Forum witness, Walt Sands, appeared the next day, and Forum representatives in Baltimore, Md., Covington, Ky., Minneapolis, Minn., Louisville, Ky., and Savannah Ga., filed statements.

Clarence B. Carter, national secretary of the Railroad Pension Conference, New Haven, Conn., appeared May 24. J. Carter Fort, vice-president and general counsel for the Association of American Railroads, was a witness May 24 and 25. Other AAR witnesses also testified.

In final public hearings June 5 and 6 several witnesses who had already testified returned to refute statements by others.

Committee

The Committee on Sept. 19 reported a different version of HR 3669, labelled the Hall substitute for Rep. Leonard W. Hall (R N.Y.). A minority of the Committee preferred a substitute close to Crosser's original bill.

The Committee-approved Hall bill would have increased pensions and annuities 15 per cent, survivors' annuities 33 1/3 per cent, and lump-sum survivors' benefits 25 per cent. It did not alter the $300 tax base and did not add spouses' benefits.

The Crosser substitute would have raised pensions and annuities by about 13.8 per cent and survivor benefits between 60 and 87 per cent. It increased the taxable base to $400, denied annuity payments to annuitants earning $50 a month provided that workers with less than 10 years' railroad experience before retirement should be transferred to the Social Security rolls, and established a spouse's annuity equal to half the employee's entitlement, but not more than $50.

Outside Congress, there was disagreement over the bills. The Railway Labor Executives Association supported the Crosser version, while its member organization, the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, preferred the Hall substitute.

A BRT spokesman said that the Hall version was also supported by the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, the Order of Railway Conductors, and the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.

Floor Action

The measure was debated on the House floor for two hours on Oct. 4. The debate was general, on the relative merits of the Crosser version — Crosser had offered his as an amendment — and on the Hall substitute recommended by the Committee. A vote had been scheduled for Oct. 5, but on that day House Majority Leader John W. McCormack (D Mass.) said that its further consideration would be delayed until the week of Oct. 15. Members said the delay had been arranged in the hope that a compromise might be worked out between the Hall and Crosser versions.

On Oct. 16 when the bill was taken up again a compromise substitute similar to the Hall version was offered by Oren Harris (D Ark.). The Senate had passed railroad retirement legislation (S 1347) the day before and Harris told the House his bill had been drawn by a majority of Committee members at the last minute in an attempt to bring it into line with the Senate - passed measure.

"It will be entirely acceptable to the four operating (railway) Brotherhoods . . . and very likely be acceptable to the non - operating Brotherhoods," he said. "Furthermore, I believe I would be right in saying that it would be acceptable to the railroad industry."

The Crosser version was endorsed by Reps. Hugh D. Scott, Jr. (R Pa.), Lindley Beckworth (D Tex.) and John B. Bennett (R Mich.). "In order to raise the benefits under the Railroad Retirement System," Bennett said, "you ought to provide new sources of revenue. The Crosser bill . . provides for new sources of income to meet the increases that are proposed."

Reps. James S. Golden (R Ky.), Carl Hinshaw (R Calif.), John Bell Williams (D Miss.), John A. McGuire (D Conn.), John V. Beamer (R Ind.), Dwight L. Rogers (D Fla.), Charles A. Wolverton (R N.J.), and J. Percy Priest (D Tenn.) opposed the Crosser version and supported the Harris substitute.

The House voted down the Crosser substitute, first on a division vote, 99-139, then on teller vote, 114-158. The Harris measure was then substituted for the Committee - approved Hall bill. It was amended slightly, accepted as the bill (HR 3669) on voice vote, then passed by voice vote.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

J. Edgar Chenoweth (R Colo.) — Amend the Harris substitute to permit a worker to change his decision for joint husband-wife benefits. Voice vote.

Oren Harris (D Ark.) — Substitute provisions similar to Senate bill for House Committee measure. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Charles J. Kersten (R Wis.)— Amend Crosser substitute to provide full benefits for widows of certain employees who died before they could become fully covered. Voice vote.

Robert Crosser (D Ohio) — Substitute for Committee measure more sweeping overhaul of Act. Standing 99-139, teller 114-158.

Kersten -- Amend Harris substitute to provide full benefits for widows of certain empoyees who died before they could become fully covered. Voice.

SENATE

The Senate's companion bill (to HR 3669) was S 1347 introduced by James E. Murray (D Mont.) on April 18.

Hearings

The Senate Labor Subcommittee, in hearings April 27 and 28, heard first from George E. Leighty, chairman, and Lester P. Schoene, counsel, of the Railway Labor Executives Association. They favored a bill to raise benefits an average of 13.8 per cent without increasing contributions by the employers and employees.

J. Carter Fort of the Association of the American Railroads told Chairman Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) that the companies would need another two weeks to prepare their case because of the importance and complexity of the subject. Leighty protested against any "undue delay" and said former rail workers now getting benefits "cannot meet their obligations and need relief" quickly. Fort observed that the railroads did not necessarily consider themselves adverse to the bills and were seeking information before drawing up their views. Douglas agreed to allow the railroads until May 11 to prepare their testimony.

On May 1 and 2 Walter Matscheck, director of research, Joseph Musher, chief actuary, and other actuarial representatives of the Railroad Retirement Board testified concerning the costs of the various provisions of the bill.

Rep. James E. Van Zandt (R Pa.) appeared May 3 and told the Senate Committee benefits should be increased. He said there were retired railroaders and survivors of railroad workers in his district "who are actually hungry and living under conditions that you and I would find repulsive to the American way of life . . . These people are the victims of a frozen income over which they have no control."

At Subcommittee hearings May 14, Wilbur Cohen, assistant to the Administrator, and Robert J. Myers, actuarial consultant, both of the Social Security Administration, discussed the possible savings accruing to the railroad retirement fund by the transfer of railroad retirement employees with less than 10 years of service to the social security system, as S 1347 proposed.

Murray W. Latimer, who from 1934 until 1946 was Chairman of the Railroad Retirement Board, said the proposal "would result in a tax levy on the vast majority of railroad workers from now on in perpetuity, and in return for which it is not proposed to give equivalent value." He said it would reduce 20,000 or 25,000 annuities, "introduce inequities and anomalies on a staggering scale," worsen labor relations on the railroads, and that if it were passed "either the Railroad Retirement System will collapse or there will be government subsidy."

Committee

The Subcommittee in executive session Aug. 14 recommended an increase in retirement, annuities, pensions and a larger increase in benefits for widows and orphans. It also approved a proposal for a fact-finding study to determine the amount of the proposed increases which the retirement fund could sustain safely without a raise in tax rates. It agreed to reserve decision, pending conclusion of the study, on the proposal to integrate benefits of employees with less than 10 years of railroad service with the Social Security System, the proposal to increase the maximum creditable and taxable compensation from $300 to $400 a month, and other issues.

The Subcommittee at the same time expressed the hope it would report a bill embodying some of these issues during the session.

It did so, and the full Labor and Public Welfare Committee on Oct. 3 approved its amended version of S 1347. This was reported in the Senate on Oct. 4.

As reported, the bill would have increased annuities and pensions by 15 per cent; survivors' benefits by 33 1/3 per cent, with a proviso that in no case would a survivors' benefit under railroad retirement be less than it might be under social security; introduced benefits for spouses, equal to one-half of employees' benefits up to a maximum of $40 a month; increased the tax base from $300 to $350 a month; and transferred to the social security system employees with less than 10 years on railroads at time of retirement, with the amounts which the workers and their employers would have contributed had they been under social security during the time.

Floor Action

S 1347 was debated and acted upon Oct. 15. Subcommittee Chairman Douglas explained the bill and led the brief discussion. He told the Senate the bill compromised requests made by different rail unions. The bill then was passed by voice vote in the form recommended by the Committee, without further amendment.

(The Senate also adopted on voice vote a bill (S Con Res 51) to set up a joint House-Senate committee for a study to work out a more comprehensive, long-range revision of the railroad retirement system. The House approved this resolution with a technical amendment on Oct. 16 by voice vote, and the Senate on Oct. 17 accepted the House change, also by voice vote.)

After the House passed its bill (HR 3669) Oct. 16, the Senate took it up. The upper chamber amended the House bill to the text of the Senate bill (S 1347), it was passed without objection, and a conference was requested.

CONFERENCE

The conferees agreed unanimously to recommend the bill (HR 3669) in a version closely following that passed by the Senate, except that the Senate plan to increase the tax base from $300 to $350 was dropped.

The main differences accepted were the Senate introduction of annuity provisions for 65-year-old widowers who had received at least one-half their support from their wives at the time of the wife's death or retirement, and the Senate provision for the transferral to the Social Security system of employees with less than 10 years' railroad experience.

The House approved the conference report Oct. 19 by a roll-call vote of 340 to 0 (see page 200). The Senate approved it the same day by voice vote.

HR 3669 was signed by President Truman Oct. 30 and became Public Law 234.

Mr. Truman said the bill provided "badly-needed increases" and welcomed the joining of the previously separate railroad retirement plan with the general system of old-age insurance.

He added that he hoped recommendations of the Congressional committee studying the overall railroad retirement system would be made in time for legislative action in 1952.

Under the act, maximum monthly payments of $144 were raised to $165.60, and the minimum of $20 was increased to $23. It was estimated that 400,000 former railroad workers and families were affected by the increases.

Group Stands

During the prolonged retirement amendment discussions, lobby registrations on the subject totaled 38 (see page 694.) At one point during House consideration of the Hall and Crosser versions, 21 supported the Crosser version and 17, mostly the operating brotherhoods, preferred the amended, simplified Hall version.

Mutual Security Act Of 1951

Summary — Congressional action was completed Oct. 8, 1951, on an omnibus bill (HR 5113) authorizing $7,483,400,000 in foreign economic and military aid under the Mutual Security Act of 1951.

The authorization was about $1 billion under the amount requested by the President and reflected the economy - mindedness of most Republicans and some Democrats. However, HR 5113 authorized approximately $150 million more than Congress actually appropriated for the program.

House action on the huge authorization measure began June 26 when the Foreign Affairs Committee opened hearings. The Committee approved the bill Aug. 9 after listening to scores of witnesses, mostly supporters of the Administration program. The House passed the measure Aug. 17 after two days of debate highlighted by Republican efforts to effect severe trims in the amount authorized.

The Administration took its case to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee July 26 and there, as in the House, the big battles were over economy. The bill received Committee approval Aug. 24 and was passed by the Senate Aug. 31 after three days of debate.

Senate-House conferees agreed on a compromise version Sept. 27. The Senate approved the compromise Oct. 2 and the House took similar action on Oct. 5, but also knocked out a provision making the Mutual Security Director a board member of the Export-Import Bank. The Senate accepted the altered measure Oct. 8.

The President signed HR 5113 Oct. 10, and it became Public Law 165. Both the Senate and House on Oct. 25 approved a compromise bill (HR 5684 — Public Law 249) appropriating $7,328,903,796 to run the program.

Provisions

In addition to the new authorization the bill included a re-authorization of $816,700,000 in unspent funds. The aggregate would be used to promote U.S. security and foreign policy by granting military, economic and technical aid to friendly nations to strengthen the collective defenses of the free world.

Detailed provisions:

Authorize for Europe $5.028 billion military and $1.022 billion economic aid for North Atlantic Treaty countries and other countries the President determines to be vital to the North Atlantic defense. He must report such determination to appropriate Congressional committees; includes Greece and Turkey among Europe economic aid recipients. (Those nations received military aid under the Near East program.)

Permit use of up to $100 million of the European military aid for recruiting Iron Curtain country refugees for military units.

Allow up to $10 million of the European economic aid to encourage population shifts from overcrowded areas to areas with manpower shortages.

Aid For Near, Far East

Authorize $396,250,000 for military aid to Greece, Turkey and Iran. Up to 10 per cent of this could be spent on other Near East countries if the President determines it is of "critical importance" to the mutual defense program.

Authorize $160 million for economic and technical aid in Africa and the Near East. Of this $50 million could be used to aid Arab refugees from Palestine and another $50 million for aid to refugees going to Israel.

Authorize $535,250,000 in military aid for the area of China, the Philippines and Korea. The President could use up to $50 million of this without specifying the nature of the spending, if it were in the security interests of the U.S.

Authorize for the same China area $237,500,000 for economic aid.

Authorize $45 million for a U.S. contribution to the United Nations Korean Reconstruction Agency. Up to 50 per cent of this could be transferred to the China area economic aid fund.

Authorize $38,150,000 in military aid to American Republics, provided its use promotes the defense of the Western Hemisphere.

Authorize $21,250,000 for technical aid to the American Republics.

Abolish the Economic Cooperation Administration, set up Mutual Security Agency and transfer to it the functions of ECA. Prohibit ECA powers from extending beyond June 30, 1952, except those the President determines necessary for the mutual security program. Require the President to notify Congressional committee which powers are to be extended.

New Agency's Duties

Duties of the new Agency: Administration of the military aid programs in recipient countries; provision of equipment and money aid for those countries; provision of limited economic aid to countries where the U. S. has joint control (such as Austria).

Place responsibility for operation of both the mutual security program and the Mutual Security Agency in a Director for Mutual Security, at a salary of $22,500 a year. Director and his three top aides must be appointed by the President with Senate approval.

Establish the functions of the Director as integrating and coordinating the operations of the State and Defense Departments in the mutual security program.

Stipulate that nothing in the Act infringes on powers of the Secretary of State.

Make the Secretary of Defense responsible for determining military end-item needs, procurement of military equipment, supervision of equipment use and of training foreign military personnel, settting of priorities and apportionment of funds between services.

Allow the Defense Secretary to furnish up to $1 billion in military items out of the U.S. supplies, subject to reimbursement from aid funds.

Fund Transfer Power

Give the President authority to apportion funds between countries and permit him to transfer up to 10 per cent of the funds from one area to another. In doing so he must notify Congress.

Allow use of up to $55 million of European economic aid to increase production of strategic materials in which the U.S. is deficient.

Require that as much as possible, and at least 10 per cent, of the aid be in the form of loans.

Permit Europe - aid funds to be used for acquisition or construction of facilities for collective defense.

Prohibit use of aid funds for rental or purchase of land or for payment of taxes.

Require one of the following security clearance procedures for Americans assigned to duties under the program:

(1) An FBI investigation followed by a report submitted to the MSA Director or the Secretary of State. The appropriate one of these officials must certify he believes the employee to be loyal. Copies of the certification must be filed with the Senate and House Foreign Relations and Foreign Affairs committees, respectively.

Or (2) a military intelligence agency must investigate the employee and the Defense Secretary must certify he believes the employee loyal. Copies of the certification go to the two Congressional Committees. (The security clearance does not apply to officials appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate.)

Conditions For Aid

Prohibit aid — military, economic, or technical — from going to any nation unless the President finds it will strengthen U. S. security and the recipient country has agreed to: Promote peace; take mutually agreed on action to eliminate causes of international tension; fulfill military obligations it has assumed in agreements with the U. S.; contribute its share toward development of its and the free world's defensive strength.

Set forth this policy of Congress: That the program be administered to encourage private enterprise in developing resources of recipient nations; discourage "cartel and monopolistic business practices" in "certain" recipient countries because they "result in restricting production and increasing prices"; encourage "the development and strengthening of the free labor union movements as the collective bargaining agencies of labor within such countries."

Require participating countries to establish fair labor standards of wages, working conditions, and management-labor relations.

Permit appropriate Congressional committees and staffs concerned with the program to use counterpart funds without charge to appropriations for the committees.

Require the President to report to Congress every six months on the operation of the program. The report is to be prepared by the Mutual Security Director.

Background

The Mutual Security Program enacted in 1951 merged two previous programs of multi-billion dollar economic and military aid to foreign nations.

The economic aid was first authorized in 1948, and renewed in 1949 and 1950. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, 1949, p. 334, and Vol. VI, 1950, p. 204.)

The military assistance program was inaugurated in 1949 to implement the North Atlantic Treaty and was extended the following year. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, 1949, p. 351, and Vol. VI, 1950, p. 220.)

On May 24, 1951, President Truman called upon the 82nd Congress to approve an $8.5 billion "Mutual Security Program" which would consolidate the previous foreign aid projects. The request broke down into $6.3 billion for military and $2.2 billion for economic help. In preparing the cost estimates, he said, "each of these separate programs has been revised in the light of the emergency situation that exists in the world." Economic help for Europe was "now being directed primarily to support rearmament," he pointed out.

HOUSE

Hearings

The House Foreign Affairs Committee opened hearings June 26 on the Mutual Security Program.

Secretary of State Dean Acheson, the initial witness, urged the Committee to endorse the program as the chief way to stop Soviet expansion by "encroachment." He warned that economic aid was just as important as military assistance, and hoped Congress would not take "too narrow a view" of the need for the former.

Testifying June 27, Acheson said there was "no thought" of U. S. military intervention in the Iranian crisis (involving control of that nation's oil resources) but that our government was "bending every effort to bring about a favorable solution." He noted that Iran was included among the countries the MSP would benefit, and said "we must consider the program for Iran as apart from this particular crisis."

Acheson urged June 28 that the Economic Cooperation Administration, scheduled to disband by July 1, 1952, be kept intact to handle the MSP. Chairman James P. Richards (D S.C.) agreed that the ECA's experts should be kept on, but said the agency itself should expire at the set date. Walter H. Judd (R Minn.) concurred.

Marshall Testifies

George C. Marshall, then Secretary of Defense, was the second witness. The cabinet officer June 29 underscored previous testimony by Acheson that a cease-fire in Korea should not cause this country to relax its mobilization efforts. Said Marshall: "In some ways, we should be making an even geater effort." Basically, he said, "Korea is an incident in the world picture."

As Acheson had, Marshall stressed the European need for economic assistance. He said the more immediate need for military assistance should not eclipse the long-range importance of economic aid, which itself helped recipient nations to move ahead on their rearmament programs.

Marshall declared July 2 the MSP was not "padded" in its money estimates, but really had been "pared" to the bone. He said he thought the European Recovery Program (the Marshall Plan) as such could be ended on schedule, and its major function be carried forward in the MSP. He declared that Spain, Turkey and Greece should be admitted to the NATO.

W. Averell Harriman, special adviser to President Truman on foreign affairs, testified July 3. He also warned against relaxation in the event of a Korean peace, or reliance exclusively on military build-ups to stop the Kremlin. He stressed the importance of the MSP as a way for the U. S. to hold its allies, and cautioned against pressures for this country to try to "go it alone."

Bradley Says Aid Vital

The over - all foreign aid proposal was supported July 13 by Gen. Omar N. Bradley, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, who said America's defense frontiers to the east were still "in the heart of Europe" and that military aid to western Europe was essential to meet the threat of Soviet aggression

XUM

Bradley testified that in addition to providing planes, tanks, guns and other military items, the program should furnish NATO members with other assistance in the form of machine tools, production equipment, and other essentials "to help them build their own armament industries."

Paul G. Hoffman, former Economic Cooperation Administrator, July 17 outlined for the Committee a four-point program with which he said the U.S. and its friends could win the "cold war." Supporting the huge foreign aid program, he warned that the alternative to winning on the military, political, informational and economic fronts was a billion-dollar-a-day word conflict. He said a single, independent agency should control both economic and military dollars.

But later that day, Nelson Rockefeller, former Assistant Secretary of State and wartime Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs, testified and bluntly disagreed with the Hoffman single agency plan.

Before the Committee July 18, George W. Perkins, Assistant Secretary of State for European affairs, reported a new "heads up" attitude in western Europe, reflecting a steady improvement in the peoples' morale.

Terming the defense of western Europe "in effect a defense of the United States", Gen. J. Lawton Collins July 19 told the Committee it was by no means certain the U.S. could survive the political, economic and military onslaught that could be expected if Europe and the Middle East should fall under Communist domination.

The Army Chief of Staff strongly endorsed the Administration's proposed $8.5 billion foreign aid program.

Soviet Expansion Cited

George C. McGhee, Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern, South Asian and African Affairs, July 20 cited Russia's traditional urge to expand toward the south as a strong reason for authorizing $540 million in military and economic aid for the Near East and Africa.

Also July 20, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce filed a statement with the Committee urging approval of the Mutual Security Program, but said it believed the aid should be limited to $5 billion for the current fiscal year.

Admiral Forrest P. Sherman was represented before the Committee July 21, two days before Sherman's death, by his deputy, Vice Admiral Donald B. Duncan. Speaking for Sherman, Duncan urged expansion of military aid to the Middle East area, and said the U.S. should take all reasonable steps toward maintaining stability in that area. He quoted Sherman as regarding the "strategic importance of the Eastern Mediterranean and Middle East as almost equal to that of the North Atlantic Treaty area itself."

McGhee, appearing before the Committee again July 24, said the Administration had developed an $80 million program of American aid for five South Asian nations which would stress food production. The proposed aid, to cover India, Pakistan, Ceylon, Afghanistan and Nepal, would bring large returns in furthering U.S. security interests, McGhee said.

A Congress of Industrial Organizations spokesman testifying July 24 approved the Mutual Security Program but urged greater emphasis on "non-military aspects."

Turning to another phase of the program July 25, the Committee heard Assistant Secretary of State Edward G. Miller, Jr., advocate $62 million in aid to Latin America. He said Latin America had agreed to fight Communist aggression with force, but needed financial help in building up its armies. Of the proposed $62 million, $40 million would go for military aid and $22 million for technical cooperation programs.

The Committee wound up hearings on the Mutual Security Program with sessions July 27, 28, 30 and 31. Witnesses at the closed sessions included ECA and Army spokesmen, July 27; Ambassadors Charles M. Spofford, U.S. Deputy to the North Atlantic Council, and Milton Katz, ECA representative for Europe, July 28; officials from the State and Defense Departments and the Navy, July 30, and Lt. Gen. Alfred M. Gruenther, Chief of Staff, Supreme Headquarters Allied Powers, Europe, July 31.

The Committee then began the task of writing HR 5113.

Committee Report

It approved Aug. 9 a foreign economic and military aid program for fiscal 1952, cutting $651,250,000 from the $8.5 billion requested by the President. The authorization recommended was $7,848,750,000.

The Committee also proposed a new agency — the Mutual Security Administration — to handle all foreign aid programs, except those involving procurement and distribution of military equipment, to be handled by the Defense Department. It stipulated that nothing contained in the bill "shall be construed to infringe upon the powers or functions of the Secretary of State." Chairman Richards said this was to protect the over-all foreign policy authority of the State Department.

An attempt in Committee by Reps. Clement J. Zablocki (D Wis.) and Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., (D N.Y.) to add the controversial St. Lawrence Seaway proposal to the foreign aid bill failed when Richards ruled the project was not within the intended scope of the bill.

Floor Action

The omnibus foreign aid bill (HR 5113) was passed by the House Aug. 17, after the chamber had trimmed $350 million from the economic aid program for Western Europe.

The reduction was not as great as some Republicans sought. As the House took up the bill Aug. 16, Minority Leader Joseph W. Martin, Jr., (Mass.) reported strong GOP inclinations to cut "up to a billion dollars" from the bill.

These were among the views brought out in debate:

Howard W. Smith (D Va.) told the House he was "apprehensive" about the possibility that weapons supplied to then friendly nations might some day be turned against the U.S. He named Iran as an example.

Charles W. Vursell (R Ill.) called for a cut of $2 billion from the bill. E. E. Cox (D Ga.) said he was resigned to backing the foreign assistance programs as a form of insurance. John M. Vorys (R Ohio) believed military aid to nations "who will fight on our side" is "sound economy."

Warns Against Isolationism

Committee Chairman Richards cautioned against isolationism and pleaded for no cuts beyond those written into the bill by his Committee. He told the House that war with Russia was not inevitable. The aid program was offered "not to fight a war" but "to prevent a war."

The House got down to work on individual provisions late Aug. 17. First to be considered were a series of amendments to cut the funds authorized. All these first economy moves were defeated.

Lawrence H. Smith (R Wis.) proposed a slash in military aid funds of $328 million and reduction of economic aid funds by $672 million. James G. Fulton (R Pa.) recommended cuts in military funds of $200 million and in economic funds of $300 million.

"I know how sacred a proposition this military thing is," Smith told the House, "but in view of the testimony before our Committee I think my cut of $328 million is as much justified as is the figure that is in the bill."

Fulton said the proffered cuts were minor in the long-range foreign-aid program. "A cut of two per cent," he said, "is simply saying to these fellows, 'Be careful of your administrative expenses. Use up the large balances of funds these programs already have from previous programs.' "

"It was the wholehearted and overwhelming opinion of the members of this Committee when we reported this bill," Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., (D N.Y.) countered, "that this was a fair and absolutely rock-bottom figure if we were going to help the people of Western Europe before it was too late."

"Now it is all right for you gentlemen," Abraham A. Ribicoff (D Conn.) said in opposition to the cuts, "to go back to your home districts and say that we have cut this bill and that we have saved $500 million. But will you be frank enough to go back to your district and tell your people that at the same time you are hurting the security of the United States?"

House Rejects Cuts

Usher L. Burdick (R N.D.) said he would support all amendments to cut the bill and would vote "no" on the entire bill. The program, he said, was not necessary. "Over five years have passed since the shooting in World War II stopped," Burdick said, "and Western Europe has been exposed to overwhelming Russian armies ever since — but no trouble has broken out, and in my opinion no trouble will break out."

These cuts were rejected by the House without record votes. The two Smith amendments went down, 132-162 and 135-167 on standing and teller votes, respectively. The Fulton amendments were voted down 127-166 and 146-149 on standing and teller votes, respectively.

Thomas B. Curtis (R Mo.) then offered an amendment making Senate ratification necessary before any European nation not in the Atlantic Pact could be given aid. He said the restriction was aimed at aid to Spain and Yugoslavia. The amendment lost on standing vote, 45-83.

Moves to cut sections giving aid to Africa and the Near East, to refugees in Israel and to South and Central America all were rejected on nonrecord votes.

John M. Vorys (R Ohio) obtained approval for an amendment specifying that the President could not circumvent the single - agency administration of the foreign aid program by reserving some of the powers to himself and then delegating them to a different agency or to the State Department.

Roosevelt sought to modify the Vorys amendment to permit the President to administer personally some of the powers and delegate others to the Secretary of Defense, but was beaten, 66-126, on standing vote. The Vorys amendment carrid, 134-91, standing vote.

A proposal which, he said, would tend to prevent future black markets and surplus-property scandals was pushed through by Herbert C. Bonner (D N.C.), Chairman of a House subcommittee investigating disposal of World War II surplus property. His amendment, agreed to on voice vote, specified that unused aid materials or equipment be returned to the United States.

After Administration forces had defeated almost all restricting amendments to the bill, the House prepared to give final approval to the measure. But B. Carroll Reece (R Tenn.) moved unexpectedly to send the bill back to the Foreign Affairs Committee with instructions to cut the economic aid to Europe section by $350 million.

House Passage

A roll-call vote was demanded. The motion carried, 186-177, and the required cut was made immediately.

The House then passed HR 5113 as amended 260-101 on roll-call vote. (For voting, see page 262.)

In the roll call on final passage Democrats voted for the measure, 179-20. Republicans opposed it, 80-81. On the Economic Aid funds cut roll call, Democrats opposed the cut, 37-162; Republicans supported it, 149-14.

The House-approved bill would have authorized the following expenditures (in millions):

	Military	Economic	Total
Europe	$5.028	$ 985	$6.013
Near East and Africa	415	175	590
Asia and the Pacific	530	237.5	767.5
Korean Rehabilitation		11.25	11.25
Latin America	40	22	62
ECA (for strategic materials)		55	55
Totals	6,013	1,485.75	7,498.75

The bill also would set up a special agency, the Mutual Security Administration, to administer the program. It would take over the work of the Economic Cooperation Administration and the International Security Affairs Committee of the State Department and would be independent of the State Department.

SENATE

Hearings

The Administration took its case for foreign aid to the Senate July 26 when the Foreign Relations Committee opened hearings on the $8.5 billion program requested by the President. This Committee was joined on July 30 by the Armed Services Committee which also had claimed jurisdiction over the bill because of its military aspects. Joint meetings then were held.

Secretary of State Dean Acheson, first witness, told the Foreign Relations group, he termed the Mutual Security Program "an essential and vital part of our country's defense and foreign policies." He said it would take about $25 billion spread over the next three years to provide U.S. allies with "capital equipment" for defense. He contended that aid given to allies would yield larger and faster returns in national security than would come from spending the same amount on our own armed forces.

Defense Secretary George C. Marshall testified July 27 that the foreign aid program was "the best investment" the United States could make in the interest of world peace.

Marshall strongly objected to proposals to spread the proposed $8.5 billion in military and economic aid abroad over two years instead of one.

Giving his estimate of the number of troops in Western Europe, Marshall said European allies expect to have 2.5 million men in service by the end of 1952. The number of American servicemen in Europe would be 400,000, Marshall said. His estimate of U.S. troop strength in Europe was immediately challenged by Congressmen who said they had understood from testimony he gave Congress during its "Troops to Europe" debate (See page 226), Feb. 15 that the figure would be 200,000, making up six divisions.

In a clarifying letter July 29, Marshall said the 400,000 figure was right. The 200,000 difference in the two figures supposedly was due to different estimates on the number of supporting troops needed for the six divisions authorized by Congress.

Joint Meetings

The Senate July 30 officially referred the foreign aid bill to two Committees jointly, the Armed Services and Foreign Relations groups, after Armed Services won its argument that the $8.5 billion program, mostly for military aid, was an armed service problem.

Gen. J. Lawton Collins, Army Chief of Staff, in testifying July 31, put the U.S. troop strength on a different basis than had Gen. Marshall — 344,000 by the end of the fiscal year, June 30, 1952.

Gen. Alfred M. Gruenther, Dwight D. Eisenhower's Chief of Staff, gave the two Committees in closed session Aug. 1 deails of "steady progress" in organizing North Atlantic Treaty forces.

Tom Connally (D Tex.), acting as chairman of the two Committees, said Gruenther gave Eisenhower's two main objectives as: Development of a "defensive posture" in the North Atlantic sufficient to deter aggression, and buildup of enough strength to defeat the aggressor if war comes. He also said Eisenhower was emphasizing air power in defense planning.

Part of a proposed $700 million cut in the aid program was opposed Aug. 2 by witnesses before the Committees. Ambassador Charles M. Spofford, U.S. Representative to the North Atlantic Council of Deputies, and Ambassador Milton Katz, ECA special representative in Europe, said a $285 million reduction in the $1.6 billion in economic aid for Europe would hurt European military production more than the amount indicated.

Spofford also testified that production of military equipment in Europe roughly had doubled in a year.

Threat Averted

Reporting on the following day's closed session, Connally said Gen. William H. Arnold, head of the U.S. military mission to Turkey, convinced the Commitees that "there is no prospect of a direct attack on Turkey by Communist forces" as there was when the Greek-Turkish aid program began.

Assistant Secretary of State George C. McGhee told the Senators that he proposed $540 million in aid for the Near East and Africa would "bolster political stability and security."

Turning to the Latin America aid program, Senators Aug. 6 were told by Lt. Gen. Charles L. Bolte that military assistance to those nations would relieve the U.S. of the need to station 100,000 troops in the Caribbean area in case of war. That was the number of troops kept in the area during World War II, Bolte said.

Edward G. Miller, Jr., an Assistant Secretary of State, told the Committee that the American Republics had put up $3 for every $1 furnished by the U.S. and would take over the major share of the area's defenses.

Dr. Henry C. Bennett, Technical Cooperation Administrator, State Department, said that agreements had been made with 32 countries for "Point Four" technical assistance, and urged approval of the $67 million proposed for such aid.

Arguments for keeping the present administrative setup for operating the foreign aid program were given the Committees Aug. 7 by Carlisle H. Humelsine, Deputy Undersecretary of State, and Thomas D. Cabot, Coordinator of International Security Affairs in the State Department.

Far East Danger Point

R. Allen Griffin, Director of ECA's Far East Division, told the Senators Aug 8 that "the most active threat to security of the free world today is in the Far East," and that Chinese Communists would increase pressure in Southeast Asia. Griffin outlined proposed aid to Formosa, the Philippines, Indo-China, Burma, Indonesia and Thailand.

Another witness, Assistant Secretary of State John D. Hickerson, estimated the cost of reconstruction in Korea when peace was restored would be $250 million. Other witnesses Aug. 8 included Assistant Secretary of State Dean Rusk and Dr. Raymond Moyer, head of the ECA mission on Formosa.

Gen. Bradley, head of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, testified Aug. 9 that even the full $8.5 billion sought by the Administration might not be enough, because of rising prices.

Revision Begins

With foreign aid hearings concluded, the Foreign Relations and Armed Services Committees began Aug. 13 the revision of the $8.5 billion bill and Senators began to take sides on whether the authorization should be cut.

Robert A. Taft (R Ohio), chairman of the Senate Republican Policy Committee, said he did not believe military aid to Western Europe could be cut much, but recommended slashing in half the proposed $2.2 billion in economic aid.

Walter F. George (D Ga.) of the Foreign Relations Committee called for a $2 billion cut in the measure. William F. Knowland (R Calif.) of the Armed Services Committee Aug. 13 filed a motion with the two Committees to cut the aid program across the board by $1.275 billion or 15 per cent. J. William Fulbright (D Ark.) of the Foreign Relations Committee said Aug. 14 that a 10 per cent reduction "might not be far off."

In an effort to save the program from heavy cuts, President Truman and Administration leaders met Aug. 16 with Senate leaders of both parties, and warned them that any reductions would seriously interfere with the fight against communism.

Committee

The combined Committees agreed tentatively Aug. 22 to accept most House totals for the foreign aid program.

On Aug. 24, they unanimously agreed to a $7,535,750,000 bill that was similar in funds authorized to the House-passed version, but was different in administrative setup.

The Committees recommended a total $964,250,000 below the original Administration request, but $37 million above the House figure. As recommended by the Committees, the bill authorized (in millions):

	Military	Economic	Total
Europe	$5,013.35	$1,130.5	$6,173.85
Near East and Africa	396.25	122.5	518.75
Asia and the Pacific	535.25	254.5	789.75
Latin America	38.15	15.25	53.4
Totals	$6,013	$1,522.75	$7,535.75

The Senate Committees also recommended that these changes be made in the House bill:

Place a ceiling of $10 million on funds to be given to the International Refugee Organization.

Lower the ceiling on economic aid earmarked for Palestine refugees from $50 million to $40 million each for Jewish and Arab refugees.

Place $100 million limitation on aid to refugees from Communist countries.

Cut from $450 million to $150 million the value of "excess" United States weapons which could be sent abroad (over and above other arms aid in the bill).

Authorize the President to use up to 50 per cent of Far East funds earmarked for Korean rehabilitation for economic aid in other Far East countries, provided rehabilitation work were not possible in Korea.

Drop a stipulation that 20 per cent of the economic and technical aid authorized must be in ECA loans.

Drop a provision for a Congressional "watchdog" committee to keep an eye on the program.

Drop the House single-agency plan for administration of the entire plan and divided authority among the Defense Department, State Department and ECA.

Authorize an independent coordinating board to operate under the President.

Exempt from the June 30, 1954, termination date of the bill Greek-Turkish aid, "Point Four" economic aid to underdeveloped areas and the Institute of American Affairs.

Floor Action

By a roll-call vote of 61-5, the Senate Aug. 31 passed the foreign aid authorization (HR 5113.) Before it did so, however, there were closer roll-call tests on proposals for changes, and the funds recommended by two Senate Committees — for Western Europe military and economic aid were reduced. (For voting, see page 264.)

Debate opened on the Senate floor Aug. 29, with Tom Connally (D Tex.) leading off. Connally had presided at the joint meetings his Foreign Relations Committee and the Armed Services Committee held on HR 5113.

Delay in approving the military aid program, Connally said, would mean a delay in "completing the rearmament of the free world and a consequent prolonging of our rearmament program. In the long run that would mean that this program would cost us a great deal more, not less."

The economic aid, he added, "is largely designed to complement the military aid and to make it possible for the Europeans themselves to produce a larger proportion of the total military needs."

Blair Moody (D Mich.) urged approval of the bill. "Too little is being done too slowly to modernize Europe," he said.

Opponents of the bill got in their licks Aug. 30. William Langer (R N.D.) criticized the entire foreign policies of Presidents Franklin D. Roosevelt and Harry S. Truman.

George W. Malone (R Nev.) told the Senate "The American taxpayers are unable to carry the burden" of the foreign aid program. He said the total national debt, if divided among the states, would exceed the total taxable value of some states.

Press For Cuts

Several Senators indicated in the Aug. 30 debate that they would press for changes, some of them for reductions.

XUM

But Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) opposed all suggested cuts. The Administration figures, he said, assumed "a calculated risk for minimum security."

William F. Knowland (R Calif.) replied, "that unless we can maintain a solvent Federal government. . .we will not be able to meet our own requirements for national defense. . ."

William Benton (D Conn.) asked that the full funds for Jewish and Arab refugees in Palestine be restored to the bill.

J. Wiliam Fulbright (D Ark.) said both the House cut of $350 million and a proposed Senate reduction of five per cent in military aid and 30 per cent in economic aid were "arbitrary figures."

Wayne Morse (R Ore.) attacked as a violation of the Constitution the amendment seeking to set up a single independent administrator for the entire aid program. Administration, he said should be left to the President.

Showdown on Provisions

The mutual security program faced critical tests early in the Aug. 31 session. Among these were decisions on two amendments offered by Everett M. Dirksen (R Ill.), one of which was approved, to make new slashes in Europe's economic aid funds. The House had cut $350 million from funds for this purpose and the Committees reporting the bill in the Senate sustained this reduction. The successful Dirksen amendment, adopted on a roll-call vote, 36-34, cut another $250 million from European economic aid funds.

The other Dirksen amendment (it listed 15 other backers) would have slashed $500 million from the authorization. It was defeated, 31-41, on roll-call. Dirksen's co-sponsors were Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.), John L. McClellan (D Ark.), Herman Welker (R Idaho), Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.), George W. Malone (R Nev.), Karl E. Mundt (R S.D.), Francis Case (R S.D.), John J. Williams (R Del.), Andrew F. Schoeppel (R Kan.), Robert A. Taft (R Ohio), Henry C. Dworshak (R Idaho), John Marshall Butler (R Md.), Arthur V. Watkins (R Utah), John W. Bricker (R Ohio) and James P. Kem (R Mo.).

The Senate went on to vote, 42-25 on roll call, to trim $37 million from the authorization for Europe's military assistance. This cut was proposed by Dworshak. He first had sought to trim $37.5 million from the military item, but was defeated by voice vote.

The only increase — voted into the bill by voice vote — was an amendment by Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) and Taft adding $37,500,000 for the Near East. Under the proposal, $10 million of the increase was earmarked for aid to Arab refugees from Palestine and an equal amount for aid to Palestine in handling its influx of Jewish immigrants. Previously, the Committee-reported bill had earmarked $40 million for both Arab and Jewish refugees.

Interspersed in the long debate on the aid program was an amendment by George D. Aiken (R Vt.) and Blair Moody (D Mich.) to authorize construction of the St. Lawrence seaway and power project. Almost two hours of debate were given to the proposal, but the sponsors then withdrew the amendment after being assured it would be considered in a separate bill.

With very little debate and without a record vote, the Senate eliminated from the bill a section giving the President authority to transfer 10 per cent of the economic - military aid funds earmarked for any area or country to another area or country where it might be more urgently needed for the same purpose. The amendment was offered by Guy M. Gillette (D Iowa). Left in the bill, despite this change, was a provision permitting the transfer of up to five per cent of the European economic funds to military assistance, or vice versa, should the need arise. Douglas attempted to increase this to 10 per cent, but his proposal was defeated by voice vote.

Latin Point Four

George A. Smathers (D Fla.) twice brought up an amendment to transfer money from the United Nations Korean Reconstruction Agency to the Point Four program in South America, and was able to win its adoption the second time. At first he wanted the transfer of $6.75 million, but was defeated. Unable to get reconsideration of this amendment, he changed the figure to $6 million, and was accepted. All this action was by voice vote.

Among last-minute actions on the bill was roll-call adoption, 36-31, of a double-barreled amendment by William Benton (D Conn.) directing the use of foreign aid funds where "readily feasible" to "discourage cartel and monopolistic practices" and to "encourage where suitable the development and strengthening of free labor union movements."

Taft and Connally actively opposed the amendment on the grounds it would be "outrageous interference with the internal affairs of other nations." Benton said more competition was needed in European business. As a maneuver to give Benton more time to discuss his proposal, Humphrey proposed striking out the words "readily feasible", but was voted down, 4-61. Later, Capehart asked reconsideration of the vote on Benton's amendment. His motion was narrowly defeated 32 to 35 on roll call.

Final Passage

The roll call on passage of HR 5113 was 61-5, but this vote sending the bill to a Senate-House conference was largely a formality. Those casting dissenting votes all were Republicans — Homer E. Capehart (Ind.), Zales N. Ecton (Mont.), Kem, Langer and Schoeppel.

The total expenditure authorized in the House version, passed Aug. 17, was $7,498,750,000. The Senate's final total was $7,286,250,000.

The Senate's total foreign authorization was $1,213,750,000 less than was requested by the Administration. President Truman had sought a total of $8.5 billion, of which $6.3 billion was for military and $2.22 billion for economic assistance to all the areas.

As it went to conference, here is what the bill authorized (in millions):

	Military	Economic	Total
Europe	$5,006.35	$ 880.5	$5,886.85
Near East and Africa	396.25	160.0	556.25
Asia and the Pacific	535.25	254.5	789.75
Latin America	38.15	15.25	53.4
Totals	$5,976.00	$1,310.25	$7,286.25

Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) — Strike out words "readily feasible" in Benton amendment. Roll call, 4-61.

CONFERENCE

Senate-House conferees came to agreement Sept. 27 on a $7,483,400,000 foreign aid bill (HR 5113). The authorization was $197,150,000 above the amount voted by the Senate and $15,350,000 less than the total passed by the House. It was about $1 billion under the amount requested by the President.

The $7,483,400,000 in aid would be divided:

	Military	Economic
Western Europe	$5,028,000,000	$1,022,000,000
Near East, Africa	396,250,000	160,000,000
Asia, Pacific	535,250,000	237,500,000
Korean Reconstruction		45,000,000
American Republics	38,150,000	21,250,000
Totals	$5,997,650,000	$1,485,750,000

The conferees decided to abolish the Economic Cooperation Administration and shift ECA functions to a new agency headed by a Mutual Security Director drawing a salary of $22,500 yearly. He would be appointed by the President.

The Director would be authorized to coordinate the entire program and to settle disputes. The job of determining military requirements of recipient nations would go to the Defense Department and the President would apportion the funds among the countries. The State Department would continue to control the Point Four Program of aid to underdeveloped areas.

Chairman Tom Connally (D Tex.) of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee said he regarded it as a "very significant act that the two houses came together on this delicate and somewhat involved situation. It means unity in foreign relations regardless of politics. . . "

Chairman James P. Richards (D S.C.) of the House Foreign Affairs Committee and head of the conference group, concurred.

Accept Report

The Senate Oct. 2 approved by a 56-21 roll-call vote the conference report on HR 5113. The report was called up Oct. 1.

Acceptance came after the defeat of two Republican moves to block an increase in the amount of money the President could shift back and forth between the economic and military aid authorizations.

The House agreed to the conference report Oct. 5 on a 235-98 roll call that also knocked out a provision making the Mutual Security Director, as overall coordinator of the foreign aid program, a board member of the Export-Import Bank. The Senate took up the altered measure Oct. 8 and passed it by voice vote.

HR 5113 became Public Law 165 on receiving the President's signature Oct. 10.

"Trade With Reds" Banned

Summary — Congressional action was completed Oct. 11, 1951, on a bill (HR 4550) designed to cut off U.S. aid to any nation sending arms, military equipment or other strategic materials to Russia or Soviet-dominated areas.

The bill, sponsored by Rep. Laurie C. Battle (D Ala.), was recommended by the House Foreign Affairs Committee July 16 and was passed by voice vote in the House Aug. 2.

The Senate Foreign Affairs Committee recommended the bill Aug. 16 with slight changes. The bill was taken up by the Senate Aug. 27 and passed on a roll-call vote, 55-16, Aug. 28. It evoked heated debate and several roll-call votes. (For voting, see page 266.). Sen. James P. Kem (R Mo.) and several other Republicans led an unsuccessful battle to gain Senate adoption of a different version, similar to an earlier Kem rider attached to an appropriation measure. This rider was repealed by the Battle bill.

The House agreed to the Senate changes Oct. 11 and the President signed the bill Oct. 26.

Provisions — As enacted, the bill provided for control of certain exports to Russia or Soviet - dominated areas and also provided that any nations making such exports would be cut off from U.S. military, economic or financial assistance. The bill divided the commodities to be controlled into three groups.

The first group included arms, ammunition, implements of war and atomic energy materials. There could be no exception on the part of the U.S. or any other nation receiving U.S. aid to the enforcement of a strict embargo on these items.

The second group included materials of military significance — petroleum, transportation materials and items of importance for the production of arms. The President could direct the continuance of U.S. aid only when "unusual circumstances" indicated the cessation of aid would be detrimental to the security of the U.S.

The third group included commodities not of military significance. The U.S. would work out agreements with other countries in employing control of non-military items. If any nation broke the agreement, it would be cut off from U.S. aid.

Responsibility for administration of the law's provisions was assigned to the administrator of the mutual security program. (See page 205.)

The bill repealed two similar provisions enacted earlier. One was carried in the Foreign Assistance Act of 1948) CQ Almanac, Vol. IV, 1948, p. 170); the other, known as the Kem amendment, was carried in the Third Supplemental Appropriation Act of 1951.

Background—As early as 1948 Congress had enacted legislation designed to limit or prohibit the export of war materials to Iron Curtain countries from nations receiving U.S. assistance. Such a provision was included in the Foreign Assistance Act of 1948 and another was added in 1950 to a supplemental appropriation bill. (P.L. 843, 81st Congress. See CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, 1950, p. 130). The latter was sponsored by Rep. Clarence Cannon (D Mo.).

A third provision was enacted in 1951 and was sponsored by Sen. Kem. Contained in the Third Supplemental Appropriation Act of 1951, which became law June 2 (See page 154). The Kem amendment repealed the Cannon amendment and spelled out export limitations in greater detail. It prohibited economic or financial (but not military) aid to any nation exporting military equipment or materials used for military production, to the Russian orbit. The restriction applied when the Armed Forces of the U.S. were actively engaged in hostilities while carrying out United Nations decisions. Exceptions to the embargo could be made by the U.S. National Security Council.

Using this power to make exceptions, the Council suspended operation of the Kem amendment for 90 days on grounds that it was against the best interests of the U.S. The Economic Cooperation Administration also objected to the amendment, complaining that it was too strict to permit effective continuation of the U.S. foreign aid program.

On June 2, in signing the appropriation bill which included the Kem amendment, President Truman called for prompt repeal of the provision, and asked for separate legislation if Congress decided some restriction were necessary.

HOUSE

Accordingly, a House Foreign Affairs Subcommittee began study of new legislation and prepared HR 4550. Rep. Battle introduced this bill June 21. It was reported favorably by the full Committee July 16.

The House took up the bill Aug 2. After rejecting one amendment, it passed HR 4550 by voice vote.

AMENDMENT REJECTED

Shepard J. Crumpacker, Jr., (R Ind.) — Eliminate provision permitting the President to make exceptions in certain cases. Voice vote.

SENATE

Committee

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee Aug. 21 reported the bill, with amendments. In addition to minor textual changes, the Senate group favored making the administrator of the foreign aid program responsible for carrying out provisions of the bill. As passed by the House, the bill called for a special Mutual Defense Assistance officer to administer its provisions.

Floor Action

Debate on the measure began on Aug. 27 and final passage came Aug. 28 after several roll-call votes.

One roll-call vote was on Aug. 27 on a motion by Majority Leader Ernest W. McFarland (D Ariz.) to take up the legislation. Sen. Kem raised a point of order that the bill had not been on the calendar for one legislative day. Because it recessed instead of adjourning, the Senate theoretically was still working on the legislative day in which the report was made. To untangle the snarl, McFarland moved that the Senate adjourn for eight minutes and then begin a new "legislative day." The Senate agreed. Subsequently, McFarland's original motion to take up the bill was agreed to on a 32-29 roll-call vote.

During Aug. 28 debate, the Battle bill was vigorously attacked by Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.) and Kem. Wherry told the Senate that the purpose of the bill was "to destroy the Kem amendment" and replace it with "a flexible, discretionary statute, which could be interpreted by the State Department as it sees fit and which would permit the flow of strategic materials to Red China to continue." Kem termed the Battle bill "another discretionary bill with a built-in loophole."

The Senate rejected on a 29-46 roll-call vote Kem's motion to recommit the bill so that a committee could hold hearings on the measure.

Kem was handed a second defeat when the Senate refused, on a 27-44 roll call, to accept an amendment substituting a version by him which was stronger than the original "Kem amendment." Sens. Wherry, Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.) and George W. Malone (R Nev.) joined Kem in sponsoring the new amendment. The substitute would have prevented any exception to the ban on East-West trade.

During the heated debate the Republicans argued that the Administration was overly concerned for this country's European allies and too little concerned with what they charged was the "killing of American boys in Korea" by weapons shipped to Communists by some of those allies.

The Democrats, led by John J. Sparkman (D Ala.), were aided by predominantly Eastern Republicans in arguing that the Kem group oversimplified a complicated problem and that Kem's plan would amount to an absolute prohibition on East-West trade to the injury of Western European recovery. They asserted that the House bill was a more realistic and far more lasting approach.

The Senate accepted without record votes all Committee amendments and an amendment calling for support of any UN actions to block expors to aggressor nations.

Final passage of the bill came on a 55-16 roll-call vote.

AMENDMENT ACCEPTED

H. Alexander Smith (R N.J.) — Insert section providing that act be administered so it would support actions of the UN to prevent shipment of war goods to nation's fighting in definance of the UN. Voice vote.

AMENDMENT REJECTED

James P. Kem (R Mo.), Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.), Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.) and George W. Malone (R Nev.) — Substitute a bill similar to the Kem rider attached to the Third Supplemental Appropriations Bill (which HR 4550 repealed.) Roll-call vote, 27-44.

House Accepts Change

The House Oct. 11 agreed to Senate amendments by voice vote and sent the measure to the White House where the President signed it Oct. 26. It became Public Law 213.

Germany War Ended

HJ Res 289 — P.L. 181

Summary — The state of war between the United States and Germany was officially ended when a joint Congressional resolution (H J Res 289) recommended by President Truman was signed into law by him Oct. 19, 1951.

The President July 9 asked Congress for the legislation. He said in letters to Vice President Alben W. Barkley and Speaker Sam Rayburn that the action would "give the German people a new demonstration of our desire to help bring them back to membership among the nations of the free world."

The President made it clear that "termination of the state of war with Germany would not affect the status of the occupation" or "the right to reparations" the U. S. could claim for war damage. At the same time the Germans would "no longer be classed as enemies," he said.

Congress Acts

The resolution was reported by the Foreign Affairs Committee July 18. On a 380-0 roll-call vote (See page 260) the measure was passed by the House July 27. One member, Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) voted "present." He explained that he thought the move to end the war was premature.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee Oct. 8 reported in the upper chamber an amended version of the resolution. The Committee amendment would permit for up to one year reopening of suits against the government in connection with property owned by Americans that was acquired by the government during the war.

However, on the floor of the Senate the Committee amendment was rejected by voice vote. Herbert H. Lehman (D N.Y.), leading opposition to the rider, told Members that the amendment was aimed at benefiting only one person, Ernest K. Halbach, former U. S. representative of Germany's I. G. Farben industrial empire, by permitting him to reopen a claim for seized properties that had been affiliated with Farben. He said the Halbach claim was settled in 1945.

The Senate passed the joint resolution by voice vote on Oct. 18 and sent it to the President. He signed it the next day, and it became Public Law 181.

Move Too Late

Sen. Pat McCarran (D Nev.) Oct. 19 sought to have the resolution returned to the Senate for further study. He said the language of the measure would permit continued seizure of German-owned property in this country. However, the resolution was signed into law before Congress could recall it.

The war which H J Res 289 ended was declared by a joint resolution of Congress approved Dec. 11, 1941. Fighting with Germany had ceased upon the unconditional surrender of that country on May 8, 1945.

Citizenship

There was little debate on the measure in either chamber. The House Judiciary Committee recommended the bill Feb. 7. The measure was designed to enable persons who lost their U. S. citizenship by voting in certain political elections or plebiscites held in Italy (on June 2, 1946, or April 18, 1948) to regain citizenship. A period of two - years was specified for operation of the measure.

Under U.S. laws, citizens lose their citizenship rights when they vote in a foreign election or plebiscite. In its report the House group said most of those affected voted because of fear that failure to do so would have subjected them to social and economic disadvantages and caused them to lose food rationing coupons.

The House passed the bill Feb. 19 by voice vote after a brief explanation of the measure.

The Senate Judiciary Committee May 23 recommended the bill, with an amendment providing that the persons regaining citizenship must first take an oath that they had done nothing to promote the cause of communism.

The Senate Aug. 6 approved its Committee's amendment and passed the bill by voice vote. The House agreed to the amendment Aug. 8 and President Truman signed HR 400, which became Public Law 114, on Aug. 16.

Naturalization of Asians

HR 403

Legislation providing for the removal of racial restrictions from U. S. naturalization laws was passed by the House in 1951 but did not receive further action during the first session of the 82nd Congress.

The House Judiciary Committee recommended the bill Feb. 7 and it was passed by voice vote in the House Feb. 19. There was no debate. The bill was not reported by the Senate Judiciary Commitee.

The bill would extend the privilege of becoming a naturalized citizen of the U. S. to all aliens having a legal right to permanent residence. It would affect approximately 87,000 Oriental aliens in this country, including an estimated 84,000 resident Japanese, 3,139 Koreans and 145 Polynesians.

Background — The 81st Congress passed a double-barreled bill (H J Res 238) for the same purpose, but it also contained provisions for revoking citizenship of aliens with past or future subversive records. President Truman, who approved the Asiatics section, vetoed the measure on the grounds the subversives provision was poorly framed and confusing. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, 1950, p. 240.)

Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act

Summary — The 17-year-old reciprocal trade agreements program permitting the President to make tariff concessions was extended for two years by passage of P. L. 50. In extending the program, Congress added "peril points" machinery and an "escape clause" to safeguard American industry from serious injury due to increased imports from other nations.

Congress also wrote in strong provisions intended to bar Communist countries from benefits of the trade program.

The existing reciprocal trade program was due to expire June 12, 1951. The House began hearings on the extension bill (HR 1612) Jan. 22 and passed it Feb. 7. Senate hearings started Feb. 22. The upper chamber passed its version of the bill May 23. After Senate-House approval of a compromise version, the bill was signed by the President June 16.

Long a party issue, the reciprocal trade program had been extended six times since its enactment in 1934. The Republican-controlled 80th Congress added the "peril points" provision in 1948. This was knocked out by the Democratic Congress which extended the measure the following year. The 1951 legislation gained strong Republican support because of the re-insertion of the "peril points" provision.

At House hearings on HR 1612, Secretary of State Dean Acheson urged continuance of the program and said failure to extend it would have "disastrous effects" and would harm the co-operative effort to build up the strength of the free world.

After hearing other witnesses, the Ways and Means Committee approved the extension Jan. 29 after defeating Republican efforts to restore the "peril points" provision. But on the House floor Feb. 7, the bill was amended on a Republican move to include the formula. The House also barred traffic concessions involving Russia and her satellites.

As Senate hearings opened, Acheson asked for deletion of some of the House amendments which he said would make the program "unworkable" Spokesmen of numerous groups testified for and against the House provisions of the bill.

The measure ultimately drafted by the Senate Committee included the "peril points" provision, and reflected several changes made in the House version.

Senate passage came May 23, at the end of three days of debate, during which Sen. George W. Malone (R Nev.) regaled his colleagues for a total of 12 hours speaking in opposition to the bill. Only Malone and Henry C. Dworshak (R Idaho) finally voted against the bill; 38 Democrats and 34 Republicans voted for it.

House and Senate conferees then worked out the differences between the two measures. Their compromise was approved by the Senate May 29 and the House June 5.

Provisions — The "Trade Agreements Extension Act of 1951" was enacted to:

Extend for two years from June 12, 1951, the authority of the President to make foreign-trade agreements.

Require the President, before starting negotiations on foreign trade agreements, to submit to the Tariff Commission a list of products up for consideration of tariff changes, the Commission to set "peril points" for each item after holding hearings and conducting an investigation.

Provide that if the President makes a foreign trade agreement setting tariffs lower than the "peril point" recommended by the Tariff Commission he must report to Congress within 30 days and give his reasons.

Require the President, "as soon as practicable," to take action "to suspend, withdraw or prevent the application" of tariff cuts so Communist nations will not benefit from the program.

Provide that no import duty reduction "shall be permitted to continue" when it results in serious injury to the corresponding domestic industry.

Require the Tariff Commission to investigate any case of reported "serious injury" to domestic industry upon the request of the President, upon resolution of either the House, the Senate, the Senate Finance Committee or the House Ways and Means Committee, or upon the application of any interested party. If the Tariff Commission finds that reduced tariffs have resulted in enough of an increase in imports to imperil a U. S. industry, it must recommend a change in the tariff concession. If the President does not act on the recommendation, he must report his reasons to the House Ways and Means Committee and to the Senate Finance Committee.

Authorize the President to take emergency action to prevent loss of perishable farm products when foreign or domestic surpluses develop.

Stipulate that enactment of the legislation does not indicate approval or disapproval by Congress of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT, the multilateral agreement first negotiated at Geneva in 1947 and revised at the 1950-1 Torquay Conference.)

Require the President to take necessary measures to prevent the importation of ermine, fox, kolinsky, marten, mink, muskrat and weasel furs coming from Russia or Communist China.

Background — The trade agreements program was started in 1934 under the leadership of Secretary of State Cordell Hull. The legislation for the program was the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act of 1934, which empowered the President to modify United States tariff rates and to negotiate trade agreements with the advice of the Agriculture, Commerce, and State Departments, and the United States Tariff Commission. No duty under a trade agreement could be modified by more than 50 per cent of the rate prescribed in the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act of 1930, which set the nation's tariff structure.

Prior to 1951, the trade program had been extended six times, in 1937, 1940, 1943, 1945, 1948 and 1949. (For the story on previous extensions, see CQ Almanacs, Vol. IV, 1948, p. 190, and Vol. V, 1949, p. 362.)

The reciprocal trade program has been a party issue since the beginning. When the Act came up for renewal in 1948 in the Republican-controlled 80th Congress, it was extended for only one year and a "peril points" provision was added. This, strongly opposed by the Administration, required the Tariff Commission to recommend minimum rates necessary to protect domestic production of similar articles. If the President made agreements undercutting the "peril points" he had to explain to Congress his reasons for doing so.

In November of 1948, President Truman made "peril points" a campaign issue. Next year the Democratic 81st

Congress repealed the feature when it passed legislation extending the whole program until June 12, 1951.

The reciprocal trade votes in 1949 showed a deep cleavage between the two parties. In the House vote on a GOP recommital motion, only four per cent of the voting Republicans joined 97 per cent of the voting Democrats to prevent recommital. The Senate vote in 1949 on a GOP amendment to retain "peril points" found each Republican of the 35 who voted casting his ballot in favor of retention.

Definitions

Peril point — The lowest rate to which a tariff can be cut without "peril" to domestic industries. This is determined by the U. S. Tariff Commission for each item. If the President intends to cut any tariff below a particular "peril point", he must notify Congress.

Escape clause — This permits the U. S. to withdraw a tariff cut if it is hurting a U. S. industry.

Reciprocal trade agreement — A pact under which the U. S. makes cuts in import duties on products this country buys in exchange for reductions by other countries in the tariff on the things America sells abroad.

Most-favored-nation clause — This gives to a particular country the same concessions made to any other country.

HOUSE

Hearings

Extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act for three years beyond the June 12, 1951, expiration date was urged Jan. 22 by Secretary of State Dean Acheson, as the House Ways and Means Committee opened a week of hearings on a bill (HR 1612) embodying the Administration proposal.

Acheson told the Committee that failure to renew the authority would have "most disastrous effects" and would "make a vast difference" in the cooperative effort to build up the economic and military strength of the non-Communist world.

Acheson said the challenge to America not only was "the threat of military aggression" but also "the threat of subversion, of stirring up class strife, of exploiting discontent, of preventing economic improvement." The challenge could be met, he said, with a great expansion of production, for which a huge flow of trade was essential.

The Secretary later told the Committee no large scale tariff negotiations were in prospect for the next three years but that this period will see consolidation and adjustment in the trade field.

On completion of his prepared statement, Acheson was peppered with questions by Republicans and Democrats alike. Asked about State Department objections to the old prohibition against lowering rates below "peril points" designated by the U.S. Tariff Commission, Acheson called the restrictions "unnecessary and harmful" to the program. The "peril point" provision was enacted by the Republican 80th Congress and repealed by the 81st.

Rep. Hale Boggs (D La.) sought to stress the connection between a lowering of tariff barriers under the Act and the booming business of the Port of New Orleans since 1934. Acheson insisted the program had made a major contribution to the freer flow of trade between nations but conceded there was room for progress.

Jan. 24, the U. S. Chamber of Commerce and the Congress of Industrial Organizations, usually on opposite sides of issues, joined in urging extension of the trade law. Morris S. Rosenthal, representing the Chamber, said "true world peace cannot be attained without expanded and unhampered international trade", while Stanley Ruttenberg, of the CIO, said "failure on the part of the U.S. to renew the program might well tend to undermine the trust of the free world in our willingness to assist them". The American Farm Bureau Federation also supported the extension.

Edward F. Vonderahe, speaking for the American Knit Handwear Association, and Walter W. Cenerazzo, national president of the American Watch Workers Union, Jan. 25 told the Committee tariff protection was needed to prevent ultimate ruin of their respective industries.

Committee

The Ways and Means Committee Jan. 29 approved the Trade Agreements Act extension by a vote of 18 to 7 after beating down a Republican move to restore the so-called "peril point" provision to the law.

This amendment would have required the U.S. Tariff Commission to determine the lowest rates to which tariffs could be cut without hurting American industry. If rates were then cut below these "peril points" the President would be required to give a formal explanation to Congress within 30 days. The Committee vote against this proposal sponsored by Simpson was 15 to 10, strictly along party lines. Such a proposal was written into the program by the Republican 80th Congress but was stricken out by the Democratic 81st.

The Committee also defeated Republican-sponsored amendments proposing:

XUM

1. That an "escape clause" be written into all presently outstanding trade treaties, providing for readjustment of tariffs if an American industry is hurt.

2. That most-favored-nation benefits must be denied Russia, Red China and other Communist areas in the case of trade treaties negotiated by the United States with other foreign nations.

3. That extension of the law be held to two years instead of three.

It was a fight for floor adoption of these amendments that was promised by House Republicans at a Jan. 30 party conference.

Floor Action

The House Jan. 31 took up the measure, but a showdown vote was deferred for a week after a day's general debate. The delay was caused by the death of Rep. John B. Sullivan (D Mo.) whose funeral was to be attended by a House delegation.

In the Jan. 31 debate, Republicans launched a determined attack on the 17-year-old tariff program, while Chairman Robert L. Doughton (D N.C.) of the House Ways and Means Committee, defended the Administration's long efforts, begun by former Secretary of State Cordell Hull, to eliminate or lower tariffs and stimulate international exchange of goods.

Rep. Richard M. Simpson (R Pa.) said the State Department had undercut the American economy by reducing tariffs too much. He blamed the trade program for a shortage of wool in this country and said it also had retarded the watch-making industry.

Rep. Daniel A. Reed (R N.Y.) declared the trade program should not be extended, but if it were, it should be amended in line with the Republican-proposed restrictions defeated in Committee.

Referring to these GOP amendments, Doughton told the House to "take into account their sponsorship". He added: "The record of recent multilateral negotiations bespeaks the success with which the program is being administered. It would seem fruitless to revive the production of the factories and farms of the war-torn countries (of Europe) if the most efficient use of this production is to be prevented by barriers to trade. And the maximum collective economic strength of the free nations is now essential to our military security in the days ahead".

"Peril Points" Accepted

When the House next considered HR 1612 on Feb. 7, it formally adopted the "peril points" amendment, and balloted on other proposals.

Insertion of the "peril points" section was considered a major upset of the administration's 17-year-old reciprocal trade agreements program, initiated by Secretary of State Cordell Hull in 1934 to help reduce trade barriers throughout the world. It also was considered a Republican victory.

When Simpson attempted to restore "peril points", 42 Democrats joined with 183 Republicans to approve the reinstatement on a 225-168 roll-call vote Feb. 7. Twenty-three of the import-conscious Democrats were from the South.

The Democrats voting for Simpson's "peril points" amendment spurned Majority Leader John W. McCormack's (D Mass.) plea to "follow the leadership of Cordell Hull" and avoid amendments which might "seriously impair" the entire agreements network.

On the other hand, Republican Reps. James G. Fulton (Pa.), Jacob K. Javits (N.Y.), Clifford P. Case (N.J.) and John W. Heselton (Mass.) voted against the Simpson amendment. His proposal actually drew two ballots. When the House was considering it in the Committee of the Whole, it was approved on a 198-107 division vote. The 225-168 roll call came shortly before final passage of the entire bill. (See page 260 for vote).

Other Provisions Added

Two additional Republican originated restrictions were added to the bill. One, by John W. Byrnes (R Wis.) barred tariff concessions which might involve Russia or so-called satellite countries in any future agreements negotiated. It was accepted on a voice vote. The second, sponsored by Carl T. Curtis (R Neb.), spelled out redress U.S. industries might have if they claimed "injury" as a result of tariff concessions. It was accepted on a 191-89 division vote after being modified by a proposal by Cleveland M. Bailey (D W.Va.). The Curtis-Bailey amendment was later reaffirmed in a voice vote.

A third amendment, successfully sponsored by John J. Dempsey (D N.M.), barred tariff concessions on foreign agricultural commodities which, when imported to the U.S., would undersell similar domestic products covered by federal price-support programs.

The bill as passed by the House extended the President's authority to conduct the reciprocal trade agreements program through June 12, 1954. His existing authority was due to expire June 12, 1951.

Republicans were said to have had ready an amendment to limit the extension to two years only, but to have discarded it once the "peril points" section of the bill had been endorsed.

A few minutes before HR 1612 was approved by a voice vote, a relatively perfunctory motion to recommit it was made by Rep. Daniel A. Reed (R N.Y.). In recent years, Republicans have made concerted efforts on such a motion — voting almost to a man to forestall passage of the reciprocal trade agreements bill itself.

But this year, after the GOP had revamped what the Administration had admitted was one of its first key foreign policy proposals to go before the new Congress, the Republicans split.

They shouted down an attempt by Rep. Fulton to obtain a record vote on the recommittal motion. That motion itself was defeated as well.

Bill Re-passed

On Feb. 12, the House discovered it had made an error when it passed HR 1612 on Feb. 7. Members explained that during the Feb. 7 action on the various amendments, one page of the amendment offered by Bailey was overlooked and omitted in reading the amendment. "It was just one of those errors," Wilbur D. Mills (D Ark.) told the House after he had asked unanimous consent for action to correct the error.

There was no objection to the motion to vacate the earlier passage and pass the bill with the complete amendment.

AMENDMENT ACCEPTED

Richard M. Simpson (R Pa.)—Hold up Presidential action on trade agreement revision until the Tariff Commission has determined, item by item, the point below which tariff duties could not be cut without "peril" to affected industries. Require the President to notify Congress within 30 days if he decides to reduce tariffs below such "peril" points. Division vote, 198-107. Roll-call vote, 225-168.

John W. Byrnes (R Wis.)—Prohibit tariff concessions to the U.S.S.R. or Communist satellite countries in any future trade agreements drawn up, but not bar concessions under existing agreements. Voice vote.

Carl T. Curtis (R Neb.) — Permit President to suspend any concessions made under the Act if necessary "to prevent or remedy" injuries caused by the concessions with respect to domestic industry. Accepted by 191-89 division vote after being amended by the Bailey substitute:

Cleveland M. Bailey (D W. Va.)—Amend the Curtis proposal so that determination of claims by domestic industries that tariff concessions were injuring them would be handled by the Tariff Commission. The Commission would then be charged with making recommendations to the President. He would not be bound, however, to invoke the "escape clause" of the Act and suspend concessions on the Tariff Commission's recommendations alone, however. Accepted by voice vote. Accepted again by second voice vote on Curtis amendment as modified.

John J. Dempsey (D N.M.)—Bar tariff concessions on foreign agricultural products if the foreign commodities, when imported into the U. S., would be sold for less than similar domestic products covered by federal price support programs. Division vote, 124-110.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Byrnes — Bar tariff concessions or free privileges under existing trade agreements to Russia or the so-called satellite countries. Ruled "retroactive" and not germane to the pending bill.

H. R. Gross (R Iowa)—Strike out the enacting clause. Ruled out of order.

Daniel A. Reed (R N.Y.)—Recommit the entire bill. Voice vote.

SENATE

Hearings

The Senate Finance Committee announced Feb. 9 that hearings on the House-passed bill would start Feb. 22. Earlier the Committee had scheduled start of hearings for Feb. 13 but postponed the session because of Lincoln day absences.

Sen. Owen Brewster (R Maine) Feb. 8 filed amendments which he said he would propose when the bill came before the Senate. They would require the President to order an investigation of imports at the request of Congress and would create a Congressional committee to study effects of the Act on American industry, trade and foreign relations.

As hearings formally opened, Secretary of State Dean Acheson Feb 22 asked the Senators to approve the extension of the Trade Agreements Act, but without some of the restraints imposed by the House of Representatives.

Acheson told the Senate Finance Committee the House restrictions would make the program "unworkable". He said nations friendly to the United States would be forced to step up their trade with the Soviet bloc if they were denied access to American markets.

The Secretary said some of the restrictions could be made acceptable to the Administration through modifications but that others should be removed. Later in the discussion, Acheson said the State Department was placing escape clauses in all trade agreements. He said peril point provisions produce "a tendency to be overcautious."

Agriculture View

Secretary of Agriculture Charles F. Brannan also told the Committee Feb. 26 that the Administration's reciprocal trade agreement program should be extended without the restricting provisions added by the House.

Brannan said the bill's restrictions would harm farmers in the long run. One provision called, he noted, for automatic suspension of concessions to a foreign country whenever its duty-paid import price for a farm product dropped to the U. S. price support level.

Brannan said if such a provision were invoked, the exporting country would withdraw trade concessions to the United States. American farm exports outweigh imports two to one, he said, and farmers would suffer more through export losses than import losses.

Among other witnesses who testified were:

Sherlock Davis, U. S. Cuban Sugar Council, urged extension of the act without the House restrictions.

J. T. Sanders, National Grange, supported the bill, but said farmers have been harmed in the past by lowered tariffs.

O. R. Strackbein, National Labor-Management Council on Foreign Trade Policy, endorsed the House bill.

Robert F. Martin, U. S. Potters Association, protested use of German china in American embassies abroad.

Richard H. Anthony, American Tariff League, endorsed the House amendments and urged further restrictions.

Robert E. Lee Hall, National Coal Association, favored the amendments and also asked for a limit on oil imports.

Knives were bared before the Committee March 2 when a witness testified against the House-passed legislation. The witness was Robert N. Kaster, a New York cutlery manufacturer. He showed Japanese knives to the Senators, and claimed they would undersell his own products if HR 1612 were approved.

Ben J. Williams, put the American Cotton Shippers Association on record as favoring the bill. He said increased U. S. imports would help maintain current U. S. exports of cotton and other goods.

Former Rep. Jerry Voorhis (D Calif.) told the Senators the Cooperative League of the U.S.A. favored a reciprocal trade program without the "crippling amendments" the House inserted.

As hearings continued March 6 and 7, spokesmen for the U. S. Chamber of Commerce and the National Council of American Importers, Inc., supported the trade act, but one from the National Association of Wool Manufacturers called the program a "farce". Sen. George Malone (R Nev.) told the Committee March 8 the act was "traitorous to the workers and small businessmen of this country."

On March 12, seven witnesses before the Committee supported amendments offered and adopted during House action on the bill. The seven included Sen. Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr., (R Mass.), and spokesmen for the National Renderers Association, the Bicycle Institute of America, the National Milk Producers Federation, the Independent Petroleum Association of America, and the National Council of Farmer Cooperatives. Rep. Cleveland M. Bailey (D W.Va.) appeared March 13 to endorse the House amendments.

XUM

Winthrop G. Brown, director of the State Department's Office of International Trade Policy, urged approval of the legislation in two days of testimony March 16 and 19. But efforts by this country to "weaken the position of Soviet Russia" with respect to her satellites would be hampered, he said, by the House amendment requiring the President to list, within 90 days, those satellites.

Brown pointed out that while the House restriction banned tariff revisions which might benefit Russia or the satellites, trade with them was already curbed by American export controls. He told the Senators that the State Department was opposed to all House amendments to the bill.

Committee

The Senate Finance Committee April 26 unanimously approved the bill (HR 1612) extending the Administration's reciprocal trade agreements program, after it had written into the legislation numerous changes and restrictions even more stringent than the provisions adopted in the House.

The bill, as approved by the Committee, contained:

(1) A two-year extension of the Trade Agreements Act of 1934 beyond the June 12, 1951, expiration date, instead of the three-year extension voted by the House.

(2) The "peril point" provision, approved by the House, with only minor changes.

(3) A tightened provision barring concessions to Russia and other Communist nations. The House version required the President to take necessary action to prevent future "most-favored-nation" tariff concessions from applying to imports from Russia or other areas deemed to be Communist dominated. The Finance Committee rewrote the section to require the President to suspend, withdraw or prevent such concessions to those nations "as soon as practicable," deleting the reference to future tariff agreements.

(4) A redrafted "escape clause", making mandatory the inclusion of such a clause in all future trade agreements and requiring the President to bring existing agreements that do not have them into line.

(5) New amendments in lieu of the House clause prohibiting import of farm commodities at prices lower than support levels: (a) United States agricultural laws should supersede international agreements; (b) the President could impose import quotas on perishable farm crops upon recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture without prior review by the U. S. Tariff Commission; (c) domestic producers could protest in customs courts the classification of imported articles; (d) enactment of HR 1612 would not indicate approval or disapproval of the 1947 Geneva General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

Floor Action

The Senate took up the extension bill (HR 1612) on May 21, and ran directly into a speech against the measure by George W. Malone (R Nev.). Malone said passage of the bill would threaten the American standard of living. He asserted extension would "give absolute power over American workingmen for the next two critical years to a thoroughly discredited secretary of state." He declared, "Our standard of living is seriously threatened by foreign sweatshop labor competition, permitted and encouraged by this legislation."

A point of view of many Senators from farming states was presented by Hugh Butler (R Neb.) who stated that the trade agreements program had done "serious harm" to many American farm products, but he hoped that the new bill would correct the situation. In the extension bill Congress served "clear notice" that it wants to protect our farm price structure, Butler said.

Malone spoke again May 22 and 23, compiling a total of more than 12 hours speechmaking against the bill. He also put forth a substitute proposal, which would have taken from the President and the Secretary of State power to negotiate trade pacts. Malone's amendment would have given this power to a new bipartisan Foreign Trade Authority.

After his substitute was rejected, first by voice vote, then on a 15-65 roll-call vote, Malone offered 10 other amendments. The Senate rejected all of them by voice vote.

The Senate then passed the measure on a 72-2 roll-call vote May 23. (See p. 259.) Only Malone and Henry C. Dworshak (R Idaho) balloted against it. Among Senators who had opposed extension in 1949 but who favored it — on a "peril points" basis — in 1951 were: William F. Knowland (R Calif.), Edwin C. Johnson (D Colo.), Eugene D. Millikin (R Colo.), John J. Williams (R Del.), Homer E. Capehart (R Ind.), William E. Jenner (R Ind.), Andrew F. Schoeppel (R Kan.), Edward Martin (R Pa.), Hugh Butler (R Neb.), Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.), John E. Bricker (R Ohio), Guy Cordon (R Ore.), and Harry P. Cain (R Wash.).

Arthur V. Watkins (R Utah), who voted against the reciprocal trade extension bill in 1949, did not vote May 23, 1951, but announced he was for the bill.

Robert A. Taft (R Ohio), Pat McCarran (D Nev.) and Karl E. Mundt (R S.D.) did not vote on final passage of the 1949 extension, but declared themselves against the bill. On May 23, 1951, however, these three voted for the trade pact extension measure.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Joseph R. McCarthy (R Wis.), Alexander Wiley (R Wis.) and Arthur V. Watkins (R Utah) — Restrict imports of mink, silver fox and muskrat furs to 25 per cent of the year's domestic production. Voice vote.

Francis Case (R S.D.) — Insert the word "promptly" in the clause requiring Tariff Commission investigation of threats of hardship to U.S. industry. Voice.

William Langer (R N.D.)—Require a report by the Tariff Commission within one year after application is made for an investigation. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

George W. Malone (R Nev.) — A substitute bill taking from the President and the State Department power to negotiate trade agreements and giving it to a Foreign Trade Authority appointed by the President with Senate consent. Rejected first by voice, then on a 15-65 roll-call vote.

Malone — Limit extension of the act to one year. Voice vote.

Malone — Require the President to seek information and advice on trade agreements from the Committees on Ways and Means and Finance. Voice.

Malone — Make it mandatory for the President to adhere to Tariff Commission recommendations. Voice.

Malone — Require the President to suspend or withdraw within six months any tariff concessions to Russia or its satellites. Voice.

Malone — Set a time limit of 12 months for the President to include the new escape clause in existing trade agreements. Voice.

Malone — Require the President to make tariff changes recommended under the escape clause. Voice.

Malone — Require the Tariff Commission to give the reasons when it decides tariff adjustments are unnecessary. Voice.

Malone — Prohibit tariff concessions on any farm product while it is under a subsidy or price support program. Voice.

Malone — Bar trade agreements unless the principal supplier of the product concerned is included in the negotiations.

Malone — Forbid the further reduction of duties under the 1934 Trade Agreements Act. Voice.

Tom Connally (D Tex.) — Determine tariff on "like or similar" articles instead of like or "directly competitive". Connally said the latter language was sought by "the coal interests as against the fuel-oil interests." Voice.

CONFERENCE

A compromise version of the original bill was worked out by a committee of Senators and Representatives.

Signing the compromise version were these conferees:

Reps. Robert L. Doughton (D N.C.), Jere Cooper (D Tenn.), John D. Dingell (D Mich.), Wilbur D. Mills (D Ark.), Daniel A. Reed (R N.Y.), Thomas A. Jenkins (R Ohio) and Richard M. Simpson (R Pa.), and, Sens. Walter F. George (D Ga.), Tom Connally (D Tex.), Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.), Eugene D. Millikin (R Colo.) and Robert A. Taft (R. Ohio).

This bill was approved by the Senate May 29 and by the House June 5. Both chambers acted by voice vote.

The compromise bill, which mostly followed the Senate's version of the legislation included:

1. A two-year extension as the Senate wanted, instead of the three-year extension passed by the House.

2. Elimination, favored by the Senate, of the House-passed prohibition against participation by the Tariff Commission in the negotiation of a trade agreement.

3. A Senate amendment to a House proposal requiring the withdrawal of tariff concessions from Soviet-dominated countries. The amendment made the withdrawal applicable to all tariff concessions at any time.

4. A Senate revision of the House escape clause provision, which set forth the requirements for justifying use of the escape clause.

5. A Senate amendment to Section 22 (the regulation of imports provision) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act which would prevent any trade agreement from being applied in a manner inconsistent with the requirement of the section.

6. A Senate provision restoring the right of producers to litigate tariff classifications. The House bill had no corresponding provision.

7. Senate language expressly disclaiming approval or disapproval of the General Agreement on Tariff and Trade (GATT) reached at the Torquay talks.

8. A substitution for the Senate-approved import quota on mink, silver fox, and muskrat furs of an outright ban on importing ermine, fox, kolinski, marten, mink, muskrat and weasel furs from Russia and Communist China.

Signed by President

The bill was signed by President Truman June 16.

In giving it his approval, he said the legislation would enable the U.S. to "continue its efforts with other countries to expand trade by the reduction or elimination of barriers, and thus to build up the strength of the free world."

He took issue, however, with some of the new procedural clauses in the measure which he termed "cumbersome and superfluous".

These were the sections designed to protect American producers from "serious injury" that might result from the operation of the trade program and the new provisions that single out particular types of products for special consideration.

"The dangers of reverting to product-by-product legislation in the field of tariffs are obvious," Mr. Truman said.

GROUP STANDS

Organizations interested in the entire reciprocal trade agreements program did not hesitate to circularize their own memberships, Congress, and the general public with their stands. The Tariff Commission, too, came in for its share of communication from groups affected by the Trade Agreements Act. Various resolutions were passed at conventions during the time the legislation was being considered.

Most organizations fell into the major categories of those for and against the program generally, those for and against the "peril points" formula, and those registering stands on related matters. For example, a number of organizations were less concerned with the reciprocal trade program legislation itself than they were with the Torquay conference at which tariff concessions were actually drawn up. Their literature concerned Torquay developments primarily.

Illustrating the diversity of organizations taking stands, those favoring the "peril points" formula ranged from the Wine Institute to the American Knit Handwear Association. The American National Cattlemen's Association and the National Council of Farmer Cooperatives were among the agricultural groups favoring "peril points."

But another major agricultural group opposing this approach was the American Farm Bureau Federation.

Generally favoring the trade program were the Chamber of Commerce and the Congress of Industrial Organizations (CIO.) Other big organizations included among the supporters were the Cooperative League of the U.S.A., the National Grange, and the U.S. Cuban Sugar Council.

Typical of organizations expressing stands on fringe aspects of the basic program itself were the National Milk Producers Federation, which wanted Congress to play a bigger role in tariff negotiations, and the National Coal Association, which wanted import quotas established and an extension of the program for one year only.

Other groups generally favoring the bill as passed were the National Council of American Importers, Inc., the National Labor - Management Council on Foreign Trade Policy, the American Cotton Shippers Association, the National Renderers Association and the Bicycle Institute of America.

For a list of additional organizations who put their views before Congress, see the "Hearings" sections of the foregoing story.

Troops To Europe

S Res 99, S Con Res 18

Summary — The Senate's bitter, three-month debate over President Truman's Constitutional powers to send troops to Europe came to a formal end April 4 when the upper chamber twice endorsed his immediate program.

By votes of 69-21 and 45-41, it approved two resolutions (S Res 99 and S Con Res 18, respectively) affirming the dispatch of four U.S. divisions to stiffen Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower's defense force in Western Europe for the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO).

Neither resolution carried the force of law. Republican Senators Kenneth S. Wherry (Neb.), the author, and John W. Bricker (Ohio), Guy Cordon (Ore.), and Arthur V. Watkins (Utah), were unsuccessful in efforts to roll the measures into a "joint resolution", which would have carried legal force if signed by Mr. Truman.

The concurrent resolution failed to receive action in the House, although an attempt was made to write a provision into the lower chamber's draft bill which would have prohibited the assignment of troops overseas without the Congress' approval. The attempt was unsuccessful. (See page 283.)

Truman Hails Action

President Truman hailed the Senate's action as a "clear endorsement" of the aims of Gen. Eisenhower's command, and said the Senate gave "further evidence that the country stands firm in its support of the North Atlantic Treaty."

But the President had nothing to say about strings the Senate tied to his program during three vote-studded days of floor action on S Res 99. He did not comment on the Senate's expressed conviction that any future assignments of troops to Europe Mr. Truman might seek as Commander-in-Chief should be submitted to Congress for its approval.

Nor did he review the acrimony that marked Congress' exhaustive discussion — labelled the "Great Debate" — of his foreign policy in general. Actually, the ultimately favorable action on the troops resolutions merely closed one chapter of this "Great Debate." Another, more wordy, phase opened April 11 when the President fired Gen. Douglas A. MacArthur as Far Eastern commander. (See p. 242.)

Provisions — As passed by the Senate, S Res 99 traced the background of creation of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and noted that "our common defense. . .requires the vigourous action. . .of all treaty partners." The bill then expressed the Senate's:

1. Approval of Mr. Truman's action in designating Gen. Eisenhower to be NATO commander.

2. Belief that the U. S. should "contribute our fair share of the forces needed for the joint defense of the North Atlantic area."

3. Sense that the President should consult his Joint Chiefs of Staff, his Secretary of Defense, the Senate and House foreign and military affairs committees, and the NATO commander before preparing to send troops abroad.

4. Sense that the Joint Chiefs certify in advance of any troop assignments that other NATO partners "are giving. . .full, realistic force and effect" to their defense obligations.

5. Sense that the European NATO partners furnish "the major contribution" to the defense forces, and that the Joint Chiefs transmit their certifications in connection with the entire program to the House and Senate committees as well as to the President.

6. Approval of "present plans. . . to send four additional divisions of ground forces to Western Europe, but it is the sense of the Senate that no ground troops in addition to such four divisions should be sent to Western Europe. . .without futher Congressional approval."

7. Sense that the President should make reports to Congress every six months on the workings of the program.

8. Sense that the U. S. "should seek to eliminate all provisions of the existing treaty with Italy which impose limitations upon the military strength" of that country and which restrict her capacity to aid in the common defense.

9. Sense that "as soon as possible", consideration should be given to utilizing "on a voluntary basis the military and other resources of Western Germany and Spain", without excluding similar use of resources "of other nations."

S Con Res 18 was identical in its final form to S Res 99, except that it expressed the sense of "Congress" instead of the Senate alone.

BACKGROUND

Two events launched the "Great Debate" on foreign policy and the President's Constitutional powers to send troops overseas that churned during the first several months of the 82nd Congress' first session. The first came the day after the session met. Rep. Frederic R. Coudert Jr. (R N. Y.) on Jan. 4 introduced a resolution (H J Res 9) banning the use of future appropriations to send U. S. troops overseas unless Congress specifically consented.

Coudert's resolution stated its adoption would "avoid commitment of the United States by executive order in . .. wars in distant parts of the world without the knowledge and authorization of the Congress"

The resolution was drawn to take advantage of the right the Constitution grants Congress to "raise and support" armies — and indirectly control them via the Congressional power-of-the-purse.

The second came Jan. 5, when Sen. Robert A. Taft (R Ohio), chairman of the Senate GOP Policy Committee, made a vigorous attack on the Administration's foreign policy in a 10,000 word speech before the Senate.

Taft accused the Administration of formulating foreign policy from 1945 to 1951 "without consulting the Congress or the people."

He said "we were sucked into the Korean War by a delusion as to the power which never has existed under the (United Nations) Charter." Since the UN had proved to be "an utterly ineffective weapon to check military aggression," Taft said this nation had no choice but to "develop our own military policy."

In doing so, he said, "our first consideration must be defense of America . . . It seems obvious that the immediate problem of defending this country depends upon control of the sea and control of the air." He maintained that such control should extend to Western Europe, the Near East, and the Far East to aid "those nations which ask for assistance to defend themselves against Communist aggression." He opposed the formation of a heavy U. S. army, or its commitment to Europe on the ground it was "the greatest incitement" to war with Russia.

"We must not undertake anything beyond our power as we have in Korea." he told his colleagues. "We must not assume obligations by treaty or otherwise which require any extensive use of American forces." He thought we should extend aid to those island nations which desire assistance through sea and air forces, such as Japan, Formosa, the Philippines, Indonesia, Australia, New Zealand, and Great Britain.

"Mr. Republican" Impatient

Sen. Taft — called "Mr. Republican" by persons within and without the GOP — indicated he was making his speech because of impatience with President Truman's delay in submitting the annual State of the Union message. Taft intimated that Mr. Truman, by not submitting the message hard on the heels of Congress' convening, was pursuing a policy of excluding Congress from foreign policy planning. The thought was that the President was simply confronting Congress with already - drawn plans, and asking the lawmakers to ratify faits-accomplis.

Taft sailed into Administration views of what U. S. obligations were under the North Atlantic Treaty. He maintained that "we had better commit no American troops to the European continent at this time" and that we should consider "just what our obligations are under the Atlantic Pact."

He maintained that the "President has no power to agree to send American troops to fight in Europe in a war between the members of the Atlantic Pact and Soviet Russia. Without authority he involved us in the Korean war. Without authority he apparently is now adopting a similar policy in Europe. If Russia attacks, we will be in the war," Taft stated.

He did not think that we should "force our assistance on nations which do not wish to arm themselves".

Pay-As-You-Go Budget

In order to fight communism he advocated that the nation adopt a pay-as-you-go budget of $65 billion annually, with $40 billion for military purposes, that we adopt "aggressive methods of propaganda," establish a "more effective intelligence force," and adopt infiltration tactics.

It was Taft's thesis that the Russians were not ready to start a war with the United States. "We have clearly notified them that any attack in Europe upon the United Nations means a third World War, and we are obligated to enter such a war under the terms of the Atlantic Pact," he said.

He saw the fight against communism as a "world-wide battle that must be fought on the world stage." With Russia's preponderance in manpower, he thought the U. S. should not fight "on the enemy's chosen battle ground where he has his greatest strength." For that reason he favored concentration on atomic bomb production and air and sea power.

He said former President Herbert Hoover did not favor "retirement to the American continent." Hoover emphasized that our first line of defense should be the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, in the event "all of our allies should abandon us," Taft said. It was "still fashionable" he noted, to call such criticism "isolationism."

Urges Japan Treaty

In other parts of his address, Taft asserted that:

He favored concluding a peace treaty with Japan immediately and providing "a few army divisions" to fortify Japan until it could create its own land army. "I believe the policy would also involve the support of Chiang Kai-shek on Formosa" to enable Chiang to fight the Communists on the Chinese mainland. "It is ridiculous to talk about avoiding a war with Communist China when such a war already exists," Taft said. But he thought the Chinese war "need not involve the invasion of China by American armies."

He advocated giving continental nations "economic assistance" providing "they really want that assistance," and also armed aid, such as that now supplied the Atlantic Pact nations, Indo-China, Greece and Turkey.

He contended that foreign policy had not been bipartisan since 1948, and that the members of Congress, and particularly the members of the Senate, "have a Constitutional obligation to re-examine constantly and discuss the foreign policy of the United States."

President Enters Fray

Three days after Taft's address, President Truman submitted his message on the State of the Union, on Jan. 8. The President's message was devoted largely to foreign policy, and clashed head - on with Taft's views in many major sections. These are typical instances, quoted verbatim:

On foreign policy generally, Mr. Truman said: We are the most powerful single member of (the) community (of free nations) . . . It would be disastrous for us to withdraw . . . We have a special responsibility (to) take the leadership in meeting the challenge to freedom and in helping to protect the rights of independent nations.

Taft: The principal purpose of the foreign policy of the United States is to maintain the liberty of our people. Its purpose is not to reform the entire world or spread sweetness and light and economic prosperity to peoples who have lived and worked out their own salvation for centuries according to the best of their ability.

On mobilization, Mr. Truman said: We are preparing for full wartime mobilization, if that should be necessary . . . We are building much stronger military forces — and we are building them fast . . . we are going to produce all the weapons and equipment that such an armed force (and our Allies) will need.

Taft: There is no doubt that we should go just as far toward preparing for war as we can go in time of peace without weakening ourselves in the long run and destroying forever the very liberty which war is designed to protect . . . We must not undertake anything beyond our power as we have in Korea.

On the Atlantic Treaty, Mr. Truman said: Strategically, economically and morally, the defense of Europe is part of our own defense . . . None of (these) countries, including our own, has done enough yet, but real progress is being made.

Taft: . . . One thing seems certain. There is no legal obligation to send American land soldiers to Europe. . .

And On Korea

On Korea, Mr. Truman said: Korea has a tremendous significance for the world . . . It stands for right and justice in the world against oppression and slavery . . .

Taft: The President simply usurped authority in violation of the laws and the Constitution . . .

On appeasement, Mr. Truman said: We are willing, as we have always been, to negotiate honorable settlements with the Soviet Union. But we will not engage in appeasement.

Taft: At Teheran and Yalta, we secretly agreed to a zone of influence of Soviet Russia in Europe . . . The result was to establish Russia in a position of power . . . which today threatens the liberty of Western Europe and of the United States itself.

On the United Nations, Mr. Truman said: We will support the United Nations and remain loyal to the great principles of international cooperation laid down in its charter . . .

Taft: For the present we must make use of the United Nations as best we may . . . But as far as military policy is concerned, I see no choice except to develop our own . . . without regard to the non - existent power of the United Nations to prevent aggression.

On appeals for unity, Mr. Truman said: I ask the Congress for unity in these crucial days . . . not unanimity . . . not . . . an end to debate . . . (but) a sense of responsibility on the part of every Member of this Congress.

Taft: I suggest that these appeals (for unity) are an attempt to cover up past faults and failures of the Administration . . . Certainly when policies have been determined (after Congressional re-examination) unity in execution in the preparation for . . . war . . . is essential.

Wherry Resolution Introduced

The most important repercussion of Taft's 10,000 word speech and Mr. Truman's opposite views was the introduction Jan. 8 of a resolution (S Res 8) by Sen. Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.), Senate Floor Leader for the Republicans. The Wherry resolution picked up the theme the Coudert resolution had carried in the House.

The Wherry resolution demanded in the name of the Senate that no American ground troops be sent to Western Europe "pending determination by Congress of a policy on that matter."

Other reaction in the wake of Taft's speech involved both praise and criticism. Chairman Tom Connally (D Tex.) of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee told the press Jan. 8 that Congress would be consulted before more American troops were sent to Western Europe.

Sen. Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.) said Jan. 5 Taft's speech was based on an assumption that "a huge land army" was being planned by the United States "to defend Europeans not willing to defend themselves." He doubted that such a plan was in the mind of U. S. military leaders.

Sen. Robert S. Kerr (D Okla.) in a newsletter to constituents said the American people would like to know who spoke for the Republicans on foreign policy. Gov. Thomas E. Dewey and former Sen. John Foster Dulles of New York represented one point of view and Sen. Taft and former President Hoover another, Kerr said. With illness all but silencing Sen. Arthur H. Vandenberg (R Mich.) as the GOP voice on foreign policy, "we now hear mainly the discord of dissension from the GOP," according to Kerr.

Vandenberg Statement

After conferring with Dulles for three hours in a Grand Rapids hospital Jan. 8, Vandenberg issued a press statement Jan. 9 warning the nation against "a deadlock in foreign policy." He urged a "meeting of loyal minds" on this issue "as swiftly as possible."

The statement was one of the last on foreign policy by Sen. Vandenberg, an acknowledged GOP spokesman in that field. The man generally considered one of the "architects" of bipartisan foreign policy died April 18 at his Grand Rapids, Mich., home.

Sen. Taft continued his running debate with the Administration on foreign policy in a speech before the National Press Club Jan. 9.

The Ohio Republican said he was willing to sit down with President Truman or any one else to try to work out a middle-of-the-road, ten-year preparedness program within the limits of our economy.

In response to a press conference question Jan. 10, Secretary of State Dean Acheson said that he would be glad to talk with Taft or any other Republicans on foreign policy.

"I'm glad to know it," Taft said when informed of Acheson's comment. But he added that he was "not eager" to do so. "That's up to them," he said. He suggested that any foreign policy conversations with the Administration should include the three Senate leaders: Taft, GOP Conference Chairman Eugene D. Millikin (R Colo.) and Republican Floor Leader Wherry. But he said he would not decline a personal invitation if it were extended.

By Jan. 11, the Wherry resolution banning troops-to-Europe until Congress had passed on the policy had become the center of the Senate discussions which were being dubbed the "Great Debate". On that day, an afternoon - long bout of speechmaking was launched.

Chairman Connally of the Foreign Relations Committee led off the speechmaking by stating he understood the Administration "will consult with Congress" on sending American troops to Europe. Connally called Taft's desire to keep U.S. military participation in European defenses limited "a faint-heart philosophy." It was impossible he said to "put a price tag on world peace."

Meantime, Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower had been appointed commander of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization's defense forces. Sen. Ernest W. McFarland (D Ariz.), Senate Majority Leader, asked the Senate to withhold final judgment on sending U.S. troops to Europe until Eisenhower had made a report on Western European preparedness. McFarland said he was convinced that "no great differences" on foreign policies divided the Senate.

Sen. William F. Knowland (R Calif.) and George W. Malone (R Nev.) spoke for the Republicans. Knowland suggested that the United States provide 10 American divisions to 60 to be provided by the other Atlantic Pact nations. Malone favored suspending Marshall Plan aid to Southeast Asia and Africa where many natives are still under the rule of the British and the French. U.S. aid has been used to finance "the repulsive slavery system" in these areas, he stated.

Wants "Commitment"

Sen. Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr. (R Mass.) also spoke Jan. 11. He told the Senate that the U. S. "should not commit one single additional soldier to Europe without an iron-clad agreement that the dispatch of that soldier means the automatic commitment of a very much larger number of European soldiers."

At a Jan. 11 conference that followed the afternoon-long Senate foreign policy discussion, President Truman again seized the ball for the Administration forces.

Over and over again at his conference the President said there was no question about the authority of the Chief Executive to send troops anywhere in the world. He said, however, that this government always consults with Congressional leaders before making foreign policy decisions.

The President also said it was his intention to include some U. S. forces in Gen. Eisenhower's European command, and that if Congress tried to restrict appropriations he would take the issue to the American people.

As the verbal battle over the powers of the President to dispatch troops reached a fever pitch, Sen. Taft, Jan. 15 said the nation was facing a "constitutional crisis" and called upon Congress to reassert its rights to pass on fundamental principles of foreign policy.

The Ohio Republican said he had been shocked at the speed with which "blind partisans" had rushed to the defense of the proposition that the President "can make war and warlike commitments." He said the basic liberties of the people of this country would be imperiled unless Congress was given such a right.

"Unless we are prepared to set up a 'dictatorship' in the United States", Congress should pass on President Truman's authority to send American troops to Europe, Taft said.

Democratic Support

Two influential Democrats, Sens. Walter F. George (Ga.) and Paul H. Douglas (Ill.), added their voices to the Republican demands that the President get consent of Congress before sending any additional troops to Europe.

Declaring he was speaking in the interests of national unity, George said that regardless of whether the President had the power to commit American forces to combat in foreign areas without consent of Congress "we will not obtain national unity that is essential in these times until the President advises the people that he will submit the question to Congress before finally acting".

Douglas said that Mr. Truman had authority to send troops overseas but said he should not do so without Senate approval, and perhaps House agreement as well. Contending the troops responsibility was too big for the President to shoulder alone, Douglas told the Senate Jan. 15 that if the Administration did not ask Senate approval of the Brussels agreement to send American troops to Europe he would force the issue himself.

On Jan. 16, the Senate agreed to make a formal decision on Jan. 23 with respect to a disposition of the Wherry resolution. Senators on both sides of the aisle were agreeing with Wherry's comment that his proposal was the "crux" of the entire foreign policy debate being waged in the Senate and across the nation. It would put the Senate on record as declaring that "no ground forces of the United States should be assigned to duty in the European area for the purposes of the North Atlantic Treaty pending the adoption of a policy with respect thereto by the Congress."

Congress Should Decide

Wherry said the question of sending ground troops to Europe as part of the 12-nation Atlantic defense force under Gen. Eisenhower was a "question that no one man, even though he be President, should have the right or power to answer and bind all our people to his decision." Although he opposed the North Atlantic Treaty, Wherry made it clear the nation would stand by it, but he maintained that the character of the aid should be determined by Congress.

It was pointed out that the Wherry resolution was similar to a reservation proposed to the North Atlantic Treaty by Sen. Arthur V. Watkins (R Utah) when the Senate was considering that Pact in 1949. Watkins proposed at that time that the U. S. assume no obligation for the security of the North Atlantic area, and give armed assistance to any other party to the Pact only upon the authorization of Congress. This Watkins reservation was rejected by the Senate by a 11-84 ballot on July 21, 1949. (For additional details and a vote break-down, see CQ Almanac, Vol. V, page 429.)

A reported Democratic move in the Senate to voice approval of the use of American troops in Europe if necessary was welcomed Jan. 18 by President Truman. The President made it clear that he had no question about his authority to send troops anywhere with or without Congressional consent, but said he would like an affirmative expression of support from Congress.

President Truman previously had said he would consult Congress — but would not be bound by its decision— on the policy of furnishing American divisions for the international army. Sen. Homer Ferguson (R Mich.) termed this a "public be damned" attitude.

Secretary of State Acheson said Jan. 17 he was confident the Administration and Congress could work out their differences on sending more American troops to Europe. The Secretary indicated that the President would define the Administration's idea of a compromise solution soon.

Decision Postponed

On Jan. 23, however, the Senate postponed definite action on the Wherry resolution which had been altered to direct the Armed Services and Foreign Relations Committees to recommend whether the Senate should oppose assignment of ground forces to Europe without the permission of Congress. Wherry's original resolution had read simply that it was the sense of the Senate that no ground forces be assigned to duty in Europe pending formulation of a policy on the matter by Congress.

Chairman Connally of the Foreign Relations Committee asked unanimous consent Jan. 23 that the bill be referred to the Committees without the scheduled debate. Wherry tried to extract a promise from Connally that the resolution would be acted on promptly by the Committees and that they would not deviate from a simple approval or disapproval of a ban on shipment of troops to Europe. Connally insisted that the Committees could amend the resolution in any way or reject it altogether. Wherry did not object to the unanimous consent request, so the bill was sent to the Committees without further debate or vote.

The Senate Democratic Policy Committee, according to Majority Leader McFarland, agreed Jan. 24 to urge the Foreign Relations and Armed Services Committees to draw up and approve an "affirmative" resolution supporting the President's plan to send troops to Western Europe. He said there would be no action until after Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower's report to Congress, set for Feb. 1.

Eisenhower Reports

On that date, in an applause-punctuated report on his survey of Western Europe's willingness and ability to defend itself, Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower declared to a joint informal meeting of the House and Senate Feb. 1 that "we can not afford to do less than our best" to aid U. S. allies there.

"We must give Europe assistance . . . because there is no acceptable alternative," Eisenhower said. The General had returned to Washington Jan. 31 after a tour of Britain, France, Belgium, Holland, Denmark, Luxembourg, Germany, Norway, Italy and Canada as Supreme Commander of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization Forces.

Eisenhower praised Europe's "spirit to resist." He admitted there was some spirit of defeatism and pessimism, but said on the whole there had been a "rejuvenation" in Europe's morale.

The Treaty nations' greatest and most immediate needs were not determination or American troops, Eisenhower stated, but arms, equipment and materiel. He stressed the need as well for prompt action: "There is not a moment to waste."

The General did not sidestep contentions in Congress that strengthening Western Europe's defenses would invite attack by the Communists. Eisenhower disputed suggestions that any other nation would see "what we are doing . . . as a threat to its existence."

If Communists attacked and "the only reason they have to give us" was that we were building up European defenses, Eisenhower said, they would have had some "nefarious" purpose which "would have been executed anyway if we didn't do it . . ."

But Eisenhower did reserve statements on the participation of Germany in defense arrangements. He said he preferred to wait "until the political leaders, the diplomats and the statesmen find the proper answer" before committing himself specifically. He said, "I personally think that there has to be a political platform achieved . . . before we should start to talk about including units of Germans in any kind of Army."

General Eisenhower addressed an overflow audience of Senators and Representatives who filled each of the 510 seats in the Library of Congress auditorium. He drew repeated applause from them. At the outset of his speech, he declared he had "no end to serve except the good of the United States" and appealed for belief in the "sincerity of my convictions."

The General spoke from notes and not a formally prepared address. He told the legislators informally that there was not "anything sacrosanct about the conclusions I reached." A group of women members of Congress sat at the front of the auditorium with Mrs. Eisenhower.

Makes Major Points

Before Eisenhower left the auditorium of the Library of Congress where the joint informal session was held to go before the Senate Foreign Relations and Armed Services Committees for a question - and - answer appearance, he made these major points:

1. Typical of the earnestness with which Western Europe intended to defend itself was Norway's comment, said Eisenhower, that she would "resist to the point of destruction". For her part, France had also promised 25 battle-worthy divisions by the end of 1952. (Later the General told Committee members he should have said 15 divisions.)

2. Any American troops sent to bolster European defenses should go in a "ratio" to those furnished by European nations themselves. Also, "We must have cooperation" from those governments.

3. The U. S. must "build for ourselves a secure wall of peace", devise a concrete program of security that can be supported for the next 20 to 30 years, and spread our story through the world — but not with propaganda alone since "we don't have to falsify either the facts or our intentions".

Early Reaction Varied

First reaction to Eisenhower's speech ran the gamut. Senate Majority Leader McFarland praised it as setting "the standards" for an effective aid program. Senate Minority Leader Wherry complained the speech outlined plans which reduced Congress to the role of simply paying for aid programs, not formulating them.

GOP leader Taft withheld comment, but Republican Sens. Homer Capehart (Ind.) and Harry Cain (Wash.) were, respectively, "frankly disappointed" and convinced that the General "presented the political considerations". James P. Kem (R Mo.) said Eisenhower "left many questions unanswered."

Democratic Senator Hubert H. Humphrey (Minn.) declared "Thank God we have General Eisenhower." William Benton (D Conn.) said he was "delighted" at the report. Agreeing, Theodore Francis Green (D R.I.) said he hoped "the public agrees, too."

This is what other leading Senators and Representatives had to say about "Ike's" address:

Sen. John J. Sparkman (D Ala.)— "most helpful, very encouraging"; Rep. James P. Richards (D S.C.), acting head of the House Foreign Affairs group—"very well received, an able exposition"; Chairman Connally of the Senate Foreign Relations unit — "gave me much encouragement . . ."; Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.) — "I agree . . ."; and Alexander Wiley (R Wis.), ranking GOP member of the Connally group —"he speaks very convincingly."

Eisenhower subsequently testified for two hours before the combined House Armed Services and Foreign Affairs Committees Feb. 2. It was reported after the session that Eisenhower recommended that, for psychological reasons, American troops be sent to Europe as soon as possible. He did not mention a specific number of divisions.

Members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, which had heard Eisenhower Feb. 1, indicated they were split on their reaction to Eisenhower's secret testimony. Chairman Connally said Eisenhower gave a "complete answer to the Wherry Resolution".

The General's testimony was released March 12. Eisenhower told the Committees that in case of war with Russia, "our 150,000,000 enlightened people can still whip 190,000,000 backward people".

He said atomic bombs should be used if the military good were found to outweigh the moral bad. Eisenhower said a dozen American divisions could stand off the Russians in Europe provided they had full air and sea protection and provided they withdrew to a small area, such as the Breton peninsula of France.

Eisenhower advocated a force in Europe large enough to hold off the Russians, but not large enough to be a threat to Russia.

"Great Debate" Continues

Sen. Taft declared Feb. 8 that Gen. Eisenhower's report to Congress made the outlook "more hazy and indefinite and uncertain" than it had been. He asked Congress to set a ratio of one American division to every nine the Europeans could raise for their defense. Taft's address to the Senate reiterated his stand that Congress should sanction further troop consignments overseas.

Former President Herbert Hoover on Feb. 9 repeated his warning against involvement of U. S. troops in a land war in the "quicksands of either Europe or China." He called on Congress to recover its "constitutional authority over starting wars." He praised Eisenhower, but said the General's appointment "does not commit" Americans to a policy of sending more troops to Europe. Among other major points, Hoover's speech demanded a ban on European aid until Europe showed more will to resist and more unity.

In a Chicago speech Feb. 10, Taft hit the same theme he had two days earlier, but on Feb. 11 "Mr. Republican" indicated he might discard his proposed 1:9 ratio in favor of one limiting the number of U. S. troops earmarked for European assignment to 20 per cent of total U. S. troop strength. Taft declared he agreed "with practically everything" Hoover said.

Gov. Thomas E. Dewey of New York split sharply with Taft and Hoover, saying on Feb. 12 "We should reinforce" our units in Europe. He criticized proposals to withdraw to a Western Hemisphere defense line as leading to "operation suicide."

The Taft - Hoover - Dewey triangle stirred fast reaction. Sen. Brien McMahon (D Conn.) on Feb. 9 called Taft's ratio plan "unworkable and impractical. . .a typical Taft approach." H. Alexander Smith (R N.J.) asked for a "reasonable ratio." On Feb. 13, Sen. Edward Martin (R Pa.) gave qualified support to Hoover's views, but former Sen. John S. Cooper (R Ky.) lined up solidly with Dewey. Cooper had just returned from an inspection tour of Europe.

Answers Hoover

Chairman Connally scored Hoover on Feb. 10, and asserted: "Congress can't set itself up as the Commander-in-Chief" solely responsible for deciding such issues as the troops-to-Europe one. Majority Leader McFarland also lashed out in a Raleigh, N.C. speech the same day at "timid men suddenly become military strategists." He flayed people opposing Eisenhower's views and the Administration's troops-to-Europe plans as "captious critics."

A lobby group took sides. The National Federation of Independent Business declared its membership was 75 per cent in favor of the Wherry resolution against more troops to Europe without Congressional approval.

At this point in the "Great Debate", public hearings on the Wherry resolution were scheduled by the Senate's Foreign Relations and Armed Services Committee to which it had been referred. The hearings were to open Feb. 15, with Secretary of Defense George C. Marshall as first witness for the Administration. (See p. 226.)

House GOP "Declaration"

On the eve of Marshall's testimony, scores of Republicans in the House of Representatives endorsed the principle of the Wherry resolution. Out of 199 Republicans in the lower chamber, about 120 registered a plea that foreign policy "be determined with the full participation and approval" of Congress.

Rep. Lawrence H. Smith (R Wis.) disclosed they had gotten behind a "Declaration of Policy" assailing current Administration moves as "dangerous" ones leading to a "tragic" future.

Smith made a 90-minute speech charging the nation's foreign policy had "failed", was "diabolical", had led the American people to "doubt the necessity" of the present emergency, and reflected top Administration officials' efforts at "conjuring up another war."

Besides Smith, Reps. Frank Fellows (R Maine), Katharine St. George (R N.Y.), Joseph P. O'Hara (R Minn.), Harry L. Towe (R N.J.) and T. Millet Hand (R N.J.) initiated the "declaration", which was in the form of a petition signed by the additional Republicans.

Their document drew support from the Democratic side of the aisle. Rep. John Bell Williams (D Miss.) registered his sympathy for it. Rep. W. J. Bryan Dorn (D S.C.) agreed "people have lost confidence in the top executives of this country." But Majority Leader John W. McCormack (D Mass.) called the exchanges "sad" and imputed political motives to them.

Much of the criticism of the conduct of foreign affairs, said McCormack, was coming from "some men with Presidential ambitions" who might be trying to head off a possible nomination of General Dwight D. Eisenhower as Chief Executive. He later indicated he referred to the Senate and its members.

McCormack chided the Republicans for "griping" and "nagging" and said some of the speeches showed a "defeatist attitude" which had "nothing to offer."

Beyond asking for a full role for Congress in shaping foreign policy, the "Declaration" urged further strengthening of this country and hemisphere, reduced Federal spending on non-defense items, greater cooperation from Western Europe, and peace treaties with Germany, Austria, and Japan.

No Debate Abate

Marshall's testimony as hearings opened that the Administration planned to send 100,000 troops to Europe did not noticeably abate the "Great Debate." Sen. Paul Douglas (D Ill.) took to the airwaves the next day to criticize Hoover's opposition to the ground troops aid plan. Sen. James H. Duff (R Pa.) called Republicans urging a limitation on the number of troops to be involved "clearly wrong" and said they were meddling in military matters.

Chairman Connally said he thought a separate troops-to-Europe resolution (S J Res 34) introduced Feb. 19 by Sen. Lodge "would greatly delay" matters and "further discourage our allies." Connally said he was framing a resolution of his own.

On Feb. 25, Connally disclosed that Chairman Richard B. Russell (D Ga.) of the Armed Services group had joined him in sponsoring the resolution Administration leaders hoped to use to displace the Wherry one. The Connally-Russell resolution would affirm the commitment of troops to Europe without writing in a numerical limitation, would demand Western European cooperation "commensurate with their ability", and would require the President to consult with Congressional military and foreign affairs leaders when he planned to commit more troops. Reports to Congress every six months also would be required.

It was announced that Erle Cocke, Jr., National Commander of the American Legion, had filed a statement with the Committees supporting the troops - to - Europe program. But Rep. Smith (R Wis.) imputed political motives to Dewey's support of the troops - to - Europe program and said Feb. 26, "It wouldn't surprise me if Tom turned up some day with the offer of a job here, maybe a cabinet member." Rep. Leon H. Gavin (R Pa.) supported the troops program.

Sen. Wayne Morse (R Ore.) said it was a mistake for the U.S. to admit it planned sending "only" four more divisions to Europe. Sen. Robert C. Hendrickson (R N.J.) said he would vote to "provide a reasonable supply of ground troops", the number to be determined by the "best judgment of our military leaders."

Knowland Version

Sen. William F. Knowland (R Calif.) Feb. 28 introduced a resolution (S Con Res 16) recommending Congressional approval of four divisions to Europe, but setting a 1:6 ratio for divisions to be sent abroad in the future. For every one U.S. unit, the Europeans would have to recruit six themselves.

Knowland's resolution affirmed the basic policy of permitting the President to commit troops in that ratio without express Congressional approval. But Mr. Truman would have to consult with Congressional officials before making commitments.

Also on Feb. 28, the Foreign Relations and Armed Services Committees released a document surveying the entire question of whether the President might commit troops without express Congressional approval. The document said there had been at least 125 incidents when the Presidency committed troops without legislative authorization. The President could "lawfully and Constitutionally" send troops to Europe under the North Atlantic Treaty, the document asserted.

HEARINGS

After receiving secret testimony from Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower on defense forces in Western Europe and the role U. S. troops were scheduled to play with them, the Senate Foreign Relations and Armed Services Committees decided to hold open hearings on the entire troops-to-Europe issue. Ostensibly, the hearings—to be jointly held—were to cull viewpoints on Kenneth S. Wherry's (R Neb.) resolution, which had been referred to the Foreign Relations group. Actually, the hearings were to be much broader in scope, and were to embrace many of the issues in the "Great Debate" on foreign policy.

First witness to go before the joint hearings was Secretary of Defense George C. Marshall. Saying he was testifying to firm up "a debate based on uncertainties", Gen. Marshall on Feb. 15 told the Senators that the U. S. planned to send four additional Army divisions to bolster the defenses of Western Europe. Some 100,000 men would be involved.

Marshall asserted, moreover, that it would be helpful to the defense plans of North Atlantic Treaty nations for Congress to adopt a resolution affirming the Administration's troops-to-Europe project.

Marshall himself said he "reluctantly" disclosed that four new divisions would join the two already in Europe "because of the security considerations involved." "But", he added, "there is a greater peril to our security through weakening the morale of our allies by a debate based upon uncertainties . . .".

Major Marshall Points

Then the General went on to make these major points:

1. The four new divisions sent to strengthen NATO forces would involve about 72,000 combat troops and 20-25,000 support troops. Counting the GI's already in Western Europe, NATO would have about 40 divisions there. "Proportionately, the American contribution will be greater in air and in naval forces than in ground forces," Marshall said.

2. The international setting was "far more delicate and more dangerous" than it was in World War II, but that the NATO program under Eisenhower was strictly "to deter aggression if that be possible" or to defeat it if it did erupt.

3. There had been no proposal to send huge American land armies to Europe. If Congress wanted to pass a resolution against sending great masses of men overseas, Marshall had "no objection" so long as no numerical limitation was written into the resolution. But, Marshall reiterated, he had no plans for building a vast land army.

4. Some 300 divisions might be needed to fight an aggressive war with Russia. In the face of this, six divisions in Western Europe for defense purposes might seem "arithmetically small", but they would actually form a "hard core" which could serve the purpose of strengthening Europe to "deter" any attack. Marshall said there were no existing plans "for additional units" to go to Western Europe.

During an extended interrogation after his testimony, Gen. Marshall told Richard B. Russell (D Ga.) that attempts by Congress to fix the degree of aid to Europe "certainly won't help matters." He sidestepped a direct answer on whether Spain should be brought into the NATO, saying instead: "Any acquisition of battleworthy troops would be tremendously helpful in a time like this."

Marshall answered "Yes, sir!" when asked by Guy M. Gillette (D Iowa) whether the General felt the President had the authority to send troops to Europe even if Congress did nothing one way or the other on the troops-to-Europe issue. Gillette said he agreed with Marshall's answer.

The Secretary rejected suggestions that building up European defenses against a possible future attack would only serve to speed up the imminence of that possible attack. Said Marshall: We must "go ahead and do what we can to build up our security and not sit with our hands in our laps, which is what the Soviets want us to do".

Marshall declined to say when the additional troops would begin to head towards Europe.

Favorable Comment

At his Feb. 15 press conference, President Truman fully endorsed Marshall's testimony and said the Secretary made a simple and clear statement of the problem.

Chairman Russell of the Armed Services Committee hailed Marshall's announcement that only four new divisions were contemplated for NATO defense. Their relation to NATO divisions fell "within any ratio that has been suggested in Congress," he said.

Sen. John C. Stennis (D Miss.) told Marshall: "You have taken a lot of the heart out of this argument" over the troops-to-Europe fight.

Marshall left the witness stand without hearing some of the 27 questions Sen. Wherry had framed and asked Sen. William F. Knowland (R Calif.) to put to the Secretary. Wherry was absent from the meeting. Connally indicated that Marshall subsequently might be recalled for additional testimony.

Acheson and Bradley

The second witness was Secretary of State Dean Acheson. He told the Senators on Feb. 16 that "vigorous efforts to build an effective force in Europe" were urgently needed. He attacked moves to spell out limitations on American aid. He criticized proposals that armed aid to Europe be withheld until that continent were attacked. That approach, Acheson declared, would vitiate Western European morale, and create "a mood of 'neutralism' which is, for them and for all of us, a shortcut to suicide."

Even more than 100,000 U.S. troops might have to go to Europe to swell anti-Communist defense forces there if the situation worsened, the Senate Foreign Relations and Armed Services Committees then heard.

This possibility was raised by Gen. Omar N. Bradley, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Bradley admitted U.S. military planners could not know what the situation would be in the future. "It may change in a month or a week," he told Wayne Morse (R Ore.). Therefore, no explicit figure should be inserted in any Congressional resolution affirming the policy of sending U.S. forces abroad. To set a limitation "would tie our hands in case of an emergency", said Bradley, agreeing with J. William Fulbright (D Ark.) that a Congressional limitation "would be attempting to direct the military on the deployment of troops."

The five-star General dodged a question on when troops might be sent overseas. He said he thought they should not "go over tomorrow or the next day" but should go in "staggered (fashion) as we see what other nations are going to do."

New Proposals Readied

On Feb. 17, the two Senate Committees took a breather. Foreign Relations Chairman Tom Connally (D Tex.) declared the Marshall-Bradley-Acheson arguments had "absolutely demolished" the proposal to write a numerical limitation into the troops-to-Europe program. Connally added he was trying to devise a "palatable" resolution touching on the issue.

Connally explained, "We are going to have a resolution, not because we need it but in the interest of unity."

On Feb. 19, Connally outlined his resolution. It would contain no limitation on numbers and would not give Congress any veto power over the President's authority to deploy troops. It would, however, require the President to consult foreign and military affairs leaders on Capitol Hill before committing more troops to Europe.

Simultaneously, Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr. (R Mass.) introduced a resolution (S J Res 34) to hold up Presidential assignment of troops until the Joint Chiefs of Staff had certified the assignment was essential and that Western European participants had themselves made "definite and dependable" commitments. Lodge's resolution also asked for a Congressional "watchdog" committee to check on the troops-to-Europe program.

Military Witnesses

With the three differing proposals —by Wherry, Connally and Lodge— in the background, top U.S. military leaders testified Feb. 19 and underscored previous objections to a limitation on the number of troops that could be sent.

The witnesses were Army Chief of Staff Gen. J. Lawton Collins; Chief of Naval Operations Adm. Forrest P. Sherman; and Air Force Chief of Staff Gen. Hoyt S. Vandenberg. All supported the troops - to - Europe plan. Vandenberg doubted the Air Force and Navy could protect Western Europe without the ground forces. Sherman registered the same attitude.

Wherry sat with the Committees during the military testimony, and repeatedly sought to draw from Collins an exact figure on expected divisional strength of the total Western European defense force, including American GI's.

Collins repeatedly declined to furnish such a figure. Wherry said his own understanding was that the force would be some 40 divisions. Collins said "more than that", without amplification.

Opposition Views

Witnesses opposing the troops-to-Europe plan — and supporting Wherry's view of it — filed before the Senate Committees on Feb. 20. Among these were spokesmen for the Daughters of the American Revolution, the National Society for Constitutional Security, the Maryland Committee for Representative Government, the Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense and the American Coalition of Patriotic, Civic and Fraternal Societies of the U.S. The latter organization was represented by former Sen. Albert W. Hawkes (R N.J.).

The theme of these groups was that the Wherry resolution was designed effectively to head off the

XUM

President from "usurping the functions of Congress" and its right to levy war and commit troops.

Rep. Lawrence H. Smith (R Wis.) and George J. Burger of the National Federation of Independent Business, Inc., supported Wherry's attitude in their testimony. A spokesman from the National Society of New England Women and the National Society of Women Descendants of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company supported it, and asked that it be toughened.

C. B. Baldwin, representing the Progressive Party, opposed the troops-to-Europe move and urged instead a negotiated settlement with Russia. A spokesman from the Maryland Committee for Peace complained that Baltimore newspapers had refused an advertisement the group had prepared in support of the Wherry resolution. At the hearing, Wherry dissociated himself from the stands of the two organizations.

Resisting the Wherry proposal and endorsing the Administration view of troops-to-Europe was the Ukrainian Congress Committee of America.

Also heard — generally in support of the Wherry resolution — were witnesses from the American Council on Human Rights, American Women for Peace, National Council for the Prevention of War, and various private citizens.

Wherry Calls Witnesses

Two witnesses suggested by Wherry discussed his resolution as hearings continued on Feb. 21. They were Lieut. Gen. Curtis E. LeMay, of the Strategic Air Command, and Alexander de Seversky, aircraft designer and military affairs writer. Both men underscored the role strategic bombing could play in the defense of Western Europe. They attached more significance to bombing than to ground forces for the defense problem at hand.

Another Wherry-suggested witness—Lieut. Gen. Ennis Whitehead of the U.S. Air Defense Command — asserted Feb. 22 that a long-range striking air force should get the "number one priority" for U.S. defense. He reserved outright comment on the Wherry resolution, however, saying, "I am not a constitutional lawyer . . . but a military man." Lieut. Gen. Harold George, retired Air Force officer, supported Whitehead's view of a long-range striking force.

Wherry's resolution drew support from Maj. Gen. Ellard A. Walsh (Ret.) of the National Guard Association of the U.S., who said Congress should have a voice in determining troop commitments.

Gen. Carl Spaatz, former Air Force Chief of Staff, told the hearing Feb. 22 he favored sending troops-to-Europe, and recommended an air force "second to none" as well. He urged a 250-group air force.

Following Spaatz, a representative of the National Economic Council endorsed the Wherry proposal, saying Congress should not permit the President to wield "dictatorial power" to send troops overseas.

Rep. W. J. Bryan Dorn (D S.C.) also went before the Senate Committees Feb. 22 to support the Wherry resolution. Rep. John F. Kennedy (D Mass.) testified that day as well, and urged a ratio of one American division for Europe to every six mustered by the Europeans themselves.

Final Hearings Begin

The last week of hearings was led off by Harold Stassen's appearance Feb. 23. The former Governor of Minnesota said he was "in direct opposition" to Wherry's resolution, which he called "very fundamentally wrong." He called the troops-to-Europe an "Eisenhower program", not an Administration one, and said "the overwhelming majority of the American people" were behind it.

Stassen declared flatly that the President had the authority to commit troops to Europe without specific Congressional sanction. When Sen. Bourke B. Hickenlooper (R Iowa) asked bluntly: "Then he could send the entire American Army to Europe?", the witness replied: "Legally he could — but if he did I would assume he would be impeached the next day."

Stassen left a five-point "victory without war" policy with the Senators. It called for strengthened air power in the U.S. and ground forces in Europe, encouragement of "millions of people within the Communist prison of nations", raised living standards in Asia and Africa, and a sound U.S. economy.

Governor Thomas Dewey of New York went before the Senators Feb. 24 and declared that approval of the Wherry resolution would entail a greater security risk for this country than its defeat. He said approval "would be a simple, direct notice to Stalin" that we do not intend to strengthen Europe's backbone.

Dewey scored views that the U.S. should rely on hemispheric defense primarily. He said, "Fortress America is an illusion" and implied that its advocates spoke from a "toehold of isolationism."

Wherry, sitting with the Committees although not a member of either, bristled when Dewey referred to his views as "defeatist". Wherry later said he thought Dewey was called to testify "as an Administration witness to smear anyone who would protect American boys." Dewey himself indicated at the outset of his testimony that he, like Stassen, preferred to think of the troops-to-Europe program as an Eisenhower project, instead of an Administration one.

However, Dewey also declared that there was no question of the President's right to send troops overseas without explicit Congressional approval. He repeatedly urged approval of the present plan to do so lest the world feel the U.S. may "turn tail and pull out of Europe" or "haul down the flag" there.

Former Sen. John Sherman Cooper (R Ky.), an adviser to the State Department, testified Feb. 26 that the plan to send troops to Europe was "courageous and right" and within the President's authority. Withholding troops could lead to "the greatest surrender in history," he said, adding that it was "certain that Europe could not defend itself now against Soviet aggression." But defense plans now under way "can succeed with our help."

Strong Taft Position

When Sen. Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) went before the Committees on Feb. 26 to criticize strongly the entire troops-to-Europe premise, he supported the Wherry resolution, but capped his testimony by laying even more stringent proposals before the Senators.

"Mr. Republican" advocated three basic restrictions, as follows:

1. That no U.S. armed forces go to Europe for Gen. Eisenhower's defense forces until other countries participating agreed to assign enough of their troops within a reasonable time "to provide an army sufficiently powerful to withstand an attack on Western Europe." Taft specifically included Germany in the area.

2. That the Joint Chiefs of Staff certify "the number of armed forces necessary" to do that.

3. That any Presidential commitment of troops to Europe state the "character and number of forces" to be assigned and "be subject to the approval of Congress."

Taft emphasized his belief that what was needed in Europe were forces strong enough to defeat attacks, rather than deter them. With reference to the Administration's postulate, Taft disagreed, saying, "I can't see this 'deter' business." He reiterated previous statements that Congress deserved a kind of veto power over Presidential commitment of troops.

But, he said, he would approve plans to send four divisions to Europe, provided his three qualifications were accepted and provided that future divisions went to Europe only in a 1:9 ratio to those furnished by the European nations.

Says Restraints Needed

Taft said he feared the Administration — unless restrained by restrictions such as he had outlined — might send 900,000 troops abroad instead of the 100,000 envisaged.

Taft's proposed restrictions were tentatively rejected later by Connally and Russell.

When Wherry took the stand Feb. 27 to speak on behalf of his own resolution, he called Stassen's previous testimony "confused," and accused Dewey of resorting "to the tactic of smearing." He said Stassen failed to give "supporting evidence" for his stand, and that the Administration itself had not furnished "a shred of tangible evidence" that European nations would themselves provide an adequate number of troops.

Wherry said there would be "no welshing" on U.S. commitments under the North Atlantic Treaty, but that "Congress has a right to determine the character" of aid furnished. Otherwise, he contended, the President would have "a blank check to send American boys any place and for any purpose."

Sen. Walter F. George (D Ga.), a Committee member, indicated some support for this. George said he favored sending four divisions to Europe as planned, but that the article of the Treaty under which the troops would go "is to be implemented by the Congress."

Hoover Draws Applause

Before an overflow audience which often applauded, former President Hoover endorsed Wherry's proposal Feb. 27 and declared that the assignment of four divisions to Europe would place the U.S. in "utmost jeopardy" and perhaps lead to "a certainty of massacre" by involving GI's in an "Operation Land War" against staggering odds.

Hoover sided with Taft in fears that other nations were not as wholeheartedly in the defense program as would be desirable. Hoover said he would not "imperil the lives of American boys" until a force was built up that was more of a defense force than a deterring one.

The former President stated he felt Congress should authorize troop commitments: "The Congress surely has left some Constitutional authority in these matters."

Calling the proposed strength of Eisenhower's forces "pitiable", and saying that Soviet armies could drive through to the English Channel 20 days after an invasion, Hoover said, "There is only one real salvation for Europe at the present moment. That is to build up the air and naval power of the U.S. and Britain to overwhelm Russia and paralyze it in the case of attack."

Republican members of the Committee rose and applauded with spectators in the hearing room when Hoover left the stand.

Clay Offers Resolution

Eleven days of public hearings were concluded Feb. 28 when Gen. Lucius D. Clay, Ret., opposed the Wherry resolution or any other which would impose limitations on the aid the U.S. may furnish Treaty countries. Clay, an official with the defense mobilization effort, said limitations would be a "blow to their morale" just when Europeans were sharpening "a willingness to fight" any aggression.

Clay urged faith in our European allies, saying, "I know damned well it is the only way you can get men to fight." He said that a "substantial" number of divisions guarding Western Europe next Fall and "all out" American war production would add up to "no profit for a Russian aggression."

Before buckling down to work on a specific resolution on the troops-to-Europe issue, the Committees heard in closed session some official estimates of the program's cost. Witnesses testified March 2 that sending four more U.S. divisions to bolster NATO defenses would cost some $248 million for the first year, and about $111 million for the second. The figures for transporting and maintaining the units would represent expenses above and beyond the costs of keeping those divisions in the U.S.

The figures would thus have to be added to the existing military budget, witnesses indicated. Those testifying were Gen. Bradley, Gen. Collins, Rear Adm. M. E. Curts, a submarine expert, and W. J. McNeil, assistant secretary of Defense and also a budget official.

COMMITTEES

On March 5, the Senate's Foreign Relations and Armed Services Committees began work on the simple Senate resolution (S Res 99) the respective chairmen, Tom Connally (D Tex.) and Richard B. Russell (D Ga.) had readied to supplant S Res 8, authored by Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.) The Connally-Russell resolution would have endorsed the Administration's authority to send troops abroad without express Congressional sanction. The resolution also signified the "sense of the Senate" that the U.S. should bear a "fair share" of the defense burden of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO).

On March 7, however, Sen. H. Alexander Smith (R N.J.) proposed that the pending simple resolution endorsing the troops-to-Europe program be made a concurrent one, so that the House would have a formal chance to pass on the issue. But J. William Fulbright (D Ark.) headed off Smith by moving that the two Committees continue to confine themselves to the simple resolution. Fulbright's motion carried, 13-11.

The next day, Smith renewed his proposal, but this time urged that a House-Senate resolution be drafted in addition to the simple Senate one. Theodore Francis Green (D R.I.) moved to appoint a subcommittee to study the proposal, but his motion was defeated 10-14.

Smith then pressed for a vote on his proposal, after specifying that it be a joint resolution, which would have the force of law if signed by the President. But before the vote could be taken, Green moved to substitute the word "concurrent" for the word "joint", and his move was upheld, 13-11.

The final, March 8 ballot was then taken on Smith's proposal for a separate House-Senate concurrent resolution, and the proposal was adopted, 16-8.

XUM

In another March 8 vote which reversed a March 7 decision, the two Committees balloted 14-10 to stipulate in the resolutions that Europeans themselves should provide "the major contribution" to the NATO defense forces. The language was sponsored principally by Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr. (R Mass.). The Committees had defeated Lodge's proposal by a 12-12 vote March 7.

The Committees, however, did not overturn a March 7 ballot of 13-10 which accepted another Lodge proposal. This was his language requiring the Joint Chiefs of Staff to "certify" that NATO countries were themselves making effective efforts at building a defense force. The ultimately-approved resolutions contained the certification requirement.

Two Resolutions

Accordingly, after the two days of parliamentary jockeying within the two Committees, two resolutions pended before them. Both were tentatively approved late March 8.

The first resolution (S Res 99), adopted by a unanimous 23-0 vote, was a "simple" one, requiring only Senate approval. The second, (S Con Res 18), a concurrent resolution, required House approval as well. It was adopted by a 16-8 vote.

Both the simple and the concurrent resolution carried fundamentally the same language. The first section of each approved the President's action in naming Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower to be NATO commander. The second expressed the sense of the lawmakers that the President should send troops overseas "to contribute our fair share of the forces needed" by NATO. But language was added to the effect that "the major contribution" to the NATO forces should be made by the Europeans themselves.

Each resolution expressed the conviction that the President — before committing troops to Europe — should consult with the Secretary of Defense, the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the NATO commander, and the military and foreign affairs committees of Congress.

Each required the Joint Chiefs to certify that NATO countries were giving "full, realistic force and effect" to their own obligations under the Treaty before U.S. troops were sent overseas. Such certification would be transmitted to the Congressional committees.

But new controversy developed over a particular section of the resolutions the Committees had tentatively approved March 8. This was a section Sen. H. Alexander Smith (R N.J.) and other Republicans had added to specify that "Congressional approval should be obtained of any policy requiring the assignment of American troops abroad." It was felt that this section contradicted the first part of the resolutions which approved the President's plans to send troops to Europe to assume a "fair share" of the NATO defense burden.

Sen. Fulbright moved March 14 to delete the "Congressional approval" feature from the resolutions, but was defeated on an 11-13 ballot. Then Sen. Lodge moved to take some of the sting off its retention by adding language that although the Congress might wish to reserve a decision of future assignments of troops overseas, it did wholeheartedly endorse "present plans . . . to send four additional divisions of ground forces to Western Europe." The Lodge motion was adopted, 24-0, and the countering language was added to the Smith feature.

The two resolutions were then formally approved by the Committees by unanimous 24-0 votes. Chairmen Connally and Russell introduced them March 14.

Committee Report

In a March 14 report on the resolutions they were introducing, the Senate Committees said the "Congressional approval" feature was subject to "different interpretations." The document did not single out any particular one.

Calling the troops-to-Europe issue one of the "most significant policy" ones to come before the Senate since 1945, the report urged the inclusion of Greece, Turkey, Spain, and Yugoslavia in the Western European defense network.

The document slapped at views that an air defense instead of ground resistance could halt a Russian drive across Europe. It pleaded for action "now" to overcome "existing weakness" in Western European land defenses.

The report made no mention of a related troops-to-Europe issue that had arisen across the Capitol in the House of Representatives. The Republican Policy Committee there approved on March 9 a party resolution which would bar consignment of troops-to-Europe without explicit Congressional approval. Sen. Connally, speaking for himself, labeled the GOP move a "very foolish" one.

But on March 13, Rep. Harry L. Towe (R N.J.) offered the GOP resolution in the form of a rider to the draft bill being considered by the House Armed Services Committee. Towe and other Republicans on the Committee attempted to attach it to that measure, but were turned back by a 14-21 vote. Joining the 19 Democrats on the Committee who voted against Towe's rider were Republicans Leroy Johnson (Calif.) and Leon H. Gavin (Pa.). (See page 282.)

FLOOR ACTION

The Senate opened debate on S Res 99 on March 16. Chairman Tom Connally (D Tex.) of the Foreign Relations group led off by urging Senators not to "quibble" about the prerogatives of Congress and the President in sending troops or making foreign policy. He urged them to affirm the troops program and not "whittle away at the powers of the President as Commander in Chief."

Alexander Wiley (R Wis.), ranking active GOP member of Connally's unit, endorsed the troops project, but called for "no amendments whatever" to Section 6 and the "Congressional approval" clause. Chairman Richard B. Russell (D Ga.) of the Armed Services Committee said "the quicker we can pass these resolutions . . . the better it will be . . ."

Section 6 was the controversial one endorsing existing plans to send four U.S. divisions to bolster Western European defense forces, but requesting that Congress approve any future plans to send more troops.

Harry P. Cain (R Wash.) declared March 18 he wanted assurance that Spain, Greece and Yugoslavia would be brought into the defense program before he would vote for the resolution. Bourke B. Hickenlooper (R Iowa) said he wanted "physical proof" of Western European cooperation to be made a condition of sending troops abroad.

J. William Fulbright (D Ark.) indicated he might move to strike out the entire "approval" language of Section 6. William E. Jenner (R Ind.) defended the language. Arthur V. Watkins (R Utah) asked that the troops program be held up until the Italian-U.S. peace treaty was revised. William F. Knowland (R Calif.) said the entire troops controversy reflected "greatly diminished confidence" in the President by Americans.

Minority Leader Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.) complained in a Nebraska speech March 19 that he had been the victim of a "vicious smear campaign" for his stand on the troops issue. A. Willis Robertson (D Va.) supported the troops project, but Edwin C. Johnson (D Colo.) called it a "military joke" March 22. George Malone (R Nev.) also criticized it. Across the Capitol, Rep. Edith Nourse Rogers (R Mass.), said March 15 that opposition to the program amounted to "polifluff."

Sens. Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.) and Herbert Lehman (D N.Y.) supported the program in formal floor speeches.

Meant As "Advice"

H. Alexander Smith (R N.J.) author of the "approval" clause in Section 6, explained March 19 he did not mean it to be "binding" on the President, but meant it as an expression of Senatorial "advice." Taft sharply challenged Smith's view. Taft said the clause "says 'must' (to the President) and I think it ought to say 'must' " instead of "should."

At this point, Irving Ives (R N.Y.) and Brien McMahon (D Conn.) undertook to amend Section 6. Said Ives: "No greater help could be given to Stalin than to have him notified every time more troops were to be sent abroad."

He and McMahon were joined by Majority Leader Ernest W. McFarland (D Ariz.) and Henry Cabot Lodge Jr. (R. Mass.). Their amendment was drawn to:

1. Endorse existing troops plans, but delete the "Congressional approval" language from Section 6 and substitute a call for "the fullest collaboration between the Congress and the President."

2. Require the submission of future long - range troop consignment plans to Congress for a decision only if majorities in Congress' foreign and military affairs groups disagree with the plans and suggest Congressional consideration.

Still another amendment was prepared March 22 by Robert A. Taft (R Ohio). It was to add language to the resolutions requiring the Europeans to field nine divisions themselves for every U.S. division sent abroad.

Extended discussion continued. Watkins March 27 told the Senate: "The most terrible action any government can engage in is war. The commitment of troops to Europe is part of our preparation for possible war. So long as our Constitution and our system of government endure, the people, either directly or indirectly, through their elected representatives in Congress, must keep control over the issue of war or peace."

Sen. Zales N. Ecton (R Mont.) March 28 told the Senate: "I am not a lawyer and therefore shall not attempt to split hairs on the Constitutional question. To me, and I am sure to 150 million other Americans, the Constitution is simply the people's safeguard against the usurping of authority by anyone, be he a rank-and-file citizen, an administrator of the government, a general of the Army, or the President of the United States. If the Constitution means less than that, it means very little indeed . . . By adopting the (troops-to-Europe) resolutions as now written, Congress would be surrendering its right under the Constitution to protect the interests of the people."

More amendments and proposals were offered. Hickenlooper said March 27 he was drafting an amendment to "make it clear that Congress asserts that the power rests in it (alone) to authorize the sending of troops."

Watkins Resolution

Watkins the same day introduced a resolution (S J Res 56) authorizing the President to send troops "subject to the approval of Congress by appropriate act or joint resolution". Either would have the force of law if signed by the President. Both would require formal action by Congress and would spell out "the numbers and types" of troops to be made available.

John Bricker (R Ohio) and Guy Cordon (R Ore.) on March 27 entered a formal proposal that the two pending resolutions be recommitted to the sponsoring committees, and resubmitted in the form of a single joint resolution.

Joseph R. McCarthy (R Wis.) readied an amendment March 28 to bring Western Germany, Spain, Turkey and Greece into the defense alliance the troops-to-Europe program would bolster. McCarthy also sought language in the proposal which would call for an early Japanese peace treaty.

A Democrat, Lehman, introduced an amendment removing the "Congressional approval" language from S Res 99 and substituting instead a call for "the fullest cooperation between the Congress and the President" in settling a troops policy.

Francis Case (R S.D.) sponsored an amendment March 28 to create a volunteer corps of West Germans for the European defense force. A second Case amendment was to require that U.S. troops sent to Europe be at least 20 years old.

Voting Begins

The Senate, returned from a brief Easter recess, brushed aside full-dress speechmaking and April 2 got down to voting on amendments outstanding to the pending resolution. Debate on each amendment was limited to 30 minutes for each side.

Wherry, who figured in the troops issue from its inception, promptly moved to displace the simple resolution with a joint one. Sen. Connally, Wherry's chief protagonist throughout the debate, raised a point of order. Vice President Barkley upheld Connally.

The Administration won a second victory when the Senate defeated, 27-62, the move by Case to keep troops under 20 years of age at home. But, though Connally called it not germane, the amendment by Watkins to lift peace treaty limitations on Italy's military strength so she could participate in NATO defense plans was accepted by the Senate, 67-20. (All votes on pp. 257.)

Two additional rebuffs were handed Administration forces when the Senate rejected, 35-37, a call for "full collaboration" between Congress and the President, and reaffirmed this by a second, 35-55 ballot.

The Administration's greatest defeat, however, came April 2 after what had seemed a victory. Sen. McClellan offered language to S Res 99 expressing the "sense of the Senate that no troops" in addition to the four divisions already contemplated for Europe "shall be sent . . without further Senatorial approval."

Opponents of the proposals persuaded McClellan to change the word "shall" to "should", thus softening his amendment's impact. Other changes were also made, but Administration supporters did not breathe easily until the Senate rejected McClellan's amendment, 44-46.

Relief was short - lived. Case soon after moved to reconsider the narrow vote by which McClellan had been bested. Despite pleas from Connally and GOP foreign affairs leaders not to clamp limitations on the troops program, the Senate voted 49-43 to reconsider the vote, and then voted immediately, also 49-43, to pass the McClellan amendment the second time around.

The coalition nature of this ballot was apparent from the fact that 11 Democrats swung over to vote with the 38 Senators comprising the GOP majority. The 35 opposing Democrats, representing the majority of their own party, were thus overcome despite support from eight Republicans.

When Senators reconvened April 3, Lodge moved to supplant McClellan's language with wording far closer to the liking of the Connally supporters. McClellan, however, countered by moving to alter the language of Lodge's proposal. McClellan revived his original wording, acceptance of which the day before had stunned his own party's majority.

Since, under the rules of the Senate, a vote would have come first on McClellan's motion, Lodge withdrew his proposal. It was feared that McClellan's position might be endorsed by an even wider ballot than the close April 2 vote of 49-43.

Four Proposals Rejected

In other April 3 actions, the Senate rejected, 24-64, an amendment by James P. Kem (R Mo.) to make troop assignments contingent on adequate air support; rejected, 44-45, the amendment by McCarthy to bring Western Germany, Spain, Turkey and Greece into the defense network; turned back, 31-56, the Bricker-Cordon-Watkins move for a joint rather than simple resolution; and quashed, 29-52, a similar move by Karl E. Mundt (R S.D.) for a concurrent resolution, which would have affected also the four divisions already earmarked for overseas.

On April 4, the Senate partially reversed its earlier decision on McCarthy's amendment. It voted 48-41 to affirm the consideration of bringing Western Germany and Spain into the defense system. Moving rapidly, the Senate next granted final approval to S Res 99 by a roll-call vote of 62-21.

After disposing of S Res 99, the Senate turned to the almost identical resolution (S Con Res 18) which — as a "concurrent" one — would go to the House for approval after the upper chamber passed it. The concurrent resolution would express the sense of Congress as a whole, not just the Senate.

Republican floor leader Wherry moved to substitute the text of the already-approved S Res 99 for the language of S Con Res 18. However, Sen. Russell B. Long (D La.), urged that the names of Turkey and Greece be added to Section No. 9 of the simple resolution. Wherry accepted the modification. When the vote came on the substitution, the Senate approved it by a 59-29 roll-call ballot.

The Senate then approved S Con Res 18 — with the simple resolution's language — by a 45-41 roll-call ballot. McClellan moved to reconsider this vote. But on April 5, he withdrew his motion, and the measure was cleared to the House for possible action. This did not immediately materialize, although an unsuccessful effort was made in the lower chamber to insert a troops-to-Europe ban in the House's draft bill. (See p. 283).

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

India Aid

S 872—P.L. 48

Summary — Early in 1951, the Indian government requested food grains from the U. S. to avert a threatening famine. Congressmen in both parties voiced support for an India aid program. But at the time, India was opposing certain U. S. diplomatic moves in the United Nations, and there was considerable resentment of this on Capitol Hill. No formal proposals to aid India were made until President Truman urged Congress Feb. 12 to give two million tons of grain to India "despite important political differences" with that country. The cost of the gift was estimated to be $190 million.

Congress responded unenthusiastically at first. Nevertheless, the House Foreign Affairs Committee held hearings on an India aid bill, and formally reported the measure March 5. The bill (HR 3017) kept the program on a gift basis. The measure was sent to the Rules group for clearance to the House floor. But the Rules unit held up the bill despite complaints that the delay was mocking the humanitarian intent of the grain program's backers.

Meanwhile, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee had held its own hearings, and on April 27 reported its bill (S 872) putting the program on a half-gift loan basis. The Senate itself rejected this formula, voting 52-32 to make India aid a straight loan proposition. (All votes on P. 259.) The Senate also adopted an amendment requiring India to repay the loan partially in certain critical raw materials, which were spelled out. With these major features, the Senate's bill was passed by a voice vote May 16.

"Clean" Bill Reported

In the House, the Rules Committee finally reported an India aid bill April 25. This was a "clean" version (HR 3791) which also put the program on a straight loan basis. The House accepted this, 293-94, on May 24, after defeating a proposal to predicate all assistance on India's willingness to repay in strategic materials.

The differing House and Senate bills went to a conference committee, which worked up a compromise version that substantially embodied the lower chamber's approach. The House adopted the conference report June 6 by a 256-82 vote. The Senate approved it June 11 by a voice vote.

President Truman signed the legislation into Public Law 48 on June 15. He hailed the new law as an expression "of the spontaneous, heartfelt desire of the American people to help the Indian people in their hour of need."

Provisions—Major provisions of the "India Emergency Food Aid Act of 1951":

Authorized the Economic Cooperation Administration to negotiate the U.S. loan to India to buy grain in this country. The loan was to be handled on the same "credit terms" as those the ECA extends to other friendly nations receiving American aid.

Authorized the President to carry out the loan program by permitting the disbursement of $190 million through June 30, 1952. Of this total, $100 million was to come out of funds previously appropriated for the ECA in 1950. The remaining $90 million was to come from ECA funds still on hand after June 30, 1951.

Stipulated that part of the loan could be repaid by the transfer to the U.S. by India of certain resources and raw materials needed by this country. The quantities were to be determined by ECA-Indian negotiation.

"Directed and instructed" the ECA in these negotiations to get for the U.S. "so far as practicable and possible" the immediate and continuing transfer of "substantial quantities of such materials, particularly those found to be strategic and critical" for this country's use.

Restricted India's use of the loan to famine aversion measures only, required India to spend the loan in the U.S. exclusively, and permitted this only if the Secretary of Agriculture does not certify that such buying impairs U.S. needs.

Permitted the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to advance $20 million to the Department of Commerce to rehabilitate federally-owned ships to transport the grain to India if private shipping is not available.

Authorized the ECA to pay ocean freight charges to India of certain private relief packages and supplies, including those sent by the American Red Cross.

Made applicable several provisions of the basic ECA law — the chief one being that at least 50 per cent of the grain shipped under terms of the program go in American-flag ships.

Specified that $5 million of the total interest India will pay on the loan be put into a special Department of State fund. This fund was to be used for an educational and technical assistance program to be carried on between India and the U. S.

Background — First mention that the Indian government had requested U.S. grain came Jan. 26 when Assistant Secretary of State George C. McGhee relayed the request to a closed meeting of a Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee headed by Guy M. Gillette (D Iowa). McGhee did not submit a draft bill in connection with the request, and Gillette did not schedule formal hearings at that time.

Outspoken support for the project came Jan. 27 from Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.). He told an Americans for Democratic Action meeting in Indianapolis that India should be aided as a basically "democratic stronghold" in the Far East.

On Jan. 27, Chairman Tom Connally (D Tex.) of the full Foreign Relations Committee said the Indian aid request had not been "sidetracked", but he noted reports that the proposal might be held up "as an expression of the Committee's disapproval of India's attitude toward the Korean war."

The reference was to India's opposition in the United Nations to U.S.-backed resolutions labelling Communist China as an aggressor in that war.

By the first week of February, former President Herbert Hoover had pledged his support to a grain-to-India program, and Representatives and Senators in both political parties had informally met to draft legislation to get the program underway.

A White House conference of leading Congressional foreign affairs experts with President Truman, Secretary of State Dean Acheson and W. Averell Harriman, Mr. Truman's special foreign affairs adviser, was held Feb. 9.

Later, Sen. Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) indicated his support of the program although he had not been present at the meeting.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People on Feb. 9 sent telegrams supporting the program.

President's Message

On Feb. 12, President Truman sent a special message to the Congress requesting authority to send 2 million tons of grain to India despite "important political differences" between the famine-threatened country and the U.S. The President's request asked only for funds to send the first million tons of grain, however, and suggested Congress defer action on funds for the second half until U.S.-Indian relations have been further "clarified".

The reference to "important political differences" again touched on U.S. criticism of India's opposition to American attempts in the United Nations to brand China an aggressor in the Korean war. Mr. Truman said disagreements "should not blind us" to the needs of the Indian people nor deflect this nation from its traditional course of humanitarianism.

Other highlights of the President's message: 1. It would be possible to meet the Indian government's appeal for grain without harming U.S. stocks; 2. India would pay for transportation charges, which would materially decrease the cost of the aid program, originally estimated at $200 million; 3. Ships carrying grain to India could bring back scarce materials; 4. An ECA mission should supervise distribution of the grain in India if the program were approved.

Bipartisan Sponsorship

Fast action greeted Mr. Truman's request. An 11-member bipartisan group of Representatives announced joint sponsorship of a bill to carry it out. The group included Reps. Frances P. Bolton (R Ohio), Thurmond Chatham (D N.C.), Edna F. Kelly, (D N.Y.), Christian A. Herter (R Mass.), Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.), Walter H. Judd (R Minn.), Thomas E. Morgan (D Pa.), A. A. Ribicoff (D Conn.), Roy W. Wier (D Minn.), Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.) and James G. Fulton (R Pa.). The group formally introduced 11 identical bills on Feb. 15. It stated the aid move had "no political strings" to it.

A similar announcement was made by a like group in the Senate, consisting of Sens. H. Alexander Smith (R N.J.) Herbert H. Lehman (D N.Y.), Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.) and Humphrey.

More than a score of other Senators — including Taft and William F. Knowland (R Calif.), both severe critics of President Truman's foreign policy — associated themselves with the action. All sponsored S 872, introduced Feb. 15.

In their accompanying statement written by Smith, the 16 Democratic and 14 Republican co-sponsors urged passage of the bill "in the interests of the United States" and to provide a "concrete demonstration of the friendly attitude" of this country.

HOUSE

Hearings

The House started hearings Feb. 20 on the Administration's program to give two million tons of grains to famine-threatened India. Secretary of State Dean Acheson went before the Foreign Affairs Committee to support strongly the India-aid legislation introduced Feb. 15.

With Indian Ambassador Madame Vijaya Lakshmi Pandit looking on, Acheson declared it has been a "fundamental American principle that human need overrides political differences." His reference to differences touched on Indian opposition in the U.N. to American views on the Korean war. Acheson said it "simply isn't true" that the Indian people were "hostile" to this country because they do not agree with our policy towards China.

However, ranking Republican Committeeman Charles A. Eaton (N.J.) said he was not "wildly enthusiastic" about the aid program, and said he feared "we are regarded generally as a milk cow with everybody invited to bring their bucket and help themselves."

Rep. John M. Vorys (R Ohio) told Acheson he doubted the wisdom of giving the grain to India instead of handling it on a long-term credit basis, as the Indian government had originally proposed. "I question my right to be charitable with the taxpayer's money," Vorys said.

Under the grain program, one million tons would begin to move to India no later than April 1, Acheson explained. Shipment of the second million tons could await further study. Acheson asked for favorable action "at the earliest possible date."

Vorys' question in Committee of whether the grain should be extended as a gift was brought up in the House itself Feb. 20 by Rep. Charles J. Kersten (R Wis.). He said he favored India's paying for the grain and that India was "in position to pay" without damage to her economy. Moreover, said Kersten, India had thorium ore which the U.S. "is very anxious" to get in American stockpiles.

"Is there any good reason why they (India) should not trade us thorium for grain?" Kersten asked.

On Feb. 21, Loy W. Henderson, American Ambassador to India, urged approval of the aid program because India's appeal "is fully justified." Willard Thorp, Assistant Secretary of State, also endorsed the measure. An ECA official, Dennis A. FitzGerald, spelled out plans for getting the grain to U.S. ports for shipment overseas.

FitzGerald said the prevailing boxcar shortage would require a priority system to be set up so that the Indian grain could actually be moved. This could cut into movement of domestic grains. "If this grain program moves, something else will have to wait awhile," FitzGerald said.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People again went on record in favor of the program Feb. 21. But the Pakistan League of America, in a statement read by Rep. Thomas E. Morgan (D Pa.), charged India could buy grain from Pakistan if she wished. Thorp said, however, that even if Pakistan's grain were bought by India, the latter country would still have a grain deficit.

J. J. Singh, president of the India League of America, testified Feb. 22 in support of the program, and pleaded for the fastest possible action. Also endorsing the bill was a spokesman from the American Emergency Food Committee for India.

Committee

The House Foreign Affairs Committee endorsed the bill Feb. 28. The measure became known as HR 3017, authorizing the use of $50 million already appropriated for the Economic Cooperation Administration to finance the program. An additional $140 million in new cash was authorized to be appropriated later.

The bill authorized the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to advance another $20 million to pay for reconditioning moth-balled ships to transport the grain to India. No more than half of all the funds authorized in the bill were to be spent during the next year. The first million tons of grain was to be expedited. Shipment of the second million tons was to be studied further.

The Committee approved the bill after defeating a Feb. 27 proposal by John M. Vorys (R Ohio) to put the relief program on a straight loan basis. As ultimately approved, the aid bill put the program on a gift basis to "serve the cause of world peace and human brotherhood."

On March 5, the bill was formally reported from the Foreign Affairs unit. It was sent to the House Rules Committee for clearance to the House floor for action. But the Rules group failed to act promptly on the bill, and became the indirect target March 29 of a letter from six American delegates to the anti-Communist Indian Congress for Cultural Freedom meeting at Bombay.

The delegates wrote Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Tex.) that "while the U.S. Congress delays legislation, famine threatens millions. . . Prompt dispatch of wheat is imperative for America's good name in Asia."

The delegates were Norman Thomas, Socialist leader; H. J. Muller, educator; W. H. Auden, poet; Max Yergan, educator; James Burnham, author; and Harry Goldberg.

Truman Urges Speed

President Truman also called for action at his March 29 press conference. In a written statement, he said that each day of delay after April 1 in starting shipments would "leave a serious gap in India's food supply later this summer and cause great suffering."

When the bill remained in the Rules Committee, President Truman renewed his request for action. In a statement March 29, he said India's need for the grain was "urgent." He said the U.S. could "spare the grain" in order to "prevent sufferings and starvation." The first million tons of grain should go as a grant, "to save human lives and secondly to strengthen freedom and democracy in an important area of Asia."

"Prompt action is vital," Mr. Truman said. "The monsoon season occurs in India during the summer. Each day's delay after April 1 in starting (grain) shipments will leave a serious gap in India's food supply . . . and cause great suffering."

The State Department added its voice April 3 for prompt action, amid reports from New Delhi that India would send an official to Peiping to dicker with Red China for the sorely needed grain.

The Rules Committee finally acted April 25. It approved a "clean" bill — HR 3791 — authorizing the aid program on a straight loan basis. Rules Committee members said the vote by which they upset the original plan of extending the aid on a grant basis was "close".

Floor Action

On May 2, the House was scheduled to deal with HR 3791. But the lower chamber was preoccupied with a number of urgent appropriations bills, and deferred action on the India aid measure despite protests that there had already been too much delay.

Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) declared April 30 that the delay was "playing right into the hands of Soviet aggressive imperialism". He urged private groups to send grain to India.

The CIO, in letters to Congressmen May 1, also called for early action, but called the House bill "half-hearted humanitarianism" and said the grain should be an outright gift.

In New Delhi, India, Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru declared the same day that India would not accept food from any country if it had "any political strings attached to it."

Rep. James P. Richards (D S. C.) said this comment was "a factor" in the postponement.

Cox Presents Resolution

The House formally opened action on the bill May 22 when E. E. Cox (D Ga.) presented a resolution authorizing formal debate on the measure, which Cox criticized. Its passage "would make us victims of a well-planned and well-considered campaign to blackmail Congress into doing something it should not do," he said, and questioned whether two million tons of grains actually were needed or would avert starvation.

"By passing this bill, you will be giving a vote of confidence in Dean Acheson," Cox declared.

Speaker Rayburn said that if the House did not pass the bill, "I doubt if we'll have any friends in India in the next generation". He called the stubborn resistance to the bill "one of the most amazing things I have ever witnessed in my many years in Congress."

By a standing vote of 211-13, the House then approved the resolution making six hours of debate on the bill in order. During the first of these, Reps. Abraham A. Ribicoff (D Conn.), Christian A. Herter (R Mass.), and A. S. J. Carnahan (D Mo) renewed arguments in favor of the bill, as did other members of the Foreign Affairs Committee.

As debate continued May 23, Rep. Lawrence H. Smith (R Wis.) called the legislation more political than economic, and Leo E. Allen (R Ill.) voiced some of his objections to it. Charles A. Halleck (R Ind.) said he thought most GOP Members would support the program if critically needed raw materials from India were obtained in return for the grain.

Cox Amendment Defeated

But when the House started voting on amendments to the bill May 24, an amendment to predicate the aid on India's willingness to furnish raw materials was defeated by a 103-135 standing vote. Offered by Cox, the amendment would also have required repayment of the loan in six years.

Halleck then offered a similar, but modified, amendment. It was accepted by a voice vote. The proposal "directed" the Economic Co-operation Administration, which was to handle the loan, to try to acquire the materials in India.

An attempt to cut the loan to $100 million was defeated by a 73-181 standing vote. Voice votes approved other moves to have the ECA pay for transportation of private grain shipments to India and to require that half of the official U. S. grain go in American vessels.

By a roll-call vote of 293-94, the House passed HR 3791. On the final tally, 171 Democrats, 121 Republicans and the one independent voted in favor of the Administration - backed program. Against it were 36 Democrats and 58 Republicans.

SENATE

Hearings

Secretary of State Dean Acheson was lead-off witness as the Senate Foreign Relations Committee opened hearings April 16 on its companion bill (S 872) to send 2 million tons of food grains to famine-threatened India.

Acheson emphasized the "urgency of India's need" and the importance of fast action. The following day, officials of the State and Agriculture Departments and the Maritime Administration discussed the bill.

Protests were heard April 18. D. S. Fry, Chicago, of the Textile Bag Manufacturers, said Indian government policies made it difficult for the U.S. bag industry to get burlap or jute.

Chairman Tom Connally (D Tex.) told reporters later that his group was studying chiefly whether to aid India on a pure grant basis, or on a grant-loan one.

The Senate Committee approved the bill April 20. But the Senators put the $190 million program on a half-loan, half-grant basis. They favored sending $95 million worth of grain to India at once, purchasing it with unused funds of the Economic Cooperation Administration. The Indian government would pay transportation charges.

The Senate bill also authorized the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to advance $20 million to the government to recondition some 122 federally owned but moth-balled merchant ships to help carry the grain.

Sen. Guy M. Gillette (D Iowa) entered an urgent plea to the Senate on April 26 to act "as soon as possible" on the legislation. He noted that the bill had been reported from Connally's group "without a dissenting vote."

Floor Action

When S 872 was taken up May 14, Gillette and H. Alexander Smith (R N.J.) again asked for prompt passage of the bill as it then stood. But as debate continued May 15, the forces seeking the total-loan formula showed their strength.

Opponents of the gift idea noted that India had not asked for the grain on a free basis, but had offered to barter for it. Said Everett M. Dirksen (R Ill.): "It's high time we get a little something out of this." Critics of the loan basis said humanitarian reaction should eclipse considerable Congressional ire at India's role in recent world events. "It would be wrong to punish the people for policies of their government," Smith (N.J.) said.

Indian Premier Nehru's public thanks to Russia for 50,000 tons of Soviet grain figured in the debate. Senators noted their bill would send 40 times as much grain, and hoped Nehru would give equal publicity to that fact.

Loan Basis Proposal

A major development in action on the bill came when Sens. Homer Ferguson (R Mich.), Styles Bridges (R N.H.) and Pat McCarran (D Nev.) offered an amendment to put the program on a straight loan basis. Their amendment also charged the Economic Cooperation Administration with lending the money to India, from funds previously appropriated for the ECA. Only funds to buy the first million tons of grain could be lent India. Congress would have to pass on the second installment.

The Senate approved the Ferguson-Bridges-McCarran amendment by a roll-call vote of 52-32. (See page 259.) Wayne Morse (R Ore.) and Milton R. Young (R N.D.) cast the only GOP ballots against it.

The amendment also stipulated that India could repay partially by sending this country needed strategic materials. Another amendment required India to send manganese and monazite as part of any materials used as a means of repayment.

Other amendments accepted dealt with safeguarding U.S. grain stocks for domestic use, shipping private relief packages at federal expense, and helping finance technical assistance projects for India.

Final passage of S 872 was by voice vote.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Homer Ferguson (R Mich.), Styles Bridges (R N.H.) and Pat McCarran (D Nev.) — Put program on straight loan basis, permitting the ECA to extend the money permitting partial repayment in strategic materials. Roll-call vote, 52-32.

Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.) and Ferguson — Require the Secretary of Agriculture to certify that grain shipments to India "will not impair the... vital needs of the U.S." Unanimous consent.

Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) — Allow the ECA to pay shipping costs of food and relief packages collected for India by private U.S. agencies. Unanimous consent.

Karl E. Mundt (R S.D.) — Use interest paid by India on the loan to help finance U.S. educational activities in India, finance Indian students in the U.S., and finance U.S. technical missions and equipment which may be made available to India. Unanimous consent.

Bridges — Provide that India include manganese and monazite among any strategic materials sent in partial repayment of the loan. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Bridges — Require India to include "substantial quantities" of monazite alone in strategic materials sent as partial repayment. Voice.

George W. Malone (R Nev.) — Require that India repay the loan in local currency, for later use by the U.S. for purchases in India. Voice.

CONFERENCE

The differing House and Senate versions of the India-aid bill were sent to a joint conference committee, which reached agreement on a compromise measure June 5. This bill closely resembled the original House version. The key feature in the Senate's original bill — requiring India to repay parts of the loan in specified raw materials — was not retained in the final version.

The comparable House feature — which was retained — lacked this mandatory flavor.

It simply directed the Economic Cooperation Administration, which will handle the loan, to try to obtain what strategic materials it can in connection with repayment agreements.

The Senate feature requiring the ECA to pay transportation costs of private grain shipments to India was omitted from the conference report.

Conferees also cut to $5 million the $23 million the Senate had voted to set aside from India's interest payments on the loan for an India-U.S. technical assistance program.

Adoption of Report

The House adopted the conference report June 6, by a roll-call vote of 256-82. The Senate approved it June 11 by a voice vote. Earlier, Sen. Guy M. Gillette (D Iowa), in charge of the compromise bill on the floor, explained the conferees believed the more general language was better in view of the fact that India had prohibited the export of monazite sands and that it already was sending about 75 per cent of its exports of manganese to the United States.

Bridges, however, expressed "extreme" disappointment that mention of the two materials had been eliminated from the bill. He complained that terms of the measure put the United States in support of India in a trade war with Pakistan. In addition to Bridges, critics of the compromise included Sens. Everett M. Dirksen (R Ill.), William Langer (R N.D.), Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.), and Herman Welker (R Idaho).

Senate approval cleared the legislation to the White House, where President Truman signed it into Public Law 48 on June 15. At a brief ceremony attended by Congressmen, Secretary of State Dean Acheson and Indian Ambassadress Madame Pandit, the President called the new law an expression of "the spontaneous, heartfelt desire of the American people to help the Indian people in their hour of need." He praised the "special and easy credit terms" on which the grain program was to operate.

GROUP STANDS

In addition to organizations who sent spokesmen to Washington to testify in support of the India aid program when Congress held hearings on it, numbers of groups sent communications to the various legislators. Chairman Adolph Sabath (D Ill.) of the House Rules Committee inserted several of these into the Congressional Record when the House was debating the program May 22.

Among organizations declaring themselves in favor of the India aid project were the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, the Synagogue Council of America, the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, the Council for Social Action of the Congregational Christian Churches, the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U.S., the American Federation of Labor, and the National Maritime Union, CIO.

Immigration Curbs Eased

HR 2339 — P.L. 14

Summary — The Congress in 1951 eased Department of Justice regulations which were automatically barring aliens from immigration if they had ever been members of totalitarian groups. The regulations were issued by the Attorney General in interpreting the Internal Security (McCarran) Act of 1950. (See CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, page 390.)

Sen. Pat McCarran (D Nev.), who steered the liberalizing bill through the Senate, said the regulations "misinterpreted" the law, barring persons whose exclusion was not intended.

In this category, McCarran explained, were persons who became "nominal" members of Nazi, Fascist, Communist or related groups because they were required to by law, or had to be to get food, work and shelter.

The legislation which Congress approved did not, however, alter or amend the McCarran law itself. It simply spelled out Congress' own interpretation of the immigration sections of it, and sought a conforming interpretation from the Justice Department.

The House passed HR 2339 on Feb. 19 by voice vote. Its version waived bans against nominal members of Nazi and Fascist organizations only. The Senate passed a different version on March 14, making the waiver applicable to nominal members of Communist organizations as well. The House accepted the Senate's version on March 20, and thus the bill did not need to go to a joint conference committee. It was cleared instead to the White House, where President Truman signed it into law March 28.

Provisions — As enacted into law, HR 2339 amended the "Code of Federal Regulations, relating to control pursuant to the Subversive Activities Control Act of 1950, of persons entering the United States."

The first section of HR 2339 authorized the Attorney General to relax rules requiring mandatory exclusion of aliens whose "membership or affiliation" in Nazi, Fascist, Communist or other totalitarian groups in the past was:

"Solely (a) when under 16 years of age, (b) by operation of law, or (c) for purposes of obtaining employment, food rations, or other essentials of living, and where necessary for such purposes."

The second section of the bill gave the Attorney General discretionary power to adjust the status of non-Communist aliens already in the country to that of permanent residents. If an alien resident had been an involuntary Communist, he would have to apply for permanent residence status under section one of HR 2339; the Attorney General could not grant him that permanent status under section two.

HOUSE

The House Judiciary Committee favorably reported on Feb. 12 a bill (HR 2339) designed to ease interpretations the Justice Department had been making of those parts of the McCarran law which banned immigration to this country of aliens who had ever belonged to totalitarian groups abroad.

XUM

As reported, HR 2339 intended to permit the entry into the United States of persons who were involuntarily members of Nazi, Fascist or other non-Communist organizations abroad. Designed to admit many who had been barred from coming to this country since the Internal Security (McCarran) Act became law, the House version did not remove the bars against admission of involuntary Communists. Involuntary membership in other proscribed groups — which would not bar entry, the McCarran Act notwithstanding — was defined as membership obtained when an individual was under 16 years of age, when membership was required by local law, or membersip was obtained for the purpose of receiving employment, food rations or other essentials.

The House passed the bill by voice vote Feb. 19.

SENATE

The Senate Judiciary Committee reported a companion bill (S 728) on Feb. 19. But when the measure was taken up on March 14, pressures were strong to amend it so that the waiver permitting nominal Nazis and Fascists to immigrate would also apply to nominal, involuntary Communists.

Chairman Pat McCarran (D Nev.) of the Judiciary group accepted a Homer Ferguson (R Mich.) amendment to do this. The altered language of S 728 was then substituted, with one exception, for the text of the House-passed HR 2339. The exception was S 728's original stipulation that 14 be the cut-off age in determining if a youth had been a nominal or active member of a totalitarian group. The 16-year cut-off initially set by the House was retained.

Then the Senate passed HR 2339 by voice vote.

The House agreed to the Senate version on March 20, by voice vote. Accordingly, a conference committee was unnecessary, and the bill was sent on to the White House. President Truman signed the measure into Public Law 14 on March 28.

GROUP STANDS

During the Senate's consideration March 14 of S 728 and HR 2339, Sen. Herbert Lehman (D N. Y.) inserted in the Congressional Record a number of communications from interested organizations. Most of them supported the basic principle of the pending bills, but asked also for the change — ultimately made in them — which would permit involuntary Communists to immigrate as well as involuntary, nominal Nazis and Fascists.

Groups taking this position included the: National Catholic Welfare Conference, National Council of Churches of Christ in the United States of America, National Lutheran Council, United Service for New Americans, the CIO, and the Liberal Party of New York State.

China Branded As Aggressor

H Res 77, S Res 35

The new 82nd Congress moved rapidly to register its disapproval of the participation in the Korean War of thousands and thousands of Chinese Communists who crossed into Korea to battle against United Nations troops. The House and Senate both called formally on the UN to brand Red China as an aggressor.

The House started the ball rolling Jan. 19 when it approved on voice vote H Res 77, stating that "it is the sense of the House of Representatives that the United Nations should immediately act and declare the Chinese Communist authorities an aggressor in Korea."

The bill was introduced by Majority Leader John W. McCormack (D Mass.) Jan. 19. He asked for immediate consideration of the measure "because of the exigency of the moment." Minority Leader Joseph W. Martin Jr. (R Mass.) also backed the bill. They said Red China obviously was an aggressor and should be so labeled.

It was opposed by John E. Rankin (D Miss.), who said he was not willing "to turn over to the so-called United Nations the right to declare war for the United States or to tell us where to go and fight whose battles."

John T. Wood (R Idaho) moved that the bill be sent to the Foreign Affairs Committee. The motion was rejected on a standing vote 30-161. The bill was then approved on voice vote.

Senate Acts

Later the same day, Sen. John L. McClellan (D Ark.) called up in the upper chamber a similar resolution (S Res 35) he had previously introduced. It declared it was the "sense of the Senate" that the UN should label China an aggressor for its intervention.

McClellan told the Senate there was no doubt that Chinese Communists were aggressors in Korea and that there was little need for a prolonged discussion on the floor. The first resolution was then agreed to on voice vote.

S Res 36

Also on Jan. 19, McClellan brought up a second resolution he had introduced, which recorded the sense of the Senate that Red China should not be admitted to membership in the UN.

Brien McMahon (D Conn.) suggested the resolution should be sent to the Foreign Relations Committee, although he said he favored it. McMahon said that if Mao and Stalin had a falling out, then the United States might want to change its policy toward Mao. The resolution as it stood, he said, might block such a change.

Spessard L. Holland, (D Fla.) said it would be "complete" and "absurd" appeasement to allow Red China UN membership after her obvious aggression in Korea. Holland said any reservation such as that suggested by McMahon would leave the American UN delegation in doubt as to how far the Senate would go in backing its stand against seating Red China.

The resolution was approved on roll-call vote 91-0 (vote p. 258).

S Res 37

McClellan then raised a third resolution intended to express the sense of the Senate that the UN should inflict economic sanctions on Communist China. Calling for "the complete interruption of economic relations" and communication between UN countries and Peiping, the resolution was referred to the Foreign Relations Committee on motion of Majority Leader Ernest W. McFarland (D Ariz.). McFarland said the resolution "contains matters which should have the careful consideration of a committee before action is taken."

The motion to send the bill to committee was approved on voice vote.

Displaced Persons

HR 3576—P.L. 60

Summary — Congress extended by six months the time for processing applications for admission to the United States under the Displaced Persons Act of 1948. The Act was scheduled to expire June 30, 1951.

The extension was requested after a conference between officials of the Defense, State and Justice Departments and the Displaced Persons Commission about the delay in processing applications.

The House passed HR 3576 May 8. The Senate amended it to extend the time limit for processing eligible displaced orphans as well and passed it June 21. The House agreed to the Senate's amended version on June 22, and the President approved the bill June 28. It became Public Law 60.

Provisions — As passed, HR 3576 provided:

A six months' extension to Dec. 31, 1951, of the time limit for issuing entrance visas to eligible displaced persons whose applications were being processed before July 31, 1951.

A one-year extension to June 30, 1952, of the time limit for issue of entrance visas for certain displaced orphans.

Waiver of head tax and visa fee for these orphans. The Act had already allowed this waiver for other displaced persons.

Background—The Displaced Persons Act of 1948 permitted entry over a two-year period of 205,000 eligible displaced persons and allowed 15,000 aliens who had entered prior to April, 1948, to remain. The DPs must have entered the German or Austrian occupation zones before Dec. 22, 1945; at least 40 per cent must have come from areas annexed by foreign powers; at least 30 per cent were required to be trained farmers who planned to work on U. S. farms; and priority was given household, construction, garment and clothing workers, to blood relatives of U. S. citizens or lawfully admitted aliens, and to refugees who fought in World War II against enemies of the U. S.

President Truman criticized the bill as a pattern of discrimination and intolerance wholly inconsistent with the American sense of justice. He said it discriminated "against persons of the Jewish faith" and "excludes many Catholics." (CQ Almanac, Vol. IV, 1948, p. 193).

Bipartisan efforts to liberalize the law began almost as soon as it was passed. These efforts amounted to little in the 80th Congress, but when the 81st Congress convened in Jan. 1949, some 10 bills were quickly introduced to ease the Act's provisions. HR 4567, an amended version of the Administration-sponsored bill, was passed by the House June 2, 1949, without serious opposition. But in the Senate Pat McCarran (D Nev.) was successful in delaying consideration of the bill until the following January.

It was June 16, 1950, before the liberalizing bill, HR 4567, finally became Public Law 555. The new act permitted admission into the U. S. before June 30, 1951, of a new grand total of 415,744 DPs, war orphans and persons of German ethnic origin. It also eliminated the 1948 provisions requiring 40 per cent of the DPs to be natives of Baltic states and 30 per cent to be farmers, and established Jan. 1, 1949, instead of Dec. 22, 1945, as the cut-off date by which persons must have reached DP camps in the occupied zones to qualify for admission. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, 1949, p. 371; and Vol. VI, 1950, p. 225).

HOUSE

HR 3576 was introduced April 6 by Rep. Francis E. Walter (D Pa.) after a conference between officials of the Displaced Persons Commission, and the Defense, State and Justice Departments. The bill merely extended the operational period for parts of the DP act of 1948. It did not increase the 341,000 limit or change the classes eligible for admission into the U. S., nor did it extend the term of office of the Displaced Persons Commission.

Committee

The Judiciary Committee made slight amendments to the bill and reported it favorably June 11. The Committee report contained the April 5 testimony of John W. Gibson, Chairman of the Displaced Persons Commission, explaining that the Internal Security Act held up the completion of 8,000 visas, thus also tying up resettlement camps, and so retarding other thousands of cases.

He explained, too, that the expansion of the American and British Armies had required them to take over many displaced - person installations, and that this had substantially delayed the DP program. He blamed war in Korea for shipping problems and for "war jitters" which impaired the efficiency and reduced the staff of the Commission in Europe. In addition, he said, the 1950 amendment to the DP law had necessitated new regulations, and their implementation "took time to initiate and more time to perfect."

Gibson said the Commission thought it could finish the task in an additional six months, and the Judiciary Committee recommended the extension to "permit a complete consummation of the displaced persons program as contemplated by the Congress."

Floor Action

The House first considered the measure on May 7, accepting by voice vote an amendment by Walter setting July 31, 1951, as the deadline for applications to be processed under the extension period. Rep. John E. Rankin (D Miss.) insisted upon a roll - call vote on the measure, and as the House was operating under agreement to have no roll calls before May 9, this delayed House action two days. On May 9, however, the House passed HR 3576 by a 312-63 vote.(See Page 260.)

SENATE

The Senate amended HR 3576 to change the terminal date for issue of visas to displaced orphans to June 30, 1952, the same as the date for other orphans under the DP law. The bill was then passed by a unanimous voice vote June 21.

Next day the House accepted the Senate amendment and sent the bill to the White House, where it was approved June 28 and became Public Law 60.

Irish Unification

H Res 82

Summary — By a roll-call vote of 139-206, the House Sept. 27, 1951, refused to consider a resolution (H Res 82) calling for a plebiscite on the unification of Ireland.

The vote actually was on a resolution (H Res 430) for the House to consider H Res 82. Opponents contended that if the chamber approved H Res 82 it would be interfering in the internal affairs of another nation.

XUM

Background — H. Res. 82 was introduced by John E. Fogarty (D R.I.) on Jan. 19, 1951. He had introduced similar resolutions in 1949 and 1950, and the Foreign Affairs Committee held a hearing in April, 1950. In 1950, a Fogarty amendment to the ECA bill banning aid to Britain so long as she maintained the partition of Ireland, was first agreed to and then rejected by the House. (CQ Almanac, Vol VI, pp. 212 and 213.)

HOUSE

Committee

The Foreign Affairs committee considered the resolution in open hearings Feb. 7, 1951, and in the course of its hearings on the Mutual Security Act of 1951. On Aug. 14 the Committee further considered the resolution in executive session, and voted 11-6 to report it favorably with a clarifying amendment.

The House report in recommending passage of the resolution, said in part: "In the 65th Congress, in 1919, the House passed a resolution declaring that the people of Ireland should have the right to determine the form of government under which they desire to live. House Resolution 82 is in line with that policy."

The Rules Committee on Sept 24 reported out H Res 430 recommending consideration of H Res 82.

Floor Action

The House on Sept 27 debated the question of considering the Irish unification resolution

There apparently was agreement that Ireland should be unified and most of the debate was whether the resolution would mean interference in the internal affairs of another nation.

Charles P. Nelson (R Maine) said that "if we pass this resolution we may properly and justly expect the English House of Commons to pass a similar resolution stating that, in the interest of continental defense, the United States should immediately grant statehood to Alaska and Hawaii. And such a resolution on the part of the English House of Commons would have exactly the same effect on us that this will on them."

James P. Richards (D S.C.) chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, who voted against the resolution in Committee, said "This resolution is an interference in the internal affair of Great Britain . . ."

Leo E. Allen (R Ill.) argued, "We cannot justify our position in meddling . . . while at the same time insisting on the principles of the Monroe Doctrine," and Harris Ellsworth (R Ore.) declared "it is a mistake for us to take legislative action which has no force or effect . . ."

On the other side, Adolph J. Sabath (D Ill.) said, ". . . I cannot see why some of these gentlemen fear any damage from this resolution. . . In 1919 I had the privilege of writing a similar resolution, and it was passed without objection . . . I know that not a word of criticism resulted . . ."

John W. McCormack (D Mass.) said, "This very body and those who spoke against this resolution voted not so long ago to pass a resolution . . . that we believe in a 'free and democratic Jewish nation in Palestine' . . . Yet they take the floor and deny it in this particular case."

Finally, in an unusual step, the House rejected a recommendation of the Rules Committee (the only other such rejection in 1951 was on consideration of a defense housing proposal, (see page 184), and defeated H Res 430 (to consider H. Res. 82) by a roll-call vote of 139-206.

Friendship Resolution

S Con Res 11

Twenty-one Senators introduced a resolution (S Con Res 11) on Feb. 8 declaring the friendship of Americans for all peoples of the world, including those of the Soviet Union. Drafted by Sen. Brien McMahon (D. Conn.), the measure was chiefly intended to convey to the Russian people—"without intervention and distortion of the Politburo if possible"—the basic friendship of the American people and their government toward the Russian people. It requested the President to ask the Soviet government to tell the Russian people that Americans and their Congress desire peace and friendship with Russia and "will welcome all honorable efforts to compose the differences between the two governments."

The resolution said the American people would welcome "all honorable efforts" to mediate differences between the two countries; would like to share with the Russian people "all that is good" in atomic energy; and work with them "in advancing the ideal of human brotherhood."

Co-sponsors of the bill were William Benton (D Conn.), Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.), Ralph E. Flanders (R Vt.), J. William Fulbright (D Ark.), Guy M. Gillette (D Iowa), Theodore Francis Green (D R.I.), Robert C. Hendrickson (R N.J.), Lister Hill (D Ala.), Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.), Lester C. Hunt (D Wyo.), Irving Ives (R N.Y.), Herbert H. Lehman (D N.Y.), James E. Murray (D Mont.), Matthew M. Neely (D W.Va.), Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.), Margaret Chase Smith (R Maine), Alexander Wiley (R Wis.), H. Alexander Smith (R N.J.), Edward J. Thye (R Minn.), and Charles W. Tobey (R N.H.)

Secretary of State Dean Acheson, in a letter to Sen. Tom Connally (D Tex.) on March 20, endorsed the resolution. A similar letter went to Rep. John Kee (D W.Va.), supporting like resolutions introduced by Reps. A. A. Ribicoff (D Conn.), Thurmond Chatham (D N.C.), and Charles R. Howell (D N.J.)

Connally's Foreign Relations Committee endorsed the resolution April 19, and the Senate passed it by unanimous voice vote May 4.

Rep. Kee's Foreign Affairs Committee reported out the similar Ribicoff-Chatham-Howell proposal (H Con Res 57) on May 15. This House version carried somewhat different language than the Senate's resolution.

It directed the President to request the Russian government to "acquaint the peoples of the Soviet Union" with the "peaceful purposes of the American people and the American government". It stated that the U. S. had no desire for war with the Soviet Government and that the cause of peace could be greatly advanced if Russia would remove the barriers preventing the Russian people from learning the truth about America.

On June 4, with only 43 of its Members on the floor, the House passed its resolution by a standing vote of 36 to 7. Afterwards, the House passed the Senate resolution (S Con Res 11) after substituting for the latter's text the terms of its own measure.

The two resolutions were then meshed, and re-passed by Congress under the Senate bill's number. The Senate approved the final version June 18, and the House approved it June 26 by a 351-6 roll-call vote. (See p. 260.) The resolution, being a concurrent one expressing the opinion of Congress, did not require the President's signature.

Japanese Treaty

Representatives of 48 nations Sept. 8, 1951, signed a peace treaty with Japan during a conference in San Francisco. The United States' formal ratification of the treaty did not occur during 1951. The President delayed sending the treaty to the Senate and most Senators apparently favored waiting until 1952

Senatorial reaction to the Sept. 8 treaty signing was mixed. Some members of both parties praised and some condemned the work of Secretary of State Dean Acheson in presiding at the treaty conference. A split in GOP ranks developed on the Senate floor Sept. 11 when long-time Administration critics William F. Knowland (R Calif.) and H. Alexander Smith (R N.J.) applauded Acheson's handling of the treaty conference. Their comments touched off charges by George W. Malone (R Nev.) that Acheson's policies lost Asia to communism.

Japan itself completed signing of the pact Nov. 19, 1951.

Export-Import Bank

The lending and borrowing authority of the Export-Import Bank each were increased by $1 billion and the Bank's life extended from June 30, 1953, to June 30, 1958, by legislation (S 2006) passed in September, 1951.

President Truman requested the additional $1 billion in his budget message to Congress Jan. 15. He said the primary purpose was to allow the Bank to assist the economic progress of friendly nations and the development of strategic materials.

The Export-Import Bank was established by Congress in 1934 to aid in "the financing and facilitating of exports and imports" and the exchange of commodities between the U. S. and foreign countries. It was made a permanent independent agency in 1945. (CQ Almanac, Vol. 1, 1945, p. 463; Vol. V, 1949, p. 392).

Herbert E. Gaston, Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Bank, testified before the Senate Banking and Currency Committee that the Bank expected the Middle East situation to "develop into a demand for loans," and that it expected to be called on for $500 million in loans to develop strategic materials abroad. Department Secretaries John W. Snyder, Treasury; Charles Sawyer, Commerce, Dean Acheson, State; and Charles F. Brannan, Agriculture; Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board W. McChesney Martin, Jr., and Economic Cooperation Administrator William Foster all sent the Committee letters supporting the bill.

The Senate Banking and Currency Committee reported the bill without amendment Aug. 29, and it was passed by a voice vote of the Senate Sept. 7. Maybank said the increase would "place the bank in position to make full use of opportunities in connection with its efforts to assist the economic progress of friendly nations."

The House Banking and Currency Committee unanimously approved the bill Sept. 18 and reported it Sept. 19. On the House floor Sept. 25 opponents said that the extra lending power would increase inflation and asserted that the Bank was socialistic. The bill's backers argued that the land authority was needed to help finance foreign production of materials needed by the United States. Committee Chairman Brent Spence (D-Ky.) said the Bank did not compete with private banking and that it had already made a net profit of $254 million.

The bill was passed by the House Sept. 25 on a roll-call vote of 259-69. (See page 262)

President Truman signed S2006 on Oct. 3, and it became Public Law 158.

Oatis Resolution

H Con Res 140

Congress on Aug. 23, 1951, declared by concurrent resolution (H Con Res 140) its "profound indignation" at the imprisonment of William N. Oatis, American Associated Press correspondent in Prague, Czechoslovakia.

The resolution also asked federal agencies to take every action possible to bring about his release; requested that the resolution be made known to the United Nations and Czechoslovakian officials, and called for termination of United States commercial relations with Czechoslovakia until Oatis were freed.

Oatis, a U.S. citizen, went to Prague as Associated Press Bureau chief in June, 1950. He was arrested by the Czech police April 23, 1951. On May 16, Czech officials informed the U.S. Embassy that Oatis had confessed to "espionage." On July 4, he was handed a 10-year prison sentence.

The State Department described the trial as a travesty. It said the only espionage Oatis was guilty of was his attempt to do his job as a news reporter. The Department tried to obtain access to Oatis but without success.

On July 17 and 18, eight resolutions were introduced in the House and Senate urging State Department action to obtain release of Oatis. The House Foreign Affairs Committee, taking the lower chamber proposals under study, aproved H Con Res 140 and reported it Aug. 2.

When the House took up the resolution Aug. 14, it agreed by voice vote to a modified amendment calling for the severance of commercial relations to Czechoslovakia. It then passed the resolution, first by standing vote, 231-0, then by a 363-1 roll call. The lone dissenter was Rep. John T. Wood (R Idaho). (For voting, see page 262.).

AMENDMENT ACCEPTED

O. K. Armstrong (R Mo.) — Call for termination of commercial relations with Czechoslovakia, and, if Oatis were not freed in 90 days, of diplomatic relations. Armstrong modified this by removing the part about diplomatic relations. Voice vote.

The resolution was reported Aug. 21 by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. The Senate approved it unanimously Aug. 23 on a 81-0 roll call. (Voting page 259)

The measure did not require the President's signature.

Europe Visit

S Con Res 36

The Senate Oct. 19 by voice vote gave final Congressional approval to a resolution (S Con Res 36) which authorized seven members of each chamber to attend the Consultative Assembly of the Council of Europe. The assembly met in Strasbourg, France, in November, to discuss improvements in parliamentary government.

The Senate originally passed the resolution Oct. 11, but took it back to approve a version amended Oct. 18 by the House. The House passed the resolution on a 239-74 roll-call vote after accepting by voice vote an amendment by Rep. Howard W. Smith (D Va.) to delete a phrase declaring it U. S. policy to encourage European unification. (For voting, see page 262.)

MacArthur Recall—Far East Policy

Summary — President Truman touched off an almost unprecedented furor in Congress and over the nation April 11, 1951, when he recalled General of the Army Douglas A. MacArthur as United Nations military commander in the Far East.

While not wholly unanticipated, the President's dramatic early morning (1 a. m.) announcement that he was firing MacArthur because the General was "unable to give his wholehearted support to policies of the United States government and the United Nations in matters pertaining to his official duties" had explosive impact.

The recall climaxed a series of rifts between MacArthur and Truman over whose voice enunciated U. S. policy — the General's or the President's?

The famed five-star general himself appeared before a joint session of Congress April 19 to reiterate and defend his controversial views as to what U. S. policy should be in the Far East. (Generally they were: Economic and Naval blockades of Red China, permission to harass "sanctuaries" in Red territory, and permission to use Chinese Nationalist troops garrisoned on Formosa.)

An aroused nation heard the distinguished officer present his case with eloquence and then end a brilliant military career with an emotion-packed farewell: "Old soldiers never die, they just fade away."

The recall and subsequent related events turned the nation into a huge debating society. It incited millions of words — many of them heated — on the floor of Congress and in formal committee hearings that dominated Congressional action for two months. The hearings burgeoned into a full-scale review of most phases of the Administration's foreign policy, not only as pertained to hostilities in Korea but to the rest of the world as well.

CONGRESSIONAL REACTION

Congress reacted instantly and intensely to the removal of MacArthur. Several distinct legislative proposals had emerged by the end of the day the startling news broke. All were sponsored by Republicans. Early April 11, GOP Senate and House leaders met in caucus. Amid telephone calls to MacArthur's headquarters in Tokyo and caucus talk of impeaching President Truman, a Republican plan was drawn up.

It took the form of a resolution, terming the General's firing "a situation fraught with danger . . . a blow to the national unity . . ." and urging that the General should be invited to place his "unsurpassed knowledge of political and military conditions in Korea and Asia generally" before a joint meeting of Congress.

MacArthur's headquarters advised that the General would be "delighted and honored" to accept such an invitation.

Attending the caucus in House Minority Leader Joseph W. Martin Jr.'s (R Mass.) office were GOP Sens. Robert A. Taft (Ohio), Styles Bridges (N. H.) William F. Knowland (Calif.), Alexander Wiley (Wis.), Kenneth Wherry (Neb.), and H. Alexander Smith (N.J.), and members of the House GOP Policy group.

As soon as the Senate convened, Wherry obtained unanimous consent to introduce the caucus' resolution (S Con. Res. 24). He then attempted to seek action on it the same day. This would have saved the resolution from a time - consuming trip to a Senate committee. But Majority Leader Ernest W. McFarland (D Ariz.) successfully objected to this procedure.

Same in House

Minority Leader Martin had similar luck in the House. As soon as the lower chamber met, Martin lost an appeal for a two-hour recess so that the full GOP membership could caucus on the situation. Martin introduced H Con Res 91, identical to Wherry's resolution. Martin's was referred to the Rules group.

The second distinct legislative proposal set before the Senate on April 11 was Richard M. Nixon's (R Calif.) resolution (S Res 126) to express the "sense of the Senate that . . . The President should reconsider his action and should restore General MacArthur" to the Far Eastern command. Nixon's resolution was referred to the Senate Armed Services Committee.

By midafternoon, the entire Republican membership of this Commitee put forward a different plan whereby MacArthur could speak to Congress.

As the initial shock of the President's announcement wore off Members of Congress and private citizens alike scrutinized the statement more closely. What, precisely, had led to this drastic decision?

In his statement, Mr. Truman said his decision to relieve MacArthur reflected "specific responsibilities imposed upon me by the Constitution of the United States and the added responsibility which has been entrusted to me by the United Nations . . ."

"Full and vigorous debate on maters of national policy is a vital element in the Constitutional system of our free democracy . . . Military commanders must be governed by the policies and directives issued to them in the manner provided by our laws and Constitution. In time of crisis, this consideration is particularly compelling.

Debt of Gratitude

"General MacArthur's place in history as one of our greatest commanders is fully established. The nation owes him a debt of gratitude . . . I repeat my regret at the necessity for the action I feel compelled to take in his case."

President Truman underscored his views in a radio address to the American people the evening of April 11. He expanded his earlier statements to say "the cause of world peace is more important than any individual."

He said that by following suggestions that UN forces bomb China or permit Chinese Nationalists to attack the mainland, "we would be running a very grave risk of starting a general war." And, Mr. Truman repeated frequently, the entire basis for U. S. participation in Korea is action to avert a general war.

MacArthur's official duties at the time of his removal were as: Supreme Allied Commander in Japan, United Nations Commander-In-Chief for Korea, U. S. Commander - In-Chief for the Far East, and Commanding General of the U. S. Army in the Far East. He was relieved of all posts. The UN had given the U. S. authority to pick its commander in Korea.

Lieut. Gen. Matthew B. Ridgway, field commander in Korea, was named to succeed MacArthur. Lieut. Gen. James A. Van Fleet, commander of the 2nd Army in the U. S., was named to succeed Ridgway.

MacArthur was authorized, in the orders relieving him, to travel "to such place as you select." This cleared the way for the General to make a prompt return to the U. S.

Senate Debate

Although Congressmen in both chambers rushed into mimeograph with statements on the firing, the main debate on the day's big news centered in the Senate. Robert S. Kerr (D Okla.) established the first beachhead on the floor for supporters of Mr. Truman's action. He based his arguments on the premise that MacArthur's removal greatly lessened chances of an expanded "all - out struggle between our country and Red China."

Saying that the General had previously made "tragic mistakes," Kerr declared "all the mistakes he has ever made rolled into one" would not equal "the awful blunder" such an all-out struggle would represent. Said Kerr: "The General left him (President Truman) no choice" other than relieving the supreme commander of his duties.

Among Senate Democrats supporting President Truman's action were:

Chairman Tom Connally (D Tex.) of the Foreign Relations Committee: "There can be no competing spokesmen for our government." Theodore Francis Green (D R.I.): "A logical answer." John J. Sparkman (D Ala.): "Inevitable." Majority Leader Ernest W. McFarland (D Ariz.): and Kerr The President had "no other choice."

On the House side, Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Tex.): "The military is under the control of the civil in our government." Chairman Carl Vinson (D Ga.) of the Armed Services Committee: "If anything, overdue." Dean of the House Adolph J. Sabath (D Ill.): The President "should have fired MacArthur long ago."

Republicans who supported the dismissal included Sen. Leverett Saltonstall (Mass.): No alternative "but to take some affirmative action against Gen. MacArthur." Sen. James Duff (Pa.): "To permit a continuous dispute . . . is unthinkable." Sen. Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr., (Mass.): "Clearly impossible for him (MacArthur) to continue."

Unfavorable Comments

Unfavorable comments outnumbered those supporting the dismissal, and came chiefly from Republicans. These were typical:

Sens. Taft, Herman Welker (R Idaho), John Stennis (D Miss.) and House Whip Leslie C. Arends (R Ill.) used the word: "Tragic." Sen. Styles Bridges (R N.H.), Rep. George Bender (R Ohio), Sen. Hugh Butler (R Neb.) and Sen. Arthur V. Watkins (R Utah) pronounced themselves: "Shocked."

Sen. Smith (R N.J.) and Rep. Charles A. Halleck (R Ind.) called the President's action a "blunder." Sen. Frank Carlson (R Kan.) called it "a dire blow" and Sen. Margaret Chase Smith (R Maine) viewed it as a definite "setback to our cause and position in Asia."

Sen. William Jenner (R Ind.) likened the dismissal to Pearl Harbor, and Bridges and Knowland cited Munich. Rep. Katharine St. George (R. N.Y.): "A sad day for the mothers of the United States."

MacARTHUR'S SPEECH

Just eight days after being stripped of his command MacArthur made his memorable address to an overflow joint meeting of the House and Senate. The stage was set for the General's appearance when the House unanimously approved April 16 Majority Leader John W. McCormack's (Mass.) motion for a joint meeting to hear him. Next day the Senate unanimously agreed to the meeting.

The 71-year-old deposed commander dramatically repeated his major premises for a victorious policy and laid the basis for future controversy by declaring that these aims also "have been fully shared by practically every military leader including our own Joint Chiefs of Staff."

Most of the applause came from the GOP. Democrats joined in when MacArthur noted foreign policy problems were "global" and "interlocked" and that neither Asia nor Europe could be considered separately.

Greatest Democratic applause came when the General declared: "While I was not consulted prior to the President's decision to intervene" in Korea, the decision "proved a sound one."

But for trying "to bring hostilities to an end with the least possible delay," the General declared, "I have been severely criticized in lay circles, principally abroad . . . Efforts have been made to distort my position . . . Nothing could be further from the truth" than reports "that I was a warmonger."

MacArthur stated flatly that "under no circumstances must Formosa fall under Communist control" because the island is an integral part of America's Pacific defense line. He decried "malicious gossip" which he indicated had "undermined" the reputation of the Chinese Nationalist regime and the contribution it could make to victory.

Hits Appeasers

The General hit at those who would appease Red China. They "are blind", he said, adding he felt it unlikely that Russia would "necessarily" enter the conflict if it were more vigorously pressed. He declared Chinese intervention in the Korean war marked the end of that particular conflict, and the start of an entirely different struggle. He praised Japan and the Philippines as bulwarks against aggression.

MacArthur closed his address by praising the men he had commanded, and referred to himself as an old soldier who would not die, but simply fade away. "I now close my military career . . . an old soldier who tried to do his duty as God gave him the light to see that duty. Goodbye."

The first Congressional reaction to the speech turned on the General's eloquence and also his claim of Joint Chiefs of Staff support for his position. The Pentagon released a statement late April 19 that the JCS had unanimously concurred in President Truman's dismissal of MacArthur. Congressmen promptly called for an inquiry into the seeming contradiction. Concerning the General's speech itself, these were typical comments:

Senate Majority Leader McFarland: "Very dramatic and impressive;" Senate Minority Leader Wherry "Superb." Sen. Pat McCarran (D Nev.): "The most masterful speech that has been delivered in the Capitol in a century." Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy (R Wis.): "It was the greatest speech by the greatest man." Sen. Connally, chairman of the Foreign Relations group: "Quite interesting."

House Comments

These were typical comments in the House: John Taber (R N. Y.): "Absolutely unanswerable." Halleck:

XUM

"Magnificent presentation." Herman P. Eberharter (D Pa.): "He out-Barrymored John Barrymore." Majority Leader McCormack: "A commitment to war in China would be dangerous." Thomas E. Morgan (D Pa.): "It was a war speech."

A dramatic development came April 17 when Sen. Harry P. Cain (R Wash.) introduced a resolution (S J Res 62) calling on Congress to declare war on Communist China and North Korea. As an alternative, Cain presented a second resolution (S J Res 63) calling for "an orderly withdrawal" of U. S. forces from Korea.

The Senator said his resolutions were of a fish-or-cut-bait nature. Cain said he was acting for himself alone. Rep. O. K. Armstrong (R Mo.) had voiced similar sentiments in the House.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

MacArthur returned to Capitol Hill May 3, 4 and 5 in the role of a voluble witness who, behind closed doors, gave Senators a review of his controversial stand. The hearings were conducted by the Senate's Armed Services and Foreign Relations Committees.

A decision to stage closed hearings provoked most of the Congressional action preceding the General's appearance. In an April 30 meeting of the two Committees, Bourke B. Hickenlooper (R Iowa) moved to make the hearings open ones, but was defeated 9-14. Theodore Francis Green (D R.I.) moved to keep the hearings closed. His proposal carried, 17-6.

Before the hearings opened May 3, various documents bearing on the entire MacArthur situation had been made available to the two Senate Committees by the Pentagon. The documents included the so-called Wedemeyer report on China and Korea, and an account of the Truman-MacArthur talks on Wake Island in 1950.

The Committees released May 1 the report on China and Korea which Lt. Gen. Albert C. Wedemeyer submitted Sept. 9, 1947, after a Presidential mission to the Far East. His report cited the "potential military threat" even then of "a Soviet-inspired invasion of South Korea by troops of the North Korean Peoples (Communist) Army." Wedemeyer urged creation of an American - officered South Korean scout force to cope with the threat.

Some Congressmen echoed the comment of Rep. Gordon Canfield (R N.J.) that "the whole Korean war might have been avoided had the Congress been given the facts" contained in Wedemeyer's report at the time it was submitted. Some Senators renewed old complaints about "suppression" of the Wedemeyer report between 1947-1951.

The so-called Wake Island documents were released May 2. They cited what had earlier been reported: That MacArthur assured President Truman that there was "very little" chance of Red China's entry into the Korean fighting.

MacArthur's Testimony

When the hearings began, the deposed commander's statements held some disclosures, but chiefly spelled out details of the points he made in his address to Congress. His testimony was made available in censored transcripts.

These were his major points during a six-hour first-day session:

The "dreadful slaughter" caused by "indecisive fighting" in Korea was "too expensive" as a means to buy time to prepare for a possible World War III. "Thousands of lives" would have been saved in Korea if the use of Nationalist troops on Formosa had even been threatened. If they had actually been used as he had advocated, the picture in Korea would have been "100 per cent different." As it was, restricted fighting there could have "invited" World War III.

An "unhesitatingly" voiced conviction that China could have been forced to sue for peace if his proposals for all-out air attacks had been accepted. If he had been able to use his air powers as he wished when the Chinese Communists first entered the war, "we would have thrown them back."

Rejection of suggestions that such air action or the use of Nationalist troops would necessarily have brought Russia into the war. The Soviet was not in a position to "launch any predatory attack from the Asiatic continent."

The Joint Chiefs of Staff recommended to the Defense Department Jan. 12, 1951, that air operations be authorized over Manchuria, that the Chinese Nationalists be given "logistical" or supply support and that a naval blockade be set against China. It was these recommendations he had in mind when he told Congress earlier that the JCS agreed with his position. Lt. Gen. Matthew B. Ridgway, the General's successor, also was in "general agreement" with these policies.

Manner of Recall

MacArthur did not question "in the slightest" the right of President Truman to recall him, but the manner in which it was done "jeopardized" the national interest because it removed him too abruptly from the middle of vital and immediate operations. The reasons for the dismissal were "invalid . . . I have carried out every directive I have ever received."

The military power of Communist China had been tremendously exaggerated. The country was "militarily weak," and he would be willing for the U. S. "to go it alone."

General Continues

MacArthur continued his testimony May 4 and completed it May 5. He declared he had never advocated the use of U.S., as opposed to Chinese Nationalist troops on the Red Chinese mainland. To do so would be "a master folly," although he told Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) that U.S. technicians probably would accompany any Nationalists committed to the mainland. He said one of the reasons U.S. landings would be foolish was that we simply did not have enough troops.

The General told Lyndon B. Johnson (D Tex.) that the MacArthur policies would not materially affect U.S. manpower commitments to other parts of the world, such as Europe under our North Atlantic Treaty obligations. In fact, this country could follow his policies, step up air offensives in Korea, and defeat Red China with only "a relatively small fraction" of the over-all U.S. military strength.

The witness touched on the question of Universal Military Training legislation. He said a decision on this should be deferred until the country is "through the emergency." He declared the "great mass of (U.S.) troops had had adequate training" before entering Korea.

MacArthur reiterated that his view of air operations over Manchuria was not concerned with reconnaisance alone but "would unquestionably involve bombing." How deep would our bombers go into Manchuria? Wayne Morse (R Ore.) inquired. The depth would depend, the General answered, on how "the enemy deploys his forces."

Brien McMahon (D Conn.) asked if U.S. armament could be reduced "if we are successful in your program in China." MacArthur said he never had hinted at this consequence.

Armament Outlays

"So the arms race would go on, General?" McMahon pressed. The five - star officer replied this country would have to keep up its armament outlays "just as long as the military potentials of the Soviet Union and the stockpile of atomic weapons grows and grows and grows."

In other exchanges at this juncture, MacArthur agreed with Morse that the United Nations should control Korea after the war, holding free elections when possible. He told Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr., (R Mass.) that he did not feel the U.S. air strength was sufficient to safeguard this country. Lodge earlier had called for 150 air groups.

MacArthur said May 4 he did not believe Russians were in Korea. No dead ones had been found, nor any captured. "We have been looking for various Soviet indications of engaging in the combat" but so far the Russians have not made "the slightest increase of their troops in the sector between North Korea and Siberia." The Russians "dropped the issue" after U.S. planes mistakenly bombed their bases, for which the U.S. apologized and offered compensation.

Asked Lodge: "Do you favor regarding the Russians as an enemy?"

Answered the General: "Not at this time, no sir." But he said he was "very definitely convinced" that the Korean war reflected a "general conspiracy" by Russia, China and North Korea, and could not have been launched without Soviet help.

When J. William Fulbright (D Ark.) said he felt Soviet imperialism was the main enemy, MacArthur said "I disagree with you completely" and presented as the chief foe "communism wherever it exists."

Letter to Martin

The deposed commander said his letter to House Minority Leader Joseph W. Martin, Jr., (R Mass.), which figured prominently in events leading up to the ouster was "merely a routine communication such as I turn out by the hundreds". He told Kefauver he hadn't had the "faintest idea" whether Martin would make it public.

MacArthur denied he was slapping at the State Department or making anything other than a "statement of actual facts" when he wrote in that letter: "Here we fight Europe's war with arms while the diplomats fight it with words."

McMahon questioned the propriety and advisability of such letters when a debate was raging over the author's policies. MacArthur responded by saying he would not have the "slightest objection" to one of his own subordinates doing similarly under like circumstances.

The General had strong language for a May 3 statement by President Truman that the Central Intelligence Agency was temporarily excluded from Tokyo HQ. He called a report of the statement "tommyrot", and said the implication was "pure bunkum." He asserted that "every possible assistance has been given by me to the CIA."

He repeated that "I do not challenge . . . in the slightest degree directly or indirectly" the order that dismissed him, but said he felt it represented the "judgement of one individual only." He added, however, that he continued to have a high opinion of the present Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Marshall Appears

Two days after conclusion of MacArthur's testimony another five-star general — George C. Marshall, Secretary of Defense, who retired later in the year — took the witness stand to present the first phase of the Administration's position.

The General officers differed on a score of points. The big ones involved the efficacy of policies in the Korean war, the merits and possible consequences of those advocated by MacArthur, and the propriety of his actions in the entire dispute.

Marshall flatly declared that he doubted "whether the actions recommended by Gen. MacArthur would bring the (Korean) conflict to a victorious end. I am afraid . . . it might result in a great increase in casualties without a decisive finish." He told the Senators the Chinese could not be whipped as simply as MacArthur thought they could be with air operations and the use of Nationalist troops.

Administration policies of attrition for the Chinese were working, and had "succeeded in thwarting the aggressors in Korea" and elsewhere, he said. MacArthur's policies of carrying the war to the enemy's lairs by air and sea would risk "all-out war with the Soviet Union . . . at the expense of losing our allies and wrecking the coalition of free peoples throughout the world."

The policy differences between MacArthur and the Administration reflected "basic differences of judgment" between the ousted commander and his superiors, Marshall said.

The Secretary conceded that Red China would have been bombed "immediately" were it not for the "very real possibility" that Russia would intervene in the fighting in this event. He declared, however, that air action would certainly be used to "retaliate" against enemy operations outside Korea.

'Hot Pursuit'

Marshall revealed that the President, the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and MacArthur all had favored previously a policy of "hot pursuit" — air fighting outside Korea but not on Allied initiative — but had been overruled by United Nations participants in the Korean war.

MacArthur's statements that the JCS made recommendations similar to his own last Jan. 12 were differently illuminated by the witness, who said the JCS proposals were only "tentative" ones based on the "possibility of forced evacuation" from Korea.

The witness admitted that MacArthur had never disobeyed straight military orders, "but in relation to public statements he has," especially when his utterances concerned policy matters. The deposed officer seemed to be "so far out of sympathy with the established policies" laid down by this government that Washington recalled him.

The abruptness of the recall, Marshall said, was caused partially by a "leak" in Washington of the impending ouster, which was thus speeded up by 20 hours.

Marshall especially criticized MacArthur's action March 24 when the latter, offered to "confer in the field" with his Communist opposite number with respect to ending the war. This action aborted negotiations at the diplomatic level, "thus losing whatever chance there may have been at that time to negotiate a settlement of the Korean conflict."

The witness hit at MacArthur's idea of a naval blockade of Red China, saying he had been advised that a blockade would "leak like a sieve" and be extremely touchy because it would involve Russian shipping. Marshall said the whole idea of a blockade was becoming somewhat "academic" because the other UN countries were indicating they would refuse to do business with China.

More Contradictions

When he returned to the hearings May 8, Marshall contradicted additional statements MacArthur had made. Marshall said "considerable" Russian ground and air strength was gathered at Vladivostok and Port Arthur on either flank of the Korean peninsula's head. These concentrations had been receiving "steady" build-ups.

He said too that on purely geographic grounds, Korea was not "absolutely vital" as a strategic area.

The Defense Secretary reiterated that the prevailing policy had been to "inflict the greatest number of (Communist) casualties we could in order to break down not only the morale but the trained fabric of the Chinese armies."

Touching on U.S. casualties Marshall said he was disturbed — "and I should think you would be" — that MacArthur had repeatedly spoken of his forces in a way, according to the witness, that had served "to accentuate the casualties they are suffering and in effect that it is without justified purposes." (MacArthur, through a spokesman, discounted this implication May 9).

This, plus the deposed commander's "complete disagreement with the constituted authorities of this government," coud have struck a devastating blow at the morale of our troops and our allies, Marshal declared.

Under questioning, Marshall said that MacArthur's disagreements showed up "not only one time but a number of times." The witness cited some of the restrictions a general assumes, and indicated he himself thought resignation preferable to public wrangling over policies in dispute.

Denies Gag Ordered

Marshall told Styles Bridges (R N.H.) that he knew of no order to military men not to discuss the MacArthur affair. The witness also denied that the military at any time gave in to Secretary of State Dean Acheson on the MacArthur episode, as Bridges had suggested.

Secretary Marshall May 9 told Alexander Wiley (R Wis.), who asked most of the questions during the day's session that MacArthur used the world as a forum for his "taking issue with the (established) policy." The effect of airing his disagreement before "the whole allied world" was to raise the question abroad of whose voice enunciated U.S. policy—the President's or the General's?

Not to have dismissed the General would have periled "our entire relationship on a collective security basis." Marshall denied that the British or other allies had had a voice in the ouster, however.

Marshall disclosed that President Truman sent MacArthur an "intimate outline" of the factors in world policy affecting Korea last Jan. 13, when the "difficult situation in Korea" was prompting. MacArthur to entertain "the possibility, which was approaching probability, that we might have to withdraw from the country." In the personal message, Mr. Truman renewed demands for "great prudence" and care against widening the scope of the Korean war.

Nonetheless, MacArthur continued to press for a freer hand in carrying out his own views.

At the May 10 session, Marshall again summed up his over-all position by repeating to Lyndon B. Johnson (D Tex.) that the existing policies afforded the only practical way to peace "with the least loss of life and the least possibility of intervention by Russia."

Red China Veto

He told H. Alexander Smith (R N.J.) that it was his "very definite impression" that the U.S. should use its veto to exclude Red China from UN admission. He reiterated that the U.S. was against not only the recognition of Red China but also the surrender of Formosa to the Communists.

The witness repeated an earlier comment that if Red China actually were bombed, Russia might invoke its treaty with that country as a possible basis for intervention.

In conflict with a previous statement by MacArthur, Marshall declared May 10 that every day Congress failed to act on universal military training and draft legislation "was unfortunate, to put it mildly." MacArthur had expressed the opinion that a decision on UMT legislation should be deferred.

Marshall returned to the witness stand May 11 and was followed by appearances of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

In his press conference May 10, Mr. Truman endorsed Marshall's testimony as the exact truth, word for word.

President Truman had forcefully reentered the immediate situation May 7 by sharply criticizing MacArthur's proposal that the U.S. "go it alone" if other allies in Asia would not.

"We can not go it alone in Asia and go it in company in Europe," Mr. Truman told a national civil defense conference in Washington.

MacArthur's policies "could very well lead to a much bigger and much longer war", and increase our casualties "enormously," the President said. He did not mention the ousted commander by name.

Salient Points

Secretary of Defense Marshall completed his seven days of testimony after developing other salient points May 14.

He read the entire text of President Truman's Jan. 13 personal message to MacArthur. The major theme of this was that Tokyo should consider all military action in Korea against a backdrop of not offending "the great majority of the United Nations." Mr. Truman charged MacArthur not to estrange allies "we would desperately need" in any all-out war.

Marshall indicated to Johnson (D Tex.) that in connection with America's allies, adoption of MacArthur's policies for the Korean war could "seriously affect" the defense arrangements Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower had been concluding in Western Europe.

The Secretary declared that there was, and had been, a greater danger of Soviet encroachment in Asia than in Europe. The risk of war with Russia in the East was "more acute by far" than the hazard in the West. He disputed MacArthur's statement that Russian troops near the war area had been "defensive" in placement. He told Bridges that reports had been received "since December that there had been sizeable increases" in Russia's garrisons in Asia.

Despite a "continuous build-up" of Soviet strength and "a very dangerous possibility" of Soviet intervention, Marshall said again he did not consider war with Russia inevitable. However, he said he operated on the assumption that the Russians "may step into aggression at any moment" in Western Europe. This was one more reason why the U.S. must continue to build its own strength in order to present "a much more formidable prospect" to any would - be aggressor.

Russian Role

Secretary Marshall traced his own beliefs that Russia was inextricably committed politically in Red China. The Russians, he said, could call off the Chinese in Korea "in a moment" if they wished. "Our real opponent" in Korea was not the North Korean or Chinese enemy but Russian obdurateness.

The Chinese were "literally under the direction" of Moscow, he said. It would be a "natural assumption" to feel that admission of Red China to the UN would mean, in effect, recognition of Russia's political conquest of China.

Marshall reiterated his conviction that MacArthur's policies would not win the Korean war, and praised the existing policy of a limited war. He was asked by Johnson (D Tex.): "Do you know of any responsible or respected high military man now in the Department of Defense who feels that our policy is unwise?"

"None has been brought to my attention," the witness replied, adding that the new Korean theatre commander, Gen. Matthew B. Ridgway, was among the top military planners who supported without a break Mr. Truman's policy of a limited war in Korea.

Marshall testified that he personally was "getting an increasing confidence toward the possibility of a satisfactory conclusion" of the war. He said giving reasons for his confidence would entail divulgence of secret war plans, and he did not disclose them. He was emphatic in telling Harry P. Cain (R Wash.) that he was not withholding any information Cain suggested might "reflect on the Democratic Administration."

The witness touched on the troops-for Europe debate from which Congress had recently emerged. Admitting that Congress has a definite right to be kept advised of military strategy, he also declared that "under the Constitution, Congress does not command armies."

He implied that giving Congress the right to pass on the movement of troops could even lead to demands to "determine the strategy of a battle."

Touching on another legislative topic, Marshall again asked for enactment of universal military training measures. He said the country should not have to "wait for a catastrophe to bring about" a "most important action."

In other statements, the Secretary explicity denied that Washington had been high - handed in its relations with Tokyo. Actually, the Administration proceeded "in a very careful manner in our interchanges with Gen. MacArthur because of his attitude, because of what he had stated publicly . . . because of our allies and . . . the general complication and delicacy of the situation."

Bradley Testifies

The Administration rolled up more of its heavy supporting artillery May 15 when Gen. Omar Bradley, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, appeared in defense of President Truman's policies. Bradley's refusal to divulge details of confidential talks at the White House preceding the President's recall of MacArthur created a sharp split among Committee members. However, Armed Services Committee Chairman Richard B. Russell (D Ga.) upheld Bradley's right to taciturnity and the two Committees voted 18 to 8 to uphold Russell.

Bradley opened his testimony by striking out briskly at MacArthur's recommended policies. He said they would unnecessarily increase "the risk of global war." Getting further involved with Red China would not guarantee a Korean victory, but could mean leaping "from a smaller conflict to a larger deadlock at greater expense."

Stepped-up activity against China would require the use of American troops to get "decisive results" and MacArthur himself had said such use would be folly. Moreover, spreading the war past Korea "would probably delight the Kremlin more than anything else we could do."

The witness summed up his views by saying MacArthur's plans would put the U.S. "in the wrong war, at the wrong place, at the wrong time and with the wrong enemy."

He declared repeatedly that prevailing policies were effective and had the unanimous support of the JCS, whose view was broader than a theater commander's. While making no promises, Bradley predicted that Red China would seek peace "if we can punish the Chinese severely enough in Korea."

In mentioning the JCS, Bradley declared the Jan. 12 memorandum held by MacArthur to be a support of his policies was, in fact, a "study" and never a directive. Bradley also said the JCS had not initiated MacArthur's recall, but had unanimously concurred in it, on military grounds. The witness said "it would have been better if (the recall) was handled in a little different way" but that if he, Bradley, were ever involved in a similar situation, he would take his complaints "to those in authority instead of carrying it to the public."

As had Secretary Marshall, Bradley presented Russia as the chief opponent. The Korean fighting was "just one phase of this battle we are having with the other power center in the world." Bradley cautioned that the U.S. was not at that time in a position to seek a showdown with Russia.

Bradley returned to the witness stand May 21. He told the inquiry MacArthur's recall was approved unanimously by the JCS not only because the deposed commander was out of sympathy with Korean policies and was not clearing his own policy statements with Washington, but also because the JCS felt the General's actions tended to "jeopardize the civilian control over the military authorities."

Nationalist Troops

From a strictly military viewpoint, there would be no objection to "taking the wraps off" Chinese Nationalist troops, and using them as MacArthur advocated, so long as American troops would not become involved. The latter proviso, however, was a big "if," Bradley asserted. He added that MacArthur's policies for stepping up the Korean war would have "stripped" much American strength from other areas, without lessening the danger of Russian intervention.

Bradley said there had been a difference of opinion between the JCS and the Department of State over aiding Formosa late in 1949. The State Department won out, and aid to the island was dropped. Since the outbreak of the Korean war, however, the Department concurred in suggestions to resume Formosan aid. The decision was made in August, 1950, and about $10 million worth of military equipment was furnished in November as a start.

Continuing his testimony May 22, the witness told the Senators he was "anxious" because "it is very harmful to our country and to our future security to have to pass on to Russia all of our intentions, all of our thoughts, and all of our capabilities."

Bradley said that the JCS did not consider Korea a good arena in which to fight "a major war", and then speculated briefly on how the Korean struggle might end. If the U. S. could "bump off" a sufficient number of Chinese, he hoped we could propose "something through the UN which would end up in negotiation and cessation of hostilities."

Or perhaps—because of decimated Communist armies — the war could simply fade away: "It petered out in Greece, and that is one way it could end here."

Bradley said that while the U. S. was following a "long-range political objective" of a free, united Korea, "something less than that" would be considered a victory.

The General testified May 23 that Gen. MacArthur could have found out about the Chinese Communist offensive impending in November, 1950, if his military intelligence and his evaluation of it had not been "faulty." The witness withheld any personal "blame" of MacArthur. He repeated however, that he felt the deposed General should have resigned if he wanted to disagree publicly with the Administration.

Trouble in Iran

When Owen Brewster (R Maine) asked how the "apparent imminence of trouble in Iran" affected the Korean military outlook, Bradley said "the longer the problem in Korea keeps up the less we are prepared to meet any movement anywhere else. There is danger, of course, of the Russians moving into Iran and starting another aggression."

Bradley amplified this May 24, saying he was "not too sure the Russians are going to start something in Iran before they start it somewhere else." He mentioned Yugoslavia "for example." He expressed the fear that North Atlantic Treaty nations "do not have the capability right now of stopping an aggression by Russia."

The General testified that total U. S. battle and non-battle casualties in Korea to that date were 141,995. Styles Bridges (R N.H.) remarked he felt casualties "were substantially more than double those officially announced."

Bradley assured the Senators that the issue of whether Red China should be admitted to the UN had "nothing to do" with a peace settlement for Korea.

In a colloquy with J. William Fulbright (D Ark.), Bradley declared MacArthur twice, differed with JCS military strategy during a period when the UN forces in Northern Korea were divided. The JCS twice warned MacArthur to close up the 10th Corps with the 8th Army. MacArthur, in the witness' words, "said he was going to contract them (10th Corps) into beachhead; ours (messages) told him to go ahead and evacuate them."

After telling Harry P. Cain (R Wash.) that the JCS believed militarily, that Turkey, Greece and Spain should be brought into European defense arrangements, Bradley left the stand after six solid days of testifying.

New Controversy

A new controversy arose May 24 when Bourke B. Hickenlooper (R Iowa) said other members of the JCS were in full agreement with Bradley and that they should be sidestepped until Secretary of State Dean Acheson had been called as a witness. His proposal was opposed by several Senators, but Hickenlooper persisted. After Bradley completed his testimony, the Iowan moved formally that the Senators call Acheson at once and go "immediately into the broad policy field."

After considerable discussion in the group, Hickenlooper's motion was defeated, 11-14.

OTHER JOINT CHIEFS

Already past the 1-million mark in wordage, the Senate inquiry next heard others of the nation's top military men, the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

The witnesses were Gen. J. Lawton Collins, Army Chief of Staff, May 25-6; Gen. Hoyt S. Vandenberg, Air Force Chief of Staff, May 28-9; and Adm. Forrest P. Sherman, Chief of Naval Operations, (who was to die while on a military mission in Europe shortly after) May 30-31.

Gen. Collins

Collins supported previous witnesses who had declared that MacArthur's policies might lead to a third world war. He said U.S. involvement in a vast Asian land war would "delight" Russia, and that "five more divisions" would be needed to try to prove MacArthur's strategies.

The witness disclosed, however, that a "definite new directive" on conduct of the Korean war was in preparation. He testified that while the U.S. could hold off a Russian thrust in Asia or Alaska, Western Europe was not sufficiently bolstered against attack. For the domestic front, Collins advocated enactment of a UMT program.

Much of the May 25 testimony hinged on whether MacArthur had violated JCS wishes that he keep his troops five miles below the Yalu River when he was engaged in an early but ill - starred offensive into North Korea. At first, Collins indicated MacArthur had violated orders, but later said the latter had not registered any "blatant disregard" of what had actually been JCS "suggestions" and "advice."

MacArthur Statement

Brien McMahon (D Conn.) asked: "The General rejected that advice?" Replied Collins: "Yes, sir, he did." Meantime, in New York, MacArthur issued a statement that he had not been "ordered" to keep his troops from contact along the Yalu.

Collins was more explicit May 26. When MacArthur failed to halt his troops before the Yalu, the witness said, he "violated a policy." But "I did not say he violated an order," Collins declared. The policy was a "clearly enunciated" one, he added, specifying that only South Korean troops, not GIs, were to range along the Manchurian border.

Gen. Vandenberg

Gen. Vandenberg went on the stand May 28 and — as Collins had — disclaimed any personal animus against MacArthur.

Bombing Manchuria would have committed "shoe-string" Air Forces fully leaving the U. S. "naked" in other areas that needed protection, he said. Nor would bombing have guaranteed a decisive outcome for the Korean struggle. Actually, there were "reasonable chances" of getting peace there without bombing China. In addition, MacArthur's air plans required twice as many strategic bombing groups as the U. S. then had.

After noting that Russian jet engines were "superior to any jet engine we have today," Vandenberg answered "No sir," when Johnson (D Tex.) asked: "Are you satisfied with the rate of progress of our air rearmament program?" The witness said the proposed 95-group air force would serve only as a "stepping-stone" for an adequate number. He cited no figure. He reiterated his belief that the air force was "the greatest single factor in keeping the peace today."

No Big Stick

In his May 29 testimony, Gen. Vandenberg said U. S. air power was no longer a big stick but "a fairly large club" that might become a "willow wand" unless further built up. By 1953, he said, we should be "beginning" to have enough, although the job of the air force becomes "roughly doubled" as Russia's air power increases.

If the U. S. had had a big enough air force, Vanderberg speculated, the Chinese might not have dared to come into the Korean fight. He told Foreign Relations Chairman Connally that Russia knows more about our air force than we know about hers.

Vandenberg touched on political questions. He said the immediate goal in Korea was to restore the Republic of Korea in the South "and then from there go on to see what more can be gained." He declared he opposed Red China's admittance to the UN "under any circumstances" and said he favored the retention of Formosa in non-Communist hands.

Adm. Sherman

Adm. Sherman, then the fourth member of the JCS, began his testimony May 30. He stated a U. S. naval blockade of China would be an act of war and might bring armed Russian opposition. However, Russia might respect an "effective United Nations commercial and naval blockade." MacArthur had advocated both. Although "the fact is that our allies have been unwilling to join in a naval blockade of China," Sherman said, he would favor many aspects of a UN blockade.

One of its advantages would be that "China would be forced to turn to Russia" more and more for needed supplies, "with consequent increased drain on Russian production." Another advantage would be that a blockade "would be highly effective in impeding preparations by China to invade Formosa."

The Admiral called prevailing policies in Korea "the correct thing" and said they presented a "good prospect" of ending war on terms "advantageous to us." He added that he opposed admitting Red China to the UN "in any event" and that Western Europe was "more important" than Asia to us. He declared he thought Russia's fear of being defeated was the greatest deterrent to war. He said our Navy was ready to meet demands that might be made on it, and that he believed the U. S. could win "a general war that we don't want."

Defends Removal

Sherman declared he believed MacArthur's removal was in the interest of national security because the JCS needed a commander "in whom we could confide and on whom we could rely."

This brought the comment from Russell that the manner in which MacArthur was recalled was "perhaps more startling to the American people than the fact that he was relieved." Sherman said his own "spontaneous reaction" to the impending ouster was to suggest that Marshall go out to Tokyo to talk to MacArthur. But he decided not to press this suggestion.

The witness testified May 31 that he didn't quarrel with the concept of buying time by limited war in Korea, because " in the short term, time is on our side." He stated flatly that the U. S. military position was improving very rapidly because of the expansion programs that were under way. He hinted that when the U. S. became strong enough, Russia might call off the Korean struggle.

ACHESON TESTIFIES

Secretary of State Dean Acheson began his testimony June 1 and the 26 members of the Senate's Armed Services and Foreign Relations Committees handling the investigation kept boring in with questions. Many of these went beyond the topic of why MacArthur was relieved of his Far Eastern commands.

Before Acheson formally launched into the main body of his testimony the Senators wrangled for hours over whether to release a classified State Department document of Dec. 23, 1949, concerning Formosa.

William F. Knowland (R Calif.), spearheaded the group of Senators seeking disclosure of the document despite Acheson's statement that its publication "would have a very damaging effect." The Knowland group was successful. The Senators voted 15-9 to divulge the contents of the directive.

The document's import was that the State Department, fearing that Formosa's fall to the Communists was imminent at that time, counseled its officials to avoid any "undue preoccupation" with such an event. They were to express an attitude emphasizing that "Formosa has no special military significance." This was to be the propaganda "line."

Secretary Acheson opened his testimony by setting out his premise that MacArthur's policies for Korea were "a gamble with the security of our nation". Actually, the Administration's operation in Korea had been a success. He declared time was running in American favor.

Acheson repeatedly mentioned that one of the dangers he saw in MacArthur's policies was the possible estrangement of U. S. allies. Broadening the Asian fighting could impair the solidarity of the United Nations forces in Korea, and expose them "needlessly and dangerously" to possible Russian attacks. And, the witness emphasized, this country should definitely not try to "go it alone" but should husband its moral support from other nations.

War Not Inevitable

He declared, as had MacArthur and other military witnesses, that he did not think war with Russia was inevitable. He noted that the U. S. policy was to bring about a "unified, free and democratic Korea" but would not call this a formal "war aim" to be secured exclusively by fighting. "It is sought to be achieved by peaceful means" as well, he said.

In his June 2 statements, Acheson said he had urged great "caution" in the relief of MacArthur, but made it clear to the Senators that he would not relate personal conversations with the President about this. Perhaps mindful of their experience with Gen. Bradley's similar refusal, the Senators did not press the point.

The witness declared he knew of no peace negotiations then under way, nor of "any proposals having been made by the Red Chinese." He said there might be a cease-fire agreement if there could be a "real settlement" of the Korean war at the 38th parallel. But admission of the Chinese Reds to the U. N. or a settlement of Formosa's fate would distinctly not be factors in any cease-fire discussion.

Returning again to the question of MacArthur's policies and their possible effect on allies of the U. S., Acheson said use of Chinese Nationalist troops would have raised "very serious complications" politically among UN participants in Korea. Not using them helped the U. S. "work absolutely hand-in-hand with our allies."

The Secretary declared that criticisms of our allies' role in Korea were sometimes unfair. The British in Malaya and the French in Indo-China have long been making an effort "roughly equivalent" to ours in Korea, he said.

Offer to Reds

Acheson testified that MacArthur's offer to confer in the field with a Red commander on peace moves seriously embarrassed the U. S. government which was considering a proposed Presidential peace statement. Acheson told Wayne Morse (R Ore.) that a draft of this statement had never been sent MacArthur.

The tense situation in Iran, the witness stated, was "of the greatest possible seriousness and might easily deteriorate into a situation out of which war could grow." The British crown colony of Hong Kong, also confronted by Russian pressures, would present an extremely grave and "very serious" problem to the U. S. if it fell to the Communists.

Acheson told H. Alexander Smith (R N.J.) that it was "hard to give you a clear answer" to the Senator's question of whether Congress should pass on any troops President Truman might commit to Iran in support of any UN action there. The President might have "to act so quickly" that seeking the approval of Congress might be impractical.

The Secretary hit at MacArthur's recommendations for bombing Red China by saying that this would give Russia a legal basis for entering the war. The Kremlin, he indicated, could simply invoke its treaty with Peiping and deliver mutual aid against armed attack.

Then the witness started on a day-long and elaborate review of Sino-American relations for a score of years. The scope of this was much larger than the specific issue of Gen. MacArthur's recall. It was generally a diplomatic history of American dealings with China from before World War II. Acheson led the Senators into the labyrinth of intricacies that characterizes Oriental negotiations.

Sketches Complexities

At one point, he sketched the complexities that attend Chinese discussions — when the parties attempt to outwait each other in hopes that unforeseen developments may suddenly erupt and tip the advantage to one side or the other.

An inquest into the Yalta Conference of 1945, when the allies gave Russia certain concessions to assure her entry into the war against Japan, was a major item of interrogation. Acheson stoutly defended the Yalta agreements, and noted that Chiang Kai-shek had endorsed them. But Acheson's critics remained adamant that Yalta was a "'sell-out" and one of the main roots of present U. S. difficulties in Asia.

When Acheson returned to the stand June 5 for his fourth straight day of testifying, he repeated that the U. S. stood firm against admitting Red China to the UN. In the unlikely event that it could not prevent this within the UN, "the thing to do" would be to carry the issue to the World Court.

The Secretary had several brushes with Senators during the day. Guy M. Gillette (D Iowa) sharply challenged the wisdom of the U. S. giving in to our allies' flat refusal to permit a policy of "hot pursuit" of enemy aircraft. Was giving in "a matter of courtesy or. . .obligation?" the Senator wanted to know. Actually it was a matter of the "closest consultation," Acheson replied and a practice, which the U. S. would continue. Gillette said he deplored this approach because the U. S. should retain some measure of initiative.

Acheson disagreed strongly with Ralph E. Flanders' (R Vt.) suggestion that bombing Manchuria would pose only a "minimum risk" of touching off World War III. Acheson said it would invite "catastrophe."

The witness then tangled with Owen Brewster (R Me.) who said it was "most amazing" that Acheson seemed unaware that Chinese Nationalists had caused 1.2 million Communist casualties in China's civil war.

Raps Acheson Review

Brewster cited the figures as an example of the fighting ability of the Nationalists. He said that if the figures were correct, "then much of what you have been telling us is well calculated to deceive the American people." Later, Brewster said in the Senate that Acheson's review of our China policies was "a miracle of contrived confusion" and a "bare-faced distortion."

One of Acheson's major June 6 statements was that MacArthur himself had approved 1945 plans to "promote a united, democratic China" by fostering a working arrangement between the Nationalists and the Communists. It was this consideration that led to Gen. Marshall's trip to China at that time — after Gen. MacArthur and other high military and political figures had reached a "pretty complete unanimity of view" involving negotiations between the two blocs.

Acheson also declared that he did not believe there was a failure in intelligence given MacArthur's headquarters with respect to North Korea's invasion of the South. The witness said that Tokyo had received intelligence reports of this possibility three months before it happened, but had disallowed them.

The Secretary encountered contention from two ranking Democrats—Walter F. George (Ga.) and Harry Flood Byrd (Va.) — who criticized the U. S. decision to withdraw troops from South Korea in 1949. Both Senators called this a "grave error" which helped lead to the North Korean attack.

No Appeasement

Acheson resisted suggestions that this had been a move of "appeasement" and said it "was the result of a recommendation by the UN." Byrd retorted: "That doesn't make it an accurate or proper recommendation. . .I am inclined to think that had those troops remained there, this invasion would not have occurred."

"That may be true," Acheson replied. He added, however, that the U. S. does not attempt to "run" the UN. In other June 6 testimony, the witness told Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) that his statements to the Senators have been "fair and accurate" and not a "bare-faced distortion" as Brewster had charged. "I do not think Sen. Brewster's characterization was correct," he said.

The witness also was outspoken in his denials that State Department policy since the war had been influenced by Owen Lattimore, one of the key figures in the 1950 Senate investigation into alleged communism in the State Department. (See CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, 1950, p. 444).

In his June 7 statements, Acheson again denied there were Communist sympathizers in his agency, but conceded that two diplomatic aides in Hong Kong recently had been relieved for security reasons.

The Secretary's major points of his sixth day of testimony were that there was no connection between the Yalta Conference and the Communist victory in the Chinese civil war. He implied that the Nationalist defeat partially was due to economic collapse despite huge credits extended Chiang Kai-shek by the U. S. before the war. Brien McMahon (D Conn.) suggested an investigation into the way Chiang handled some $200 million in U. S. gold credits he received in 1942.

Acheson declared it was "a hard question" whether Russia could stop the Korean war, although he admitted the existence of Russian influence in the Peiping regime.

Ouster Demands

In connection with Acheson's appearances, new and repeated demands for his resignation or outster were heard. Sen. James P. Kem (R Mo.) declared again June 2 that "Acheson must go — soon." Rep. John Jarman (D Okla.) said his replacement should be considered "in the interest of national unity."

Acheson's arch-critic, Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy (R Wis.), bumped into the Secretary in a Senate elevator when the latter was arriving to testify June 1. At their first meeting, the two men shook hands.

In a House speech June 6, Rep. Paul W. Shafer (R Mich.) called Acheson "an admitted liar" because he testified that the real U. S. views towards Formosa were not represented by the State Department directive that the islands fall would have "no special military significance."

Also in the House, Clair Engle (D Calif.) asked for an investigation of "lobbying" in the U. S. on behalf of the Chinese Nationalist government.

The inquiry produced major discussions on two new issues as the hearings continued through their sixth week. One issue was the so-called "China lobby", said to operate in this country on behalf of Chiang Kai-shek's Nationalist regime. The other was whether top U. S. officials tried to promote a coalition Nationalist - Communist government in China in 1945.

Witnesses through the week included Secretary Acheson, Lieut. Gen. Albert C. Wedemeyer, wartime commander in the China area and now commander of the U. S. Sixth Army in this country, and Louis Johnson, former Secretary of Defense.

Acheson completed eight days of testimony June 9. Many of his statements the last two days concerned the China lobby and the internal Chinese situation in 1945. Senators did not hesitate to lead him through many of the same questions he had previously discussed.

Gen. Wedemeyer also was put through the paces on the China lobby and the coalition-government topic. But the witness, clad in civilian clothes, also spoke at length June 11-13 on the immediate purpose of the inquiry: Whether MacArthur's recall was justified and whether his policies were wise. Wedemeyer substantially defended them, but he sided in some respects with MacArthur's critics, the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Johnson opened his testimony June 14. Many of his preliminary statements dealt with the circumstances of his resignation — by request — Sept. 18, 1950.

The length of the hearings continued to be a problem. Sen. Lester C. Hunt (D Wyo.) said they were running so long they were becoming slightly "ridiculous" and urged that a date be set for ending them. No immediate action was taken on his suggestion, but night hearings were begun June 12.

Sens. Cain and Knowland voiced different complaints. They asserted June 8 that secret documents presented by the military had been misleadingly altered when they were paraphrased. They contended the alterations diluted MacArthur's case.

China Lobby

Sen. Morse brought up the subject of the "China lobby" June 7. He told Acheson "it is believed by many that the China lobby has been especially active in pressuring Congress for financial, economic and military aid for the Chiang regime, both before and since it retired to Formosa." Morse said "it is widely alleged" that the China lobby "has for several years been conducting a violent campaign against American policies in China" and attempting to discredit the State Department by charging that its policies reflected Communist influences.

The Senator mentioned William J. Goodwin, who he said was appointed in 1948 as a lobbyist for a Chinese Embassy official, at a reputed salary of $40,000 yearly. (CQ Almanac, Vol. IV, lists Goodwin's lobbist registration on page 434; CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, carries on page 798 the withdrawal of Goodwin's registration as of April 10, 1950.)

Used in U.S.?

McMahon took up the charge. He implied that money sent by the U. S. government to bolster Chiang's Nationalist regime might have found its way into private Chinese pockets, or been sent back to this country "for the purpose of influencing public opinion" in favor of the Nationalists.

Both Morse and McMahon asked for an investigation. Their call in the Senate was echoed in the House by Clair Engle (D Calif.). He introduced a resolution (H Res 248) on June 7 calling for an investigation of the China lobby.

Acheson agreed with Morse and McMahon that the public should know "if there is any improper use of funds to influence the foreign policy" of this country. He repeated June 8 his willingness to see a survey made of lobbying in foreign policy, but resisted suggestions that his agency handle it.

When Acheson returned to the hearings June 9, he informed the Senators that President Truman had instructed the heads of executive departments and agencies to compile any data they might have on the China lobby. In the face of this evidence of a full-dress investigation, Styles Bridges (R N.H.) declared that any China lobby would be revealed as "a very minor thing" compared to other pressure groups seeking American favor.

Bridges asked for an investigation as well into evidences of any pressures from "the Communist government of China" or other enemies of the U.S.

The question was raised of which Congressional group should make the study. Kefauver proposed that the Committees waging the MacArthur inquiry take on the job. Chairman Russell demurred. No decision was made.

XUM

The discussion of who favored a coalition government in China in 1945 and who opposed it grew out of a statement Acheson made June 6. At that time, he testified that MacArthur himself had approved plans in 1945 for an attempt to compromise differences between the Nationalists and Communists in China.

Revealed in detail by Acheson June 9, the plan was to use "United States assistance to China as a basis for negotiation. to bring together and effect a compromise between the major opposing groups in order to promote a united, democratic China." This language was endorsed Dec. 7, 1945, by Gens. MacArthur and Wedemeyer, and Adm. Raymond S. Spruance.

But in an outspoken telegram June 9 to Sen. Knowland, Gen. MacArthur strongly denied that this language meant support of any plan to use "American assistance as a weapon to force the existing (Nationalist) government into a political alliance with the Communists."

Wedemeyer was the eighth witness to testify when he took the stand June 11, but was the first since MacArthur to throw his support behind most of the ousted commander's proposals. The witness backed MacArthur's recommendations to bomb Manchuria, blockade Red China, and use Nationalist troops. Otherwise, he said, "I just don't think we are going to get anywhere."

Differs With MacArthur

He differed with MacArthur's characterization of Formosa as absolutely vital to American defenses. Wedemeyer called the island "very important" but not vital. He disclosed that he had been the official who had suggested that the State Department minimize the fall of Formosa if that happened. But the witness disclaimed responsibility for the Department's directive that the island should be termed of "no special military significance" if it did fall.

The witness slapped at Acheson's statement that Chiang Kai-shek had endorsed the Yalta agreements of 1945. Wedemeyer said the Generalissimo had been "chagrined, disappointed and shocked" at them. In other comments on Chiang and his regime, Wedemeyer said the Nationalist government had admittedly been "a weak reed" but had been "an important reed that we should not desert entirely."

Although Wedemeyer endorsed MacArthur policies which the Joint Chiefs of Staff had opposed, the witness said the Senators should ultimately accept the JCS judgment. John J. Sparkman (D Ala.) asked: "And in case of a disagreement between a field commander and the Joint Chiefs, to whom should we. . . look for guidance?"

"The Joint Chiefs of Staff without question, sir," Wedemeyer replied.

Johnson Questioned

Louis Johnson, who was Secretary of Defense when the Korean war began, opened his testimony June 14 by telling the Senators the decision to intervene militarily in Korea was made on Acheson's motion. But Johnson was the one who tendered MacArthur the command. The witness said he had seen no intelligence reports "that put us on notice anything was going to happen in Korea."

Johnson testified he wanted to send a military mission to Formosa in 1949, but that Acheson had opposed the idea of such liaison with Chiang — until after the outbreak of the Korean war. He said Acheson indicated even then that the Secretary "really wanted. . .nothing to do with the Nationalist government" and that the two men had had a "violent discussion" before the U. S. fleet was sent to protect Formosa.

The witness said he did not agree with the method by which MacArthur was relieved. But Johnson sidestepped expressions of agreement or disagreement with the General's policies. He said he had backed the latter's decision for the 1950 Inchon landing, but resigned by request before it took place. Johnson said "I do not know why I am out of the Defense Department."

While the Senate's inquiry into his dismissal passed the 1.5 million mark in wordage, MacArthur was again stating his case in a speech delivered in Austin, Tex., June 13. He accused the Administration of "moral weakness" in considering a negotiated peace and warned against what he said is "a new and yet more dangerous form of appeasement — appeasement on the battlefield."

MacArthur insisted that "the surest, the only way to prevent World War III is to end the Korean conflict rapidly and decisively." He had recommended bombing, blockades and use of Nationalist troops in order to effect this. The General hit at Russian diplomatic "bulldozing" and U.S. tolerance of it. He said American policies seem "largely influenced, if not indeed in some instances, dictated, from abroad. . ."

HOME STRETCH

The marathon inquiry entered its home stretch June 18 when the Armed Services and Foreign Relations Committees voted to hear only four more witnesses.

The decision, made in the seventh week of the hearings, was a unanimous one. Singled out as the final witnesses from an informal list of some 100 persons were:

Vice - Admiral Oscar C. Badger, former U. S. naval commander in the Far East; Maj. Gen. Patrick J. Hurley (Ret.), a former Ambassador to Nationalist China; Maj. Gen. Emmett O'Donnell, former commander of U. S. strategic bombing forces in the Far East; and Maj. Gen. David C. Barr, one-time chief of a military mission to China and a division commander in Korea.

Gen. MacArthur was invited June 15 by Chairman Russell to return if he wished to rebut testimony subsequent to his own. But in a letter made public June 20, the General declined the invitation.

Admiral Badger

Adm. Badger, who had been heralded as an "anti - Administration" witness who would support most of Gen. MacArthur's recommendations, actually hit at many of them when he testified June 19. Instead of using Nationalist troops on Formosa against the Chinese mainland, he urged they be kept as a garrison on the island itself. He termed Formosa "not too effective" as a naval base.

But, he testified, the U. S. should certainly see that Formosa, as "a source of influence," is retained by anti - Communists. He urged that "moral and economic" support be extended to Formosa and to free Asia elsewhere.

The witness decried MacArthur's recommendations that the U. S. go it alone in blockading China even if the United Nations were unwilling to help. He opposed the General's proposal to bomb Manchuria at that time, saying, "I think we can lick them (the Chinese) in Korea."

Badger said — as Gen. Wedemeyer did earlier — that in the event of a conflict between a theater commander such as Gen. MacArthur and the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the latter's views should prevail since the JCS would be better informed on over-all considerations.

Gen. Hurley

Gen. Hurley addressed himself more to the over-all history of recent Asian developments than to MacArthur's dismissal when he took the stand June 20. He told the hearing that the President's decision to intervene in Korea "was courageous and sound" but actually "constituted the reversal of a five-year appeasement policy of communism in Asia."

He attributed this policy to the State Department, and indicated it stemmed from the Yalta conference in 1945. The agreements which made concessions to Russia to draw her into the war against Japan were termed "immoral and cowardly." By accepting the Yalta agreements, "American diplomats surrendered the territorial integrity and political independence of (Nationalist) China and wrote the blueprint for the Communist conquest of China."

The witness said Acheson's statement that Chiang Kai-shek had not been unhappy over the Yalta agreements was tantamount to saying "China really liked the fact that we betrayed it in secret at Yalta."

Hurley declared the State Department seemed at times to support both imperialism and communism, and reflected the views of "men who are upholding imperialism, monopoly and exploitation." He termed the Iranian crisis the product of "imperialism, not communism" and criticized the "stubborn, unenlightened and greedy" conduct of the Anglo - Iranian Oil Company.

Gen. Barr

Next to last witness was Maj. Gen. David G. Barr, former head of a U. S. military mission to Nationalist China and one-time commander of the 7th Division fighting in Korea. He defended prevailing policies of a limited war there, and attacked MacArthur's recommendations that Manchuria be bombed and that Nationalist troops be used against the Chinese. Barr said he favored an economic blockade of China by the United Nations, but opposed "going it alone." He declared the U. S. "could get along very well without Formosa," which MacArthur had called "vital."

Gen. O'Donnell

The final witness was Maj. Gen. Emmett (Rosie) O'Donnell, former commander of U. S. bombing units in Korea. He told the Senators June 25 that when the Chinese entered the war Manchuria should have been bombed. Since then, the situation has changed and bombing would be of questionable wisdom, he said.

Nevertheless, the General sided strongly with MacArthur's views that bombing Manchuria would not necessarily have brought Russia into the war. It would not have dared to enter against U. S. air power, he declared.

COMMITTEE STATEMENT

As they buckled down to drafting official reports of their findings, members of the Senate's Armed Services and Foreign Relations Committees which handled the investigation issued a preliminary statement June 27. With one unanimous voice they warned "those who threaten us" not to "mistake the temper of our people" because of any "discord and disagreement" produced by the hearings.

Misunderstanding America's basic attitude might lead aggressors to "plunge the world into war. . . they could never win," the Committees said.

No Formal Report

However, the Committees voted 20 to 3 in closed session Aug. 17 not to make a formal report on the investigation.

On Aug. 20, eight of the 12 Republican members of the Committees released voluminous "conclusions" on the investigation which they said they offered "as Americans," not as Senators. Highlights of the statement were:

"The removal of Gen. MacArthur was within the constitutional power of the President, but the circumstances were a shock to the national pride."

"There was no serious disagreement between Gen. MacArthur and the Joint Chiefs of Staff as to military strategy in Korea."

"The testimony revealed only one positive plan for victory in the Korean war, the plan advocated by Gen. MacArthur."

Under Acheson, "the policy of American foreign policy has been primarily to conciliate certain of our associates in the United Nations rather than to advance the security of the United States."

"We have not been convinced that Chiang lost China for any other reason than that he did not receive sufficient support, both moral and material, from the United States."

Signers of the GOP statement were Styles Bridges (N.H.), Alexander Wiley (Wis.), H. Alexander Smith (N.J.), Bourke B. Hickenlooper (Iowa), William F. Knowland (Calif.), Harry P. Cain (Wash.), Owen Brewster (Maine) and Ralph E. Flanders (Vt.).

Two Republican Committee members who did not join in the statement voiced their own views.

Leverett Saltonstall (Mass.) Aug. 20, said, "Our present task and duty are to deal with the present. . . and to look ahead. . . rather than look backward in anger and with recriminations."

Wayne Morse (Ore.) said Aug. 19 the report of the eight Republicans was "highly partisan and biased." Morse concluded that MacArthur should have resigned to "carry the issue as a civilian to the people of the United States."

Sole Defense

Thus, since the Democratic members of the combined Commitees decided against filing conclusions of any kind, the sole direct defense of President Truman's recall of MacArthur from Far Eastern command to appear in the final transcript of the inquiry was made by a Republican—Morse.

Morse made available Sept. 5 a copy of his individual findings, holding not only that removal of MacArthur was "necessitated by his own misconduct" but also criticizing the other Republican members of the 26-man Senate panel that investigated the incident.

While the Oregonian upheld the firing, he said MacArthur first should have been called to Washington for a conference. He went on to make sharp criticism of MacArthur's conduct in relation to Washington and said it was "highly probable" his ultimatum to the Chinese Reds to choose between a truce and invasion of their mainland "destroyed the best chance the United Nations have had for negotiating an honorable peace in Korea."

Senate Votes: Far Eastern Policy; India Aid; Trade Agreements; Oatis Arrest

1. Far Eastern Policy Hearings (See story p. 242.) Wherry (R Neb.) motion that the Senate adjourn until 5 p.m., May 2. (This motion, made at 4:40 p.m., May 2, was a parliamentary move to bring before the Senate S Res 137 calling for hearings on the MacArthur controversy to be open to all Senators. If the Senate had not adjourned, it would have continued to work on unfinished business, with no opportunity to bring up new business. A vote for adjournment, therefore, was a vote in favor of bringing up S Res 137. Although the Wherry motion prevailed, other new business had priority over S Res 137 when the Senate reconvened at 5.p.m.). Agreed to, 43-41, May 2.
2. Far Eastern Policy Hearings. McFarland (D Ariz.) motion that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon, May 3. (This motion, made at 9:40 p.m., May 2, was a parliamentary move. By voting to recess rather than adjourn, the Senate forestalled consideration of new business at the beginning of the next day's session, thus blocking attempts to bring up S Res 137, and in effect reversing its earlier stand). Agreed to, 42-40, May 2.
3. Far Eastern Policy Hearings. McFarland (D Ariz.) motion that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon, May 4. (Motion, made at 6:30 p.m., May 3, was parliamentary, similar to above). Agreed to, 42-39, May 3.
4. Far Eastern Policy Hearings. Wherry (R Neb.) motion to take up S Res 137, authorizing all Senators to attend as observers the joint meetings of the Committees on Armed Services and Foreign Relations on Far Eastern policy. (Although the Senate rejected this motion, the Committees had already invited all Senators to attend the meetings, so the objective of the resolution was attained). Rejected, 37-41, May 4.

8. Adoption of conference report. Agreed to, 56-21, Oct. 2.

Taft-Hartley Amendment

Taft-Hartley Act Amendment

Summary — Congress completed action on a bill Oct. 9 amending the National Labor Relations Act. It was the first amendment of the famed Taft-Hartley Act since its passage in 1947, and it modified provisions relating to union shop elections.

The bill (S 1959) was sponsored by Sens. Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) and Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn). It was approved by the Senate Labor Committee Aug. 10 and passed by the Senate Aug. 21 by voice vote. The House Labor Committee approved it Sept. 27 without amendment and the House, after defeating a recommittal motion by a vote of 22-305, passed the bill on a roll-call vote of 307-18 Oct. 9. (For voting, see page 271.)

President Truman praised the change and signed the bill Oct. 22. It became Public Law 189 and it validated union shop elections held before union leaders took non-Communist oaths and eliminated the requirement for elections on union shop agreements. However, a provision was retained providing that an election to decertify a union shop agreement may be held if 30 per cent of the employees so desire.

Background — The Taft-Hartley Act of 1947 required a positive election before a union could sign a union shop agreement, which requires all employees to join the union within a specified period. The Act also required that officers of the union involved must have filed appropriate financial statements and non-Communist affidavits before the National Labor Relations Board could hold an election.

After passage of the Taft-Hartley Act, the NLRB held that only the officers of local unions involved in contracts with employers would have to sign the non - Communist oaths. In May, 1951, the Supreme Court, in the Highland Park Manufacturing Co. case, held that the top officers of national and international unions, which included the AFL and CIO, also would have to sign the non - Communist affidavits in order that contracts be valid when facilities of the NLRB were used.

The Supreme Court decision made approximately 4,600 union shop elections invalid because they were held before CIO and AFL leaders signed the non - Communist affidavits. The 1951 amendment passed by Congress reversed this decision and made the elections valid.

SENATE

The Senate Labor Committee recommended the bill Aug. 10. It was designed to validate union shop elections which the Supreme Court ruling had challenged and to remove a provision requiring union shop elections in the future, since they were almost invariably in favor of a union shop. It retained a provision that an election might be held to decertify a union shop agreement if 30 per cent of the employees so desired.

The Senate approved the bill Aug. 21. Action was by voice vote after Humphrey told the Senate that the measure had been endorsed by leaders of both parties and by labor and management.

HOUSE

The House Labor Committee Sept. 27 recommended bill without amendment.

The measure was brought up on the House floor Oct. 9 under "closed rule" procedure which barred amendments by individual members. Walter E. Brehm (R Ohio) offered a motion to recommit the bill but it was defeated on a 22-305 roll - call vote.

After brief debate, the House passed S 1959 Oct. 9 on a 307-18 roll-call vote.

President Truman signed the bill into law Oct. 2 and called it "a step toward improvement of our labor relations laws." He viewed the measure as "one which will enable both management and labor to conduct their affairs without arbitrary government intervention in the collective bargaining processes."

The bill became Public Law 189.

Railway Dispute Hearings

Summary — After a subcommittee heard numerous labor and management witnesses, the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare on June 27, 1951, produced a report declaring that both railroads and unions were "somewhat at fault" in a dispute which had remained unsettled for more than two years

A subcommittee began hearings Feb. 22, 1951. After a month of taking testimony, a proposal for settlement of the dispute was offered, but was rejected. Upon concluding hearings April 5, the subcommittee appealed for an early settlement of union-management differences that still remained.

The Committee report June 27 was accompanied by a minority report which declared the hearings were "inadequate."

Hearings

The Labor Subcommittee hearings began Feb. 22 with Roy O. Hughes president of the Order of Railway Conductors, as first witness. Hughes declared that if the government would "impound profits during government seizure and control" of railroads, "it is our opinion that such a policy will be a step to encouraging cooperative collective bargaining."

Hughes charged collective bargaining had broken down in the rail industry because management rejected the method. He said "token seizure" of the roads during strikes did not encourage settlements.

W. E. B. Chase, vice president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, blamed high government officials for impugning the patriotism of railroad men. He criticized a "prejudiced press" and big carrier advertisements which, he said, "unjustly pilloried" workers. Chase said a "fair attempt" by the government to settle the dispute would have ended the controversy long ago.

Chase took the stand for the second time Feb. 26. He said the unions objected to proposals by the companies to retain John R. Steelman, Presidential assistant, as arbitrator.

David B. Robertson, president of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, told the Committee Feb. 27 that the Railway Labor Act should be amended to make clear that recommendations by emergency, fact-finding boards were not necessarily binding.

J. P. Shields, grand chief engineer of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, said he had made it clear following a "tentative" agreement made Dec. 21, 1950, that the agreement would not be binding until the general chairmen of the four brotherhoods had ratified it.

Morse Summary: "Skunky"

On March 5, continuing his testimony, Shields told Sen. Wayne Morse (R Ore.), "You have summed up the situation much better than I could have" when the Oregon Senator said the receipt of profits by railroad companies despite Army seizure of their roads was "skunky."

W. P. Kennedy, president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, also criticized operation of the roads under the Army with rail companies retaining their profits.

John Thad Scott, Jr., chairman of the National Mediation Board which administers the Railway Labor Act, testified March 7 in defense of his agency's work in promoting stability in the rail industry.

Legislation to prohibit strikes by railway labor was supported March 12 by Daniel P. Loomis, chairman of the Association of Western Railways. Loomis accused the unions of unwillingness to make any concessions toward settlement of disputes. Strikes should be outlawed on the railroads because the carriers service was essential to public welfare, Loomis declared. Testifying again March 14 and 15, the railroad official continued his version of the long negotiations in the dispute.

Settlement Proposal Rejected

On March 22, a settlement proposal, framed by Labor Committee Chairman James E. Murray (D Mont.), was made. The proposal would have changed a tentative agreement of Feb. 24 under which the roads had been kept running. It would have permitted the unions and the roads to choose an arbitrator other than Steelman, and would have authorized negotiation of certain pay disputes on a local basis.

Murray said the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen was prepared to accept it. But Loomis, as chairman of the Western Carriers' Conference Committee, rejected the proposal March 22. Speaking for the carriers, Loomis said Steelman should stay in the picture "because of his familiarity" with the dispute.

Kennedy, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen president, attacked the grounds on which the carriers rejected the proposal. On March 28, Loomis said "the carriers are willing to leave the question of who shall be the arbitrator to the President of the United States and will accept anyone named by him." Kennedy, as well as other union leaders, had urged removal of Steelman.

Another witness was Karl R. Bendetsen, Assistant Secretary of the Army in charge of its rail operations. Bendetsen sketched the background of the men the Army has been using to run the roads, and noted that many of them had been presidents of railroads in civil life.

Last witness on April 5 was Thomas E. Bickers, secretary of the National Mediation Board, who said his group had averted hundreds of railroad strikes.

The Subcommittee then ended hearings and appealed to both parties to get together for a quick settlement of remaining differences.

On March 30 one of the unions, the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, accepted a plan to arbitrate differences over working conditions. The union, however, exempted from arbitration the issue of payment for coupling airhoses. The three other unions involved turned down the plan.

Committee Report

The Committee's report, finding both unions and roads "somewhat at fault," was submitted June 27 as S Rep 496 by Hubert H. Humphrey, a member of the Senate Labor and Public Welfare group.

"The time has come when neither the government nor the public can tolerate national railroad strikes or lock-outs for an extended period; and yet the strike constitutes the ultimate economic power of a labor union, and the right to strike is fundamental to democratic labor relations," the report stated.

The report said that, contrary to public thinking, the unions had never given a no - strike pledge. President Truman had criticized union leaders in February for going back on a no-strike agreement like a bunch of Russians, and the report took issue with his comparison.

It also criticized Steelman for becoming "a vulnerable target when he consented to become arbitrator of questions arisng out of" proposals for settling the controversy. "It is generally accepted that mediators in labor disputes will not. . . become arbitrators in the same dispute."

In a minority report by Robert A. Taft (R Ohio), H. Alexander Smith (R N.J.), and Richard M. Nixon (R Calif.), the hearings were called "inadequate." These three GOP members of the Committee questioned "the wisdom" of holding hearings or publishing a report on the dispute, while it remained unsettled.

Labor Espionage Charge

A majority report of the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee on Feb. 8, accused the Cities Service Corporation of Pennsylvania of conducting an espionage system, in the late 1940's, aimed at the Seafarers International Union. (For hearings, see CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, 1950, P. 280.)

The report said the company was attempting to prevent a union election on company ships and recommended an exhaustive investigation of alleged company unionism in the oil-tanker industry. It further recommended an amendment to the Taft-Hartley Act banning labor spying.

In a minority report, Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) and three other Republican members said they had not been able to find in the printed hearings evidence of company - dominated unionism in the industry or widespread existence of labor espionage.

On Feb. 5 Committee Chairman James E. Murray (D Mont.) introduced S 795, a bill to make labor espionage punishable by a $5,000 fine, two years imprisonment, or both. Co-sponsors were Matthew M. Neely (D W.Va.), Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.), Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.), Herbert H. Lehman (D N.Y.) and Wayne Morse (R Ore.). The bill received no action during 1951.

Murray, in introducing the bill, said, "It is the duty of Congress to take every possible step to promote stability of labor relations. . .and to prevent sabotage by excluding, so far as possible, criminals and subversives. Labor espionage. . .is an unfair labor practice under the Taft-Hartley Act. However, the Act carries no deterrent other than condemnation by the Boards and courts."

Taft said that if labor espionage were to be made a crime, similar action should be considered for union practices which the Act designates as unfair.

Bell System Report

After its Labor - Management Relations Subcommittee held hearings and submitted findings, the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare divided on whether relations between the Bell Telephone System and its employees were "bad."

The Subcommittee held hearings in 1950 (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, 1950, p. 280) Soon after the 1951 session began, it issued a majority report in which it termed Bell labor relations bad.

The Subcommittee report was released Feb. 19, and on Feb. 27 the full Committee also submitted a report, with seven Democrats and one Republican signing. Collective bargaining on a nationwide basis was recommended for the Bell System. "The record shows considerable evidence that bad labor-management relations exist in the Bell Telephone System," it said. "These relations appear to be getting worse."

A minority report held nationwide bargaining should not be imposed on the telephone industry without further study and regulation of such bargaining. It declared that relations were, when compared with those in other industries, "relatively good" and that labor and management were equally to blame for any difficulties in the telephone industry. It was signed by Republicans Robert A. Taft (Ohio), H. Alexander Smith (N.J.) and Richard M. Nixon (Calif.)

Harbor Safety

House and Senate Labor subcommittees held hearings in June, 1951, on bills (HR 4032 and S 991) to amend the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act to provide a system of safety rules for loading and unloading ships.

HR 4032 was introduced by Rep. John F. Kennedy (D Mass.); S 991 by Sens. James E. Murray (D Mont.), Lister Hill (D Ala.), Matthew M. Neely (D W.Va.), Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.), Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.), Herbert H. Lehman (D N.Y.), John O. Pastore (D R.I.), George D. Aiken (R Vt.), H. Alexander Smith (R N.J.), Wayne Morse (R Ore.) and Irving M. Ives (R N.Y.).

Speaking in support of the bills were representatives of Bureau of Labor Standards, International Longshoremen's Association, International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union.

Opponents represented were National Associaton of Stevedores, Lake Carriers Association, National Federation of American Shipping, Pittsburgh and Conneaut Dock Company, New York Shipping Association, Association of American Ship Owners. The Coast Guard's Office of Maritime Safety said the bill would result in duplication of Coast Guard authority.

Labor-Management Relations

Summary — The Subcommittee on Labor and Labor - Management Relations, one of three standing subcommittees of the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, in 1951 held hearings and issued reports on various labor matters.

Some of these were in connection with separate bills, while others were pursuant to S Res 140 of the 81st Congress and S Res 71 of the 82nd Congress, both calling for investigations in the field of labor-management relations.

Textile Unions

The Subcommittee on March 4, 1951, approved a report charging that five southern textile mills had conducted organized campaigns against union organization. The report was based on hearings held by the Subcommittee in 1950 (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, 1950, pp. 279-80).

Unionization in the industry, the report said, was losing ground mostly because of a campaign which "is being conducted in shocking violation of the Labor Management Relations (Taft-Hartley) Act." The Subcommittee asked that legislation be approved to modify the use of the National Guard and of state injunctions in labor disputes, to ban labor espionage, and to modify the Taft-Hartley Act.

On March 20, a minority report, signed by Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) and Richard M. Nixon (R Calif.) was filed with the full Committee. The minority said the majority report was "an amazing and unjustified slur" on the South and that it was "neither objective nor in any sense factual." It said further that the allegations against the mill owners had been rejected by the National Labor Relations Board.

Building Trades

The Subcommittee on Labor-Management Relations held hearings in August and September, 1951 on S 1973, introduced by Taft, Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.), Harry P. Cain (R Wash.) and Richard M. Nixon (R Calif.). The bill would amend the National Labor Relations Act to permit, in the building industry, union shop agreements requiring union membership within seven days, and without the election now required by the Taft-Hartley Act.

Among the organizations supporting the bill were AFL Building and Construction Union, Associated General Contractors of California, National Constructors Association, Tile Contractors Association of America. Among the opposing organizations were International Association of Machinists, National Association of Home Builders, Congress of Industrial Organizations.

Maritime Hiring Halls

The Subcommittee held hearings in June, 1951, on a bill (S 1044) to legalize union-run hiring halls in the maritime industry. Such halls are now banned by the Taft-Hartley Act. A bill to repeal the ban failed to get through Congress in 1950 (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, 1950, P. 272).

Organizations favoring the bill were: International Longshoremen and Warehousemen's Union, Pacific Coast Marine Firemen's Union, Radio Officers Union, and CIO Maritime Committee.

Warren G. Magnuson (D Wash.), sponsor, spoke in favor of the bill and introduced an amendment which he said would limit hiring halls to those parts of the industry which had them prior to Taft-Hartley.

Opposing the bill were former Sen. Joseph H. Ball (R Minn.) representing the Association of American Ship Owners, and spokesmen for the Inland Steel Corporation and Cleveland Tankers, Inc.

Bill Acted On

The only labor measure considered was an amendment to the Taft-Hartley Act, S 1959—P.L. 189 (see page 268.)

Universal Military Training and Service

S 1 — P.L. 51

Summary — Congress worked five months on bills to extend the military draft and to set up a program of Universal Military Training. Result was the Universal Military Training and Service Act which extended the draft until July 1, 1955, and also provided for steps designed to lead to UMT.

After lengthy committee hearings and floor debate, the Senate approved its UMTS bill March 9 on a 79-5 roll-call vote. The bill would have lowered the minimum draft age from 19 to 18, and would have extended the period of service from 21 to 24 months. The draft would have been made permanent, and a standby UMT would have been set up. (See page 309.)

The House also held extensive hearings. After four days of debate, it approved a modified UMTS bill April 13 on a roll-call vote of 372-44. The House version would have made the draft age 18 1/2 and extended service to 26 months. The draft program would have been kept active for three years. UMT would have been possible only after further action by Congress.

The two bodies then settled on a compromise bill, which the Senate approved on June 1 and the House on June 7. Draft age was set at 18 1/2; service at 24 months. The draft was extended four years, and UMT was accepted substantially on House terms. President Truman signed the bill into law on June 19.

Provisions—The provisions of the bill as it went to the President:

Title I — The Act is to be called the "Universal Military Training and Service Act".

Limits on the size of the armed forces are set at 837,000 persons for the Army, 666,882 for the Navy (including the Marine Corps) and 502,000 for the Air Force, but these limits are suspended until July 31, 1954.

Until that date, the limit shall be 5 million persons, including Army, Navy and Air Force.

Every male person between the ages of 18 and 26 shall register when told to do so by local boards.

Every male citizen and every male alien admitted for permanent residence between the ages of 18 1/2 and 26 shall be liable for training and service in the armed forces.

When the current emergency ends, all registered persons under 19 shall be liable for training in the National Security Training Corps.

Persons deferred during their 18th year still will be liable for later NSTC training.

Minimum physical standards for induction in the armed forces or the National Security Training Corps shall not be higher than those applied in January, 1945.

Persons inducted into the armed forces shall be given at least four months of basic training in this country.

Members of the armed forces may communicate freely with members of Congress.

Service in the armed forces shall be for a maximum of 24 months.

Persons 18 1/2 to 26 may enlist in the regular Army for 24 months.

Any enlisted reservist may volunteer for 24 months active duty.

Persons 18 - 26 years old may enlist in any branch of the armed forces provided they do not exceed local quotas.

Persons 17 years old may enlist under the quotas on written consent of their parents.

Persons 17 years old may volunteer for the NSTC on consent of their parents.

Service in the armed forces or NSTC plus reserve time shall total eight years.

After completion of active duty, assignment to reserve units must be accepted, barring undue personal hardship.

When the emergency ends, the President or Congress may cut or eliminate the period of active service (24 months) for all persons in an age group.

When service in the armed forces of 18-year-olds is cut, then those men will be liable for training in the NSTC.

Such training shall be for six months.

Creation of NSTC

A National Security Training Commission of five members, three civilian and two military, shall be appointed by the President on the advice and consent of the Senate.

Commission members shall serve for five-year staggered terms.

The Commission shall supervise NSTC training which shall be basic military training.

The Secretary of Defense shall designate the military departments to carry out the training.

Not later than four months following confirmation of the Commission members, the Commission shall submit to Congress a bill containing a broad plan for a NSTC program.

The Armed Services Committees of both houses shall study the bill and report on it to each house within 45 days.

The bill may then be called up for action by any Congressman and is subject to amendment.

Only after this plan has been approved by Congress and after the emergency is considered to have ended may persons be inducted into the NSTC.

NSTC training shall be in the United States.

No local board shall induct persons under 19 into the armed forces unless all persons available over that age have been inducted.

Older persons in the 18 1/2-19 year group shall be inducted first.

Persons serving in the Reserve Officers' Training Corps or similar groups may be deferred from the armed forces or NSTC.

Any number of students may be deferred by the President.

Key persons in industry or agriculture may be deferred by the President.

Persons with dependents may be deferred by the President.

Persons inducted into the armed forces or NSTC will be entitled to reemployment rights.

Persons deferred by the President as conscientious objectors will be required to perform civilian work contributing to the national health and safety.

No person shall be inducted in the armed forces after July 1, 1955, except persons previously deferred.

Service of recalled reservists shall be for 24 months.

Inactive reservists who served for one year during World War II may apply for separation after 17 months of service on recall.

No persons whose enlistment has been extended for 12 months under this Act shall have his enlistment extended again.

The Secretary of Defense is authorized to regulate sales and consumption of intoxicating liquors to members of the armed forces or NSTC near a military camp.

Title II — A total of 12,500 aliens may enlist in the regular Army.

Background

Although the Selective Service Act of 1948 was still on the books early in 1950, the draft had lapsed into disuse. The Act was scheduled to die June 24, 1950. Both houses passed extension Acts which provided that no men could be drafted without declaration by Congress or the President that a national emergency existed.

The House approved its bill May 24, 1950; the Senate acted June 22, 1950. The two bills were sent to a House-Senate conference for a compromise of differences.

Then, on June 25, 1950, war broke out in Korea. The President announced June 27 that American armed forces would be sent to the aid of South Korea. The House and Senate versions of the draft extension were still in a joint conference. The conferees immediately agreed on a bill that would extend the existing Selective Service Act for a year without substantial change.

The House approved the new bill June 27; the Senate followed suit June 28; and the President signed the bill June 30. (CQ Almanac Vol. VI, p. 294)

With respect to UMT, President Truman asked Congress in 1950 to enact legislation providing it for the nation's youths. And as it had done in previous years, the Congress ignored Mr. Truman's request at the beginning.

After the outbreak of the Korean war, however, Mr. Truman renewed his requests for UMT, and the Senate held hearings on a bill which would have authorized it. Before the measure was reported to the Senate by the Armed Services Committee, however, the President decided to ask Congress to postpone action until 1951. Congress complied. The House held no hearings on the program.

The UMT bill proposed in 1950 would have provided for compulsory training of every healthy youth between 17 and 20 years of age for a period of six months. After the six months had been served, the trainees would be given the option of joining a regular branch of the Service or the Reserves of any Service. Trainees would not be under military discipline during training, and could not be used for combat. A special civilian agency would administer the program.

A detailed "Code of Conduct" was also set forth in the bill. This Code would have supplanted the regular armed forces "Articles of War" where trainees were concerned. (CQ Almanac Vol. VI, P. 313.)

The 80th Congress had also considered UMT legislation in 1948 that was virtually identical with the legislation before the 81st Congress in 1950. But, as was the case with the later bill, the earlier version failed to become law, even though the topic received more action in 1948 than Congress gave it in 1950. (See CQ Almanac, Vol. IV, page 235, for history of 1948 legislation.)

In 1949, President Truman renewed earlier requests for UMT, but the new, Democratic-controlled Congress ignored them No hearings on UMT were held in either house.

SENATE

Hearings

The Senate Armed Services Preparedness Subcommittee Jan. 10 was handed a permanent program of compulsory military training for most 18-year-olds as the best answer to the emergency problem of building up and maintaining the armed services. The broad new proposals were outlined to the Subcommittee by Secretary of Defense George C. Marshall and his assistant, Mrs. Anna M. Rosenberg.

The Defense Department requests touched on the immediate drafting of 450,000 18-year-olds for 27 months service and probably deferment of veterans, husbands and fathers in the 19-through-26 year age bracket who were liable for induction under the existing draft law.

Under it, youths of 18 were required to register but could not be drafted until they reached 19. Their service after induction was limited to 21 months.

Other major points of the new plan included: 1. Probable deferment until graduation of students finishing high school and college courses; 2. All mentally and physically fit young men reaching 18 must complete from four to six months basic training, if called. About 75,000 yearly, however, would be deferred to take specialized college training; 3. The officer training program operated by the Navy would be expanded to include the other services. Youths accepted would be deferred after basic training; 4. Another 50,000 men in active military service would be sent to colleges during the first three years for specialized training.

Men inducted under the universal training program would receive $30 monthly pay for the first four months of basic training, the Senators were told. After that they would get the same pay as privates in the Army or similar lowest ranks in the other services, of $75 monthly.

President's Approval

Replying to a question by Subcommittee Chairman Lyndon B. Johnson (D Tex.), Mrs. Rosenberg said the program had "the complete approval" of President Truman. Both she and Marshall urged "immediate enactment" by Congress.

Marshall, in an exchange with Sen. Virgil M. Chapman (D Ky.) said that a "logical approach" to manpower needs would have avoided much grief and saved the nation billions of dollars in the past. He indicated that if universal service had been put into effect immediately after the last war the nation would have been spared "the great dilemma in which we find ourselves now." An enduring system is vital, the Secretary stressed.

The UMT program outlined by the Defense Department was a proposal for permanent legislation designed to provide the greatest long-term security with the lowest cost in men, Mrs. Rosenberg said. She said UMT would take young men at an age when their absence would be least upsetting to their homes and educational progress, and that by permitting a larger number of deferments than would otherwise be possible in the regular selective service pool of men between 19 and 26, the program would help give industry and agriculture continued access to engineers, technicians and skilled laborers.

Mrs. Rosenberg estimated 450,000 18-year-olds could be called in the first year under "present ceilings" on the size of the armed services.

She also estimated 1,050,000 young men would reach the age of 18 in the 12 months ending July 1, and said it might be possible to grant one-year deferments to those who had not attained the age of 18 years and four or five months at the time the proposal became law.

Young Soldiers Finest

Once the tense international situation eased, Marshall said, the President could reduce or cut back the "requirement for military service and retain the training features." The Secretary said young men of 18, 19 and 20 years "make our finest soldiers."

Sen. Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.) asked if the program contemplated that youths called into service would be sent abroad before they were 19 years old. Marshall replied that it was not anticipated that it would be necessary under prevailing conditions but said the Department preferred that it not be banned by law.

The Subcommittee was told that voluntary enlistments would continue but would be limited to a minimum of four years. It was explained that four years was regarded as the minimum term of service that was efficient considering training costs.

Mrs. Rosenberg also suggested that the armed services be allowed to build up their women's units to save manpower by a "full use of womanpower". A proposal by Sen. Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr. (R Mass.) that the U.S. train foreign troops also was under study, the Subcommittee was told.

Bill Introduced

On Jan. 17, the Johnson Subcommittee received the formal draft of the Defense Department's universal military training and service program. The draft was in legislative form.

Called the National Security Training Act of 1951, the bill (S 1), was to lower the draft age from 19 to 18 years, extend the term of service from 21 to 27 months and, later, require military training and service for all youths at 18.

A much stronger Defense Department affirmation of Department policy against sending 18-year-old inductees into combat before completion of the four-month basic training period was the main difference between the bill and Mrs. Rosenberg's outline.

In other details, the bill adhered closely to the earlier testimony given by Gen. Marshall and Mrs. Rosenbefg.

In a letter accompanying the bill, Marshall warned that "we are confronted with a world situation of such gravity and such unpredictability that we must be prepared for effective action, whether the challenge comes with the speed of sound or is delayed for a lifetime."

Gen. Marshall said the policy ban on sending 18-year-olds into combat "would virtually wipe out, except in a dire emergency, the probability that any young man brought into the service in the early days of the program would go into combat before he was 19."

An indefinite extension of the draft law with authority to induct men from 18 through 25 was urged before the Subcommittee Jan. 18 by Maj. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, director of the selective service system for 10 years.

Gen. Hershey said military manpower plans must be "based on the assumption that the nation will be in a critical period for an indefinite length of time and that all-out war will be a possibility for at least the immediate future."

Impact of the Pentagon requests on the nation's colleges and universities was a major factor the Subcommittee considered at its exhaustive hearings. Two noted educators were among those strongly endorsing the youth draft.

Educators Testify

Harold W. Dodds, president of Princeton University, and Karl T. Compton, chairman of the Corporation of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, both favored the Pentagon proposals Jan. 17 as the best answer to the nation's critical manpower needs.

"I favor it beyond all other proposals I have seen, or have been able to dream up," Dodds told the Senators.

On home front needs, Secretary of Labor Maurice J. Tobin testified Jan. 16 that defense production would require some 4,000,000 additional civilian workers to meet goals fixed by President Truman. Tobin told the Subcommittee that these demands could be filled by employing more women and older workers and by lengthening the work week—possibly to 48 hours in the key industries. The Labor Secretary also gave general support to the Administration plan for building up the armed services to 3,500,000 by lowering the present draft age.

Volunteers Allowed

Some draft eligibles got a break Jan. 15 when the President changed selective service regulations to permit 18-to-26-year-olds to volunteer for 21 months of military service. Previously it had been impossible for such youths to enter the military for the 21-month period until they actually were called in the draft.

Sen. Johnson emphasized Jan. 17 that the Subcommittee had reached no final decisions as a whole. He said the Senators were sitting "as judges, not advocates" and would let the testimony guide their judgments.

The nation's top soldier, sailor and airman each testified Jan. 19. Army Chief of Staff Gen. J. Lawton Collins endorsed the bill, saying the manpower build-up planned by the Army —seven more divisions by July 1— would require a larger personnel pool.

Air Force Chief of Staff Gen. Hoyt S. Vandenberg said most Air Force requirements would be filled by enlistments, but he backed the bill. He said service under the draft needed to be extended, as an airman at the end of 21 months is "just beginning" to learn his jobs.

Chief of Naval Operations Admiral Forrest P. Sherman also endorsed the bill and said the target of service strength might have to be boosted.

All three service chiefs continued their testimony in a secret session.

Gen. Omar N. Bradley, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, appeared before the Subcommittee Jan. 22. He said the bill was necessary "if this country is to survive".

He sketched the probable course of a future war—provided the country was prepared—as follows:

There might be an air attack on this country, but an invasion would be unlikely. Our defense against air attack should avert a complete disaster. In the meantime the armed services would launch a retaliatory attack from advance bases on the enemy. This should slow the enemy while we mobilized. The regulars would be built up in one to three months by use of already-trained reservists. The regulars plus reservists would serve as the base from which to expand sufficiently to defeat the enemy.

The flaw in this picture, Bradley said, would be the lack of trained reserve divisions. It takes 10 to 12 months to ready them for action. The bill, he said, would provide a continuous pool of trained reservists as well as an adequate standing armed force.

Bradley predicted that in the next 10 to 20 years nearly every young man must expect to serve a hitch in the armed services and then join the reserves.

Civilian Witnesses

Representatives of the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Reserve Officers Association, National Guard Association and Students for Democratic Action (an affiliate of Americans for Democratic Action) also appeared Jan. 22 and endorsed the bill in general.

A representative of the American Dental Association proposed to the Senate group Jan. 24 that at least 5,000 pre-dental students be deferred each year. A representative of the National Society of Professional Engineers said there must be at least 30,000 engineers graduated each year.

Ralph W. McDonald of the National Education Association told the Subcommittee that his organization opposed the draft of 18-year-olds and the proposed extension of the term of service. He said that the armed services could build up strength by taking married men without children and veterans with less than a year's service. The bill, he said, would "strike at the very heart of our system of education."

A spokesman for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People asked for an "anti-segregation" clause in the bill. He said that colored soldiers were being discriminated against in the Army and by off-post civilians.

A representative of the Scientific Manpower Advisory Committee of the National Security Resources Board backed the bill and urged safeguards to assure that a sufficient number of young men be kept in training for scientific and technical jobs.

A Yale University scientist testified Jan. 25 that mass hysteria and a rush of college men to enlist was wasting the nation's short supply of scientific manpower. J. S. Nicholas, director of Osborn Zoological Laboratory at Yale, asked Congress to order a minimum of 320,000 students into classes for the next four years at a rate of 80,000 a year.

Julius Ochs Adler, representing the National Emergency Committee of the Military Training Camps Association, told the Subcommittee Jan. 29 his group favored the bill. He said that opposition to draft of 18-year-olds was purely "emotional". He said military service would be a valuable experience for the youths.

James B. Carey, Congress of Industrial Organizations, testified that the CIO was "solidly behind the principle of a democratic system of training and service in periods of national emergency." On the same day, in Miami Beach, Fla., the American Federation of Labor executive council voted to support universal military training for the duration of the emergency.

Opposition Heard

Gilbert F. White, Friends Committee on National Legislation, opposed the bill, saying it was "unprecedented and undemocratic". Others opposing the bill Jan. 29 were representatives of the Mennonite Central Committee and the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom.

Two Senators, Edwin C. Johnson (D Colo.), and Lodge, proposed to the Subcommittee Jan. 30 that "foreign legions" be raised to obviate draft of 18-year-olds. Johnson's plan, he said, would raise an army of a million Germans, Poles and Czechs to serve in Europe. Lodge proposed a two-million man force to be recruited all over the world.

The Subcommittee heard testimony for the bill Jan. 30 from Harold Russell, Amvets, and Michael Straight, American Veterans Committee.

Dr. George F. Lull, American Medical Association, opposed a section of the bill which would have provided for "rehabilitation" of men unable to meet draft standards. Dr. Charles E. Odegaard, American Council of Learned Societies, asked that men be deferred to be trained in psychological warfare. A representative of the Methodist Church Board of Temperance asked for a ban on the sale of liquor to trainees.

General of the Army Dwight D. Eisenhower testified in support of the bill Feb. 2. He told the Subcommittee that, as a military man, it made little difference to him whether men were called at 18 or 19 as long as a sufficient number were called. But, as a college president, he continued, he thought it would be less disrupting to their education and employment if youths were called at 18.

Eisenhower also endorsed the proposed extension of service from 21 to 27 months. He said it was desirable and economical for the armed serviced to get about two years' service out of each man. This could be done in a 27-month hitch, he said, allowing time for induction and discharge.

The General also advocated tightening of draft exemption standards, the use of more women in the armed services, a small "foreign legion" and better use of men in the services.

As the Senate bill stood when the Committee began studying it for amendment, it contained no reference to civilian manpower.

Committee

The full Senate Armed Services Committee approved Feb. 14 the bill (S 1) providing for a permanent program of Universal Military Training and Service. Final vote was unanimous.

The bill had been approved by the Preparedness Subcommittee Feb. 9 by a 7 to 1 vote. Wayne Morse (R Ore.) opposed it in Subcommittee but later voted with the full Committee to send the bill to the floor where he said he would try to add amendments.

As approved by the full Committee, the bill contained the following major provisions:

Universal service and training would be made a permanent program.

Inductees would serve eight years: 26 months active service and training (including two months leave), and the remainder of the time in one of the reserve components.

Men 18 through 25 years old would be subject to call.

Those 18 years old would not be called until all available men in the 19-through-25-year group who were non-veterans with not more than one dependent were called.

Oldest 18-year-olds would be taken first.

Up to 25,000 aliens a year would be enlisted in the regular armed forces over the next five years.

A five-man civilian commission would be set up to select 75,000 men a year to complete either technical or liberal arts college courses after finishing their four-month basic training. These men would resume their military service after graduation.

The Secretary of Defense would be authorized to terminate present exemption from the draft of National Guard recruits.

The President or Congress would be authorized to limit service to four-to-six months basic training, at the end of the present emergency. This peacetime training would be under control of a five-man commission to be made up of three civilians and two military men.

Draftees would receive $30 a month during their four-month basic training.

No inductee would be sent into combat without at least four months of basic training.

Morse Amendments Lost

Several amendments were rejected by the full Committee. One, by Morse, was to keep the existing term of service of 21 months. Chairman Richard B. Russell (D Ga.) was the only other supporter of the amendment. On another 2-11 vote a Morse amendment to set the term at 24 months was rejected.

Morse amendments to double the number of college deferments and to set the lower limit of draft age at 18 1/2 were rejected 1 - 12.

Preparedness Subcommittee Chairman Johnson (D Tex.) said the bill was intended to provide manpower for a 3.5 million-man Armed Force plus a constant pool of trained reservists for the future.

Defends Call At 18

William F. Knowland (R Calif.) spoke in favor of the bill Feb. 28. He defended the draft of 18-year-olds, saying few if any of them could possibly see active service before they were 19.

He added further that if the world picture did not change substantially, "it is quite possible that no significant number of 18-year-olds will be inducted in fiscal 1952" (by June 30, 1952). The 18-year-old draft provision was needed, he told the Senate, since the bill "seeks to meet the issues on a long-term basis."

Sen. Johnson (D Colo.) offered an amendment to separate the draft sections of the bill from the UMTS sections. The rest of the Feb. 28 session was spent trying to reach a decision on when the Senate could begin voting on amendments to the bill. Morse asked that a vote be put off until March 7. Majority Leader Ernest W. McFarland (D Ariz.) wanted a final vote by March 2. After several delaying quorum calls, the Senate failed to agree and adjourned.

On March 5 Morse was defeated on his first amendment — to set the minimum draft age at 18 1/2 years. Morse had originally sought to limit the draft to men over 19, but on March 5 he modified his amendment.

Morse said that under his amendment, the men would be available for duty at 18 years, nine months, as the induction period took three months. Lyndon B. Johnson said the amendment would slash by three-quarters the 545,000 men to be available in the 18 - 19 age group and would make it difficult for the armed services to maintain necessary strength.

The Senate rejected the amendment on a 31-55 roll-call vote. (For all votes, see pages 309 - 314.)

Next Morse called up an amendment to reduce the length of service under the bill from 26 to 21 months. Johnson said the amendment was "merely another method of hacking at our armed forces at a time when the danger is overwhelming and the need is great."

Serve 24 Months

Sen. Russell offered an amendment to set the term of service at 24 months. Morse then modified his amendment to call for 24 months. His modified amendment was approved on voice vote.

The next Morse amendment was to set the maximum mandatory service for reservists with six months wartime service at 18 months. He said it would ease the burden on men who had already served their country. Johnson said the plan would be a "strait-jacket" on the armed forces, and added that a more workable plan was being studied. The amendment was rejected on a standing vote.

Morse then sought to increase the number of deferments for schooling from 75,000 to 150,000. The amendment was rejected on a roll-call vote 3-67.

Chairman Robert A. Taft (Ohio) said Feb. 21 after a two-hour discussion of universal military training proposals by the Senate Republican Policy Committee that there probably would be no GOP party stand on the issue. Taft said plans were to discuss the legislation at a full conference of the 47 Republican Senators at a later date, but that "it's a very confusing proposition".

Floor Action

The Senate opened debate on S 1 on Feb. 27. Chairman Johnson of the Preparedness Subcommittee of the Senate Armed Services Committee, led Administration support of the measure. Johnson told the Senate that "the two things that America must have now are men for the moment and reserves for the future." The UMTS bill, he said, "is designed to meet these two compelling needs".

Johnson supported the bill's reduction of the draft age from 19 to 18, saying, "If we do not authorize the military to take the men between 18 and 19, the only recourse that we can follow in meeting the demands for military manpower would be to require that the veterans of World War II, many of whom were called into the service at age 18, serve again."

Sen. Saltonstall also supported the bill. He said that to live up to America's responsibilities and to maintain our strength, "our young men today are asked to learn the basic training that is the foundation of a good soldier, airman or sailor". He said the bill would provide an "adequate trained reserve" which did not exist at the time.

Sen. Morse spoke for the "minority opposition", saying that if the bill "should be submitted to a referendum vote of the American people, it would be overwhelmingly rejected."

Morse outlined what he said were defects in the UMTS bill and said he would offer amendments to correct them. He made the following criticisms:

The bill's assumption that the 3,462,000-man armed force was needed was false. No more than 3 million were needed or could be absorbed.

Twenty-six months service by draftees was excessive. Twenty-one months would be sufficient if the men were used efficiently.

Leave time should not be optional —it is either needed or not needed.

Veteran reservists should not serve more than 18 months mandatory active duty.

Universal Military Training should not be postponed until after the emergency.

Inductees and enlistees should be distributed qualitatively among the branches of the armed forces.

The bill did not contain a revised Reserve program.

Deferments for schooling should total more than 75 thousand annually.

On March 6 Morse offered an amendment to set at 36 months the maximum time of any enlistment. He said it would prevent the services from "hoarding" manpower. The amendment was rejected 14-77.

Vote Strength Ceiling

Morse's next amendment would have set a ceiling of 3.5 million men on the strength of the combined armed forces. He told the Senate the Department of Defense had estimated a need for 3,462,000 men, and that Congress should set a ceiling just above that figure.

Johnson said there should be no ceiling on American forces, as "we could not put a ceiling on Stalin and on the hordes of communism." Taft said the United States could not, in time of peace, pay for an army larger than 3.5 million men. Johnson replied that, if necessary, the Appropriations Committee could set a ceiling on the services at some future date.

Brien McMahon (D Conn.) offered a substitute amendment setting the ceiling at 5 million. Morse called this a "mere gesture". It was defeated on roll-call vote 32-56.

A. Willis Robertson (D Va.) then moved to set the ceiling at 4 million. He said it would be an effective ceiling, but at the same time would give the Pentagon a working leeway. This amendment was substituted for the original Morse amendment on a 49-41 roll-call vote. Then Robertson's amendment was accepted in its own right on a 49-41 roll-call vote.

Herbert H. Lehman (D N.Y.) offered an amendment to provide protection under federal law to all members of the armed forces on active duty. The effect of the amendment, he said, would be to make a federal offense any attack, intimidation or interference with soldiers in the performance of their duties. Such protection, he said, is given to many other classes of federal agents.

Pat McCarran (D Nev.) said that such a law would lead to many legal complications. He moved to table the Lehman amendment. The motion carried 57-30.

The Senate then agreed to complete action on the bill the following day, allowing 30 minutes debate on all amendments. The death of Sen. Chapman resulted in adjournment of the Senate March 8, however, so final action was put off until March 9.

When the Senate met that day, it rejected seven amendments. They were: Two to limit the bill to extension of the Selective Service Act (roll calls of 20-68 and 18-64); terminate the entire program after four years (30-58); eliminate deferments for 75,000 college students annually (21-68); create a "yard-stick" for college deferments (voice vote); and two (ruled out on points of order) which William Langer (R N.D.) said would have conscripted dollars.

Accepted March 9 was an amendment directing the Senate Armed Services Committee to review the program five years after enactment (voice vote).

Then, by a vote of 79-5, the Senate approved S 1.

Senate Bill Provisions

As passed by the Senate, the UMTS bill would have:

Lowered minimum draft age from 19 to 18 years.

Directed that each inductee be given at least four months basic training before being sent overseas.

Set period of service at 24 months.

Required persons to serve a total of eight years, including active and reserve time.

Authorized standard armed forces pay and allowances for all inductees, except 18-year-olds serving with the National Security Training Corps, who were authorized pay of $30 a month plus full allowances.

Authorized the President or Congress (by concurrent resolution) to find that any existing emergency has abated and the full draft is not needed. Then 18-year-olds shall be liable for induction into the National Security Training Corps for not less than four months basic training, to be followed by 20 months regular service and six years Reserve service.

Authorized the President to appoint a five-man National Security Training Commission, to be composed of three civilians and two military men, to set up the NSTC and designate the federal agency to carry out the training.

Directed that there be no discrimination in race or color in carrying out the Act.

Directed local draft boards not to call 18-year-olds for the draft unless the pool of men over 18 is exhausted and not to call younger 18-year-olds when older 18-year-olds are available.

Permitted up to 75,000 persons annually through June 30, 1954, to be deferred to study any course "in the national interest"; such students to resume their full active and reserve service after graduation, and to be selected by a five-man, bipartisan, civilian commission.

Authorized deferment of men in the senior ROTC and similar courses who agree to serve after graduation.

Provided that high school students under 19 may be deferred until graduation or until they become 19; while college students may be deferred until the end of the academic year.

Authorized conscientious objectors to be assigned to civilian work in lieu of induction.

Directed that all persons called be given full re-employment rights.

Directed the House and Senate Armed Services Committees to review the bill after four years.

Set a ceiling on the active-duty strength of the armed forces at 4 million men.

Authorized induction of 25,000 aliens a year for five years.

HOUSE

Hearings

The House Armed Services Committee opened hearings Jan. 23 on a companion bill (HR 1752) to the same Administration manpower training and service program the Senate group already had before it. First witness before the House group was also Gen. George C. Marshall, Secretary of Defense.

Marshall said the draft would have to be extended along lines in the bill if Korean replacements were to be found and if the armed services were to meet their future manpower goals.

Marshall said it took several months to train a soldier for combat. Men drafted when the Korean fighting began first reached the Army in September. They had been training ever since, he said, and the first of the "normal graduates of basic training" were becoming available for combat.

Marshall said that if a universal military training program had been in existence before Korea, "we would have been so powerful nobody would have threatened us."

The Secretary defended the bill's provision for $30-a-month pay for basic trainees under the program compared with $75 for already-inducted trainees. He said he personally had insisted on the lower pay as it would make the whole program economically more feasible and would be no hardship on the inductee.

Would Provide Security

Assistant Secretary of Defense Anna Rosenberg told the House Committee Jan. 24 that the bill would provide the nation its "greatest long-term security at the lowest cost in men and money". She also said that all persons including athletes, with slight physical defects would be drafted and would serve in some limited classification.

Mrs. Rosenberg, in response to questions, told the House Committee Jan. 25 that the Defense Department was going to lower its physical and mental qualifications for military service "as far as security will permit". Later she told reporters the 799,000 men who had been rejected for physical and mental reasons would be re-appraised.

She estimated that under the revised standards the armed forces could take in about 150,000 limited service men.

In a related development on the House floor, Rep. Adam C. Powell (D N.Y.), told the House Jan. 24 that he would drop his fight against segregation in the armed services for the duration.

Hearings Continue

Several persons testified against the bill Jan. 26. Among them were Frederick J. Libby, National Council for the Prevention of War; Mrs. George O. Bullock, Women's Christian Temperance Union; George Harper, National Conference of Methodist Youth; and John M. Swomley, National Council Against Conscription.

Mrs. Rosenberg told the Committee Jan. 30 that the Department opposed a draft of persons over 25 at the time. She said they might be too old to fight after they were trained. She added, however, that the time might come when older men might have to be mobilized.

Selective Service Director Lewis B. Hershey told the Committee Jan. 30 that a draft of men over 26 would not fulfill the aim of a long-term preparedness program. He said the emergency might last for years, and a trained manpower pool could be maintained only by starting with young men. Hershey also said that healthy, single, non-veterans 26 and 27 years old would be too few in number to be "of practical value".

Chairman Carl Vinson (D Ga.) told Mrs. Rosenberg Jan. 30, that the Committee wanted the Pentagon to prepare by March 1 a new broad reserve program for all three services. Vinson pointed out that the bill would require reserve time for each trainee and added that the present programs were "in terrible shape".

Mrs. Rosenberg said new reserve and National Guard programs were being prepared and would be cleared with reserve associations and state governors and be ready to send to Congress in six months. Vinson said the Committee would need at least a tentative program before March 1.

Maj. Gen. Hershey resumed testimony before the House group Feb. 5 on HR 1752.

Committee members pressed Hershey for additional sources of manpower that would not include 18-year-olds, as contemplated by the bill. Hershey said the Defense Department had the following sources in mind:

200,000 men from the non-veteran 19-26-year age group (mostly married men without children).

85,000 men from re-examination of the group which failed the mental test — sometimes on purpose.

250,000 men for limited service from 4-F's whose physical defects are not completely incapacitating.

Says Youths Needed

Hershey insisted, however, that 18-year-olds would have to be taken if the armed services were to be increased to the announced strength of 3.5 million men. He said an order to induct men with only one dependent had already been drawn by Selective Service and was being cleared with other federal agencies.

Hershey opposed suggestions that the bill be amended to forbid sending men under 19 into combat zones. He said such a ban would have to be lifted in case of war and would be a let-down to the youths.

Committee Chairman Vinson said that men in the National Guard and Active Reserve units should be subject to call by the draft. He said many of these men joined the Guard or reserves to avoid the draft. Hershey replied that he could not assume that these units would not be called to active duty.

Hershey told the Committee he favored putting 4-F athletes through basic military training to see if they could be used. Committee members said many athletes were classified 4-F during the last war but continued to compete in strenuous athletics.

The Committee halted public hearings Feb. 6 so that the bill could be studied in executive session.

New Bill Introduced

On Feb. 22, however, Chairman Vinson introduced a new bill (HR 2811) which compromised certain of the provisions of the original measure (HR 1752) on which the group had held hearings.

The compromise also varied somewhat from the Senate's bill (S 1). As introduced, the new House bill called for:

Lowering the draft age to 18 1/2 years (from 19).

Increasing length of service to 26 months (it was 21 months).

Require a four-month period of basic training.

Originally the Pentagon asked for induction of youths at 18 with the understanding they would not be sent overseas, except in dire emergency, until they had completed 4 to 6 months of basic training. The provision in the House compromise for at least four months basic training would, Committee members said, assure that no youth go into combat until he was 19 years old.

The Senate's Committee-approved bill would authorize induction at 18 only after local draft boards exhausted their supply of men available in the 19 through 25 brackets. The 18-year-olds then would be called, with the oldest to be drafted first.

The House version did not include the Senate bill's provision to defer 75,000 of the 18-year-old group annually for college study.

A round of hearings on the new bill was started.

Might Raise Goal

General Omar N. Bradley, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, answered Committee questions Feb. 26. He said the House bill would fill manpower needs for the immediate future, but said the goal of 3.5 million men might have to be raised.

Our European commitments, he said, might affect manpower needs, depending on the role played by European armies. He said the Defense Department would rather draft 18-year-olds than take combat veterans, who, he said, were getting too old for maximum efficiency.

Bradley implied that he would not oppose the compromise minimum draft age suggested by the Committee. But the following day he and Defense Secretary Marshall announced that they were standing pat on their request for an 18-year-old age minimum and would oppose the Committee figure of 18 1/2.

Army Chief of Staff Gen. J. Lawton Collins testified Feb. 28. He also said there was a possibility that the armed forces might have to be enlarge beyond 3.5 million men in six months. "And then," he said, "we will have to tap the 18-year-olds."

Admiral Forrest P. Sherman, Chief of Naval Operations, and General Hoyt S. Vandenberg, Chief of Staff of the Air Force, appeared briefly Feb. 28. They objected to a mandatory lowering of physical and mental standards for inductees to levels of Jan., 1945.

The three Chiefs of Staff said that a plan was then being formulated in the Defense Department to divide new men in the armed forces among the different branches so that all services would have to take a fair share of the less desirable recruits.

Need Held "Big"

Secretary Marshall supported the draft of 18-year-olds March 1. He said there was little difference in capabilities of 18 and 18 1/2-year-olds but that "as far as a need for men in the armed services is concerned there is a big difference."

He said there wouldn't be an adequate margin if the armed forces had to expand suddenly from 3 1/2 million to four million men unless 18-year-olds were subject to call. Combat-veteran reservists serving on active duty could not be returned to civilian life unless 18-year-olds were drafted, he said.

Mrs. Rosenberg supported the 18-year-olds draft. She said the training would prepare them for "some sudden emergency" that would force them into combat.

Maj. Gen. Hershey told the group March 1 that the 18-year-old draft was needed. He said it would be possible to find 1.2 million additional men if childless husbands were taken along with 164,000 men who were 4-F. But to maintain a 3.5-million-man armed force, he said, about 175,000 replacements would be required each month.

Chairman Vinson said the Senate draft bill would, for all practical purposes, bar the draft of 18-year-olds, but that the House version would permit taking of 18 1/2-year-olds. He suggested to Hershey that the House "half a loaf" would be better than the Senate bill.

Rep. Howard W. Smith (D Va.) suggested March 1 that a provision be included in the bill to strip striking union members and their unions of bargaining rights if strikes were called in key defense plants.

Representatives of the armed services testified March 2 on the Reserve Officers Training Corps. They said the program was being substantially expanded. Chairman Vinson suggested that more emphasis should be put on the Officer Candidate School programs.

On March 5 the bill was opposed by representatives of the Catholic War Veterans, the National Grange and the National Council Against Conscription. Criticism of the bill was continued March 6 by a spokesman for the Ohio Council of Churches and by Mrs. Ralph L. Holland, United Council of Church Women.

Mrs. Holland said her group "views with alarm the growing militarism in our country and its implications for our democratic way of life". She said she opposed "any permanent military conscription".

William G. Mather, American Baptist Convention, said March 6 that his organization was convinced that "Congress can establish national security by other means than peacetime compulsory military training and conscription."

Committee

The House Armed Services Committee approved its military manpower bill March 15. The provisions were those of HR 2811, as amended by the Committee; but the measure was given the number of the UMTS bill passed March 9 by the Senate —S 1.

The House group voted approval 32-3. Here were the major developments during the Committee's final, closed-door sessions:

On March 12 the group voted to draft 18 1/2-year-olds for 26 months service, defeated a move by Rep. Leslie C. Arends (R Ill.) to split the bill into separate draft and UMTS portions, reaffirmed that decision by a close 14-17 vote, and decided to put the UMTS program under a mixed civilian-military commission, instead of a purely civilian one. It voted also to lower mental and physical induction standards, and to require that four months basic training be given inductees below 19 before they could be sent into combat.

On March 13, the group voted to let the President determine deferments for college students, and rejected, 14-21, a proposal that a rider disapproving the troops-to-Europe program be hooked onto the draft-UMTS bill.

On March 15, the group balloted 20-13 to release World War II veterans when they have been on active duty with reserve components for 12 months after the outbreak of the Korean war. The Committee retained by a 16-16 tie vote a provision giving Congress the right to suspend draft inductions and UMTS when it wished.

Ceiling Lifted

Then the Committee knocked off the 4 million man limit HR 2811 set on the size of the armed forces. The vote to do this was 18-15, on a motion by Chairman Vinson. Previously the Committee rejected a 3.2 million-man ceiling proposed by Dewey Short (R Mo.) by a 9-24 vote. A 3.5 million-man ceiling proposed by Walter Norblad (R Ore.) also was defeated.

The Committee also wrote in an amendment giving draftees a choice of serving in racially segregated or nonsegregated units. This provision, offered by Rep. Arthur Winstead (D Miss.), was to permit a draftee, when he registers, to write in whether he has a preference, and would require respect for his choice as far as military necessity permitted. The vote on the amendment was 21 to 12.

Floor Action

The House opened four days of debate on the Universal Military Training and Service bill (S 1) April 3. Carl Vinson (D Ga.), chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, led supporters of the bill. Dewey Short (R Mo.), ranking minority member of the Committee, led the opposition.

"We must meet the present emergency," Vinson told the House April 3, "and at the same time we must establish a long-range preparedness and training program. That is what this bill does."

The UMT provisions of the bill, Vinson said, were left open for approval by future Congresses. After the emergency, he explained, a civilian commission would draw up a UMT program for approval by Congress.

Short told the House that the bill would make the United States "a slave country to goosestep to the commands and strutting of arrogant men who like to exercise power."

"We must, under present conditions, continue the draft until such changes occur that will warrant the repeal of it," Short said. "But peacetime universal military training and service is a permanent thing here, and that is what the sponsors want—to militarize the country."

Graham A. Barden (D N.C.) told the House April 4 that he would offer as a substitute for S 1 his own draft bill (HR 3364) which would eliminate the UMT provisions, set the period of service at 24 months and keep the minimum draft age at 19 years.

Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Tex.) warned the House that "we are in greater danger of an expanded war today than we have been at any time since the close of the World War in 1945." He said that large numbers of troops, "not all of them Communist Chinese" were massing against us in Korea and Manchuria.

On April 5 Vinson said he would support an amendment to the bill which would allow Congress to modify any UMT plan submitted for approval. Under the Committee-approved bill, Congress could only accept or reject a plan submitted in compliance with the measure by the UMT Commission.

MacArthur Letter

During debate April 5 Minority Leader Joseph W. Martin, Jr. (R Mass.), read a letter to the House which he said had been written to him March 20 by Gen. Douglas A. MacArthur.

The letter stated that MacArthur's views on the Korean war are that the United States should follow the "conventional pattern of meeting force with maximum counter-force. . ." The letter said that the "utilization of Chinese forces on Formosa is in conflict with neither logic nor this tradition."

MacArthur said that "here in Asia is where the Communist conspirators have elected to make their play for global conquest. . .if we lose the war to communism in Asia the fall of Europe is inevitable, win it and Europe most probably would avoid war. . ."

The MacArthur letter later proved to be the spark which set off the chain of events leading to the ouster of the General from his Far East commands and then to the extended Senate investigation into Far East policy. (See p. 242.)

The House resumed consideration of the bill April 10 after a weekend layoff. General debate had come to an end and the bill was open to amendment. Vinson called up two amendments which had been approved by his Committee over the weekend in secret session.

The amendments, in effect, specified that a further act of Congress would be necessary before a universal military training program could be launched. The first amendment directed the proposed National Security Training Commission to submit a UMT plan to Congress not less than six months after the NSTC was formed.

The second amendment provided that the House and Senate Armed Services Committees should within 45 days report a UMT bill which could then be called up for action by any member of either house. The bill itself would not have to follow Commission recommendations. The measure would then have to pass both houses and be signed into law before UMT could be launched.

Vinson said the amendments would safeguard the right of Congress to select a UMT program it liked, but at the same time would insure that some sort of plan was considered on the floor. Short called the Vinson plan "ludicrous," and said that "Congress, this afternoon in April, 1951, is attempting to pass legislation that will authorize Congress at some future date to pass a bill."

But both amendments carried on voice vote.

An amendment by Charles H. Elston (R Ohio) to end any UMT program by July 1, 1954, was rejected by the House April 11. Elston said the UMT section of the bill should have a terminal date the same as did the draft provisions.

Time Limit Later

Vinson said the Elston amendment would require a halt to a UMT program that had not been considered, much less approved, by Congress. He said it would be proper to consider a time limit when the UMT plan itself was considered.

The amendment lost on teller vote 116-186.

Paul J. Kilday (D Tex.) called up an amendment to drop the special "IQ test" deferment plan for students. The amendment specified that no "test . . . selection system . . . or any other means conducted . . . by any agency . . . of the federal government" could be used as a basis for mandatory deferment of students.

Kilday said such tests could be used as a guide by local boards but added that the amendment "will insure by law that students will be deferred no differently from anyone else entitled to deferment." The amendment was agreed to on voice vote.

Barden offered his substitute bill April 11. The substitute was designed to drop UMT and extend the existing draft law, lengthening service from 21 to 24 months.

"Why can we not deal with the emergency problem that is now confronting us?" Barden asked the House in urging extension of the draft. "Why should we drag in this all-controversial UMT now and not even one-third do the job?"

Troops-to-Europe

The Barden substitute then was set aside and debate turned to an amendment to it offered by Harry L. Towe (R N.J.) banning assignment of drafted troops to Europe in implementation of the North Atlantic Treaty without approval by both houses of Congress. (See p. 220). Towe said his amendment would leave Gen. Eisenhower free to use men who had enlisted or who had been drafted under the existing law, but would limit use of newly drafted troops and would affirm Congress' right to rule on use of troops in foreign countries.

Melvin Price (D Ill.) told the House that the "authority of the Commander-in-Chief to deploy his troops cannot be limited to a geographic area." Leslie C. Arends (R Ill.) answered that the amendment had one purpose — "to give the American people a direct voice on the question whether American troops are to be sent abroad to be integrated into an international army under the North Atlantic Pact."

Vinson said the amendment was "absurd". He added, "It says that a handful of drafted men cannot be sent overseas until Congress passes a resolution, but as to the great bulk of the National Guard, the reservists, and the volunteers, the President has the authority to send them over."

The amendment was voted down 168-192.

Price moved to strike out of the Barden substitute a provision allowing draftees to request assignment in racially segregated units. The provision, sponsored by Arthur Winstead (D Miss.) had been added to the original bill in the Committee and had been accepted by Barden.

William L. Dawson (D Ill.) told the House, "If there is any place in the United States where there should not be any second class citizens, it is in the armed services. All men are made in the image of God. I didn't make myself black any more than you made yourselves white. The greatest argument the Soviet Union is using among the colored races of the world is your treatment of men like me — a Negro."

Winstead said his provision was necessary because if the Army had to take a substantial number of Negroes and the troops had to live together, there would be race riots.

The Price motion carried 178 to 126, and the Winstead provision was dropped from the Barden substitute.

Later, on April 12, the Barden substitute itself was rejected on a teller vote, 140-232.

The original bill was then subjected to a flurry of amendments April 13. Most were beaten down. A motion by Short to send the bill back to Committee was defeated on roll-call vote 121-296.

The measure then was approved on roll-call vote 372-44. Thirty-seven Republicans and seven Democrats opposed the bill.

CONFERENCE

The House and Senate versions of the UMTS bill were sent to a joint conference committee April 17 for a compromise of differences. The conferees worked in closed session until April 27. Then leaders of the respective House and Senate delegations, Rep. Carl Vinson (D Ga.) and Sen. Richard B. Russell (D Ga.), announced that work would be suspended for two weeks. They pointed out that the MacArthur hearings were taking up the time of all Senate conferees.

The group later resumed work between MacArthur hearing sessions. They reached agreement on all provisions May 28 after the knottiest problem — UMT — was worked out in line with the House-approved program. The conference made the following decisions on major provisions:

The draft was extended until July 1, 1955. The House had set the limit at July 1, 1954; the Senate had voted a permanent draft.

Minimum draft age was dropped from 19 to 18 1/2 years. The Senate bill had specified 18 years; the House version 18 1/2 years.

All available men in the 19 - 26-year group would have to be inducted before any in the 18-year group. This provision was in both bills.

Register at 18

All men would register at age 18 and be classified by local boards before they reached 18 1/2. Both bills required registration at 18.

Manpower limit on the armed forces would be five million men. Senate had voted four million; House had set no limit.

Draftees would serve 24 months. Senate called for 24 months; House voted 26 months.

The Secretary of Defense would be permitted to regulate the sale of beer and liquor to members of the armed services near military posts. The House bill had contained this provision.

The President would be authorized to appoint immediately a five-man, bipartisan National Security Training Commission to plan a UMT program. This provision was similar to that in the House bill; the Senate version called for an automatic peacetime UMT to be set in motion by such a Commission.

Within four months after its confirmation by the Senate, the Commission would submit a UMT plan to the Armed Services Committees of both House and Senate. Similar to the House bill.

The Committees could amend the plan, and send it to the floor for debate and action within 45 days. Similar to House bill.

UMT trainees ordinarily would serve when 18 years old, but they could be called as late as age 35. House bill set minimum age at 18 1/2, Senate at 18.

Training would last six months, to be followed by 7 1/2 years reserve time. House called for six months military training with 5 1/2 years reserve; Senate voted four months basic training, 20 months regular service and then six years reserve service.

UMT program could be called into existence by either the President or Congress when the present emergency abated.

Inactive and unpaid Reservists called to active duty for the Korean War would be released at their own request after 17 months of service provided they had one year of World War II service. The House had voted 12 months of service; the Senate 24 months.

Senate Final Action

The Senate acted first on the compromise bill. Russell moved May 31 to take up the bill, but Francis Case (R S.D.) objected, saying that Senators had had no opportunity to study printed copies of the bill and the conference report. Russell explained that the Memorial Day recess delayed printing, but agreed to pass over the bill.

It was called up again June 1 and was approved, after brief discussion, on a voice vote. One Senator, Joseph R. McCarthy (R Wis.) said he would have voted against the bill if it had been put to a roll-call vote.

McCarthy said his opposition was a protest against State Department policy which, he said, would condemn American soldiers to "death or permanent slavery" but would make no use of troops from Formosa, Greece, Turkey, Spain and Western Germany in the fight against Communism.

George A. Smathers (D Fla.) criticized the bill because the "universal military training provision was effectively scuttled in the conference."

House Final Action

Final House approval came June 7 on roll-call vote, 339-41, after Vinson declared that the conference had agreed substantially to the original House-passed provisions. Both parties supported the measure, Democrats 191-9, Republicans 147-32.

President Truman signed the new UMTS law June 19. It became Public Law No. 51.

Secretary of Defense George C. Marshall, present at the signing, hailed the bill as a "step of historic significance". He said the measure would enable the U.S. to face the "uncertainties of an explosive international situation with the knowledge that we can be strong militarily without having to imperil our security economically." Marshall added that he was confident that Congress would enact the necessary supporting legislation for the Universal Military Training program.

The President, after signing the bill, sent to the Senate the nominations of five men to constitute the National Security Training Commission set up in connection with the UMT. The nominees were: Former Rep. James W. Wadsworth (R N.Y.) for a three-year term; Adm. Thomas C. Kinkaid, U.S.N. retired, for a four-year term; Lt. Gen. Raymond S. McLain, U.S.A., of St. Rose, Ky., for five years; William L. Clayton, former Undersecretary of State, of Texas, for two years; and Karl T. Compton, former Massachusetts Institute of Technology president, for two years. (See p. 285.)

GROUP STANDS

Some traditional lobby positions on the draft were modified as the 82nd Congress hammered out an extension of selective service and a framework for possible future establishment of a precedent-shattering Universal Military Training program.

Most organizations, including many which in former years were averse to any type of military conscription, in 1951 accepted extension of selective service in principle. They concentrated on such issues as the induction of 18-year-olds, deferments of students and others, and institution, for the first time in the United States, of UMT.

A number of organizations, which in the past fought military conscription, said that they would accept not only a temporary draft for military action but also a temporary draft for military training not coupled with service.

But most emphasized that they would approve UMT for the emergency period only. Defense Department officials were equally emphatic that during the emergency UMT should not be started. The Pentagon wanted UMT approved for institution on a permanent basis after the emergency was over.

Other groups either backed or bucked UMT as such and held to traditional positions.

The Pentagon-proposed induction of 18-year-olds stirred vigorous organizational reactions on both sides of the fence and stimulated voluminous letter mail to Congress, mostly from individuals opposed.

Some opponents of the proposals said they had polled the public and found that controversy over the induction of youths at 18 helped create a situation in which most people did not know that the same bill also contained permanent peacetime UMT. Pollsters differed on what they found to be the public view of these issues.

Proposals to defer, after four months of basic military training, 75,000 students yearly for three years so that they could continue studies in key professional specialties also stirred vigorous contention.

This was split several ways: Was such a plan undemocratic, as some said, or essential, as others claimed? Were 75,000 deferments enough?

Should this program expire in three years? Should it be confined to specialties directly linked to military mobilization needs — to train men able to develop weapons — or should men be selected on the basis of individual merit regardless of subject - matter?

Other issues dropped in the lap of Congress by the Pentagon and by various organizations ran the gamut: Protection of inductees from liquor and vice, protection of Negro inductees from assault, segregation in the armed forces, length of training, job rights, what to do about conscientious objectors, issues pertaining to the Reserves, and pay and benefits of inductees.

Position Among Nations

A number of organizations also raised the issue of whether the U.S. was to depend, for its international position, on a "posture of strength" or on measures involving economic and political aid for devastated or undeveloped areas and the emancipation of colonial areas from industrially developed nations which controlled them.

Most veterans groups, the Chamber of Commerce, and a number of citizens' committees favored UMT. They were joined, on varying bases, by some educators and educational organizations, though in the past the educators of the nation were almost solidly against peacetime conscription of any kind. Most educators held against permanent UMT, as did most of their traditional allies on the issue, in the church, farm, and labor groups.

The split in the educational world engendered some hostilities there. Disputing organizations vied as to which was more representative and some educators, before Congressional committees, either differed with resolutions passed by their organizations or disputed the authority upon which other organizational witnesses put their groups on record.

Here is a summary of positions on some major issues in the many-faceted bill (S 1).

Favoring UMT

The following organizations took stands essentially in favor of UMT as a permanent feature of American life, though not in all cases was there agreement with the spelling out of that feature in any of the bills before the Congress:

American Legion and American Legion Auxiliary
Military Order of World Wars
Regular Veterans' Association
Veterans of Foreign Wars
AMVETS
American Veterans Committee
Disabled American Veterans
Jewish War Veterans of the U.S.A.
National Guard Association
Reserve Officers of the U.S.
National Emergency Committee of the Military Training Camps Association of the U.S.
Committee on the Present Danger
Citizens Committee for UMT
National Defense League of America
General Federation of Women's Clubs
National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs
Association of American Colleges
Association of American Universities
Chamber of Commerce of the U.S.
United Textile Workers (AFL)
International Brotherhood of Teamsters (AFL)

For A Qualified UMT

Shading over in the opinion spectrum from the pro-permanent UMT wing, a second bloc could be distinguished by its stand on UMT which held:

1. Permanent peacetime conscription and military training were unacceptable.

2. In view of existing world conditions it was not opposing UMT, or the bills embodying UMT and the draft — in fact in some cases these groups said they supported UMT — but there should be a termination date on the legislation. Some said two years, some three. But all in this group wanted the UMT draft power to end in a specified length of time, to give the Congress and the people a chance to review the issue at a more tranquil time. Groups holding these general views were:

American Baptist Convention
American Council on Education
National Education Association
National Association of Secondary School Principals (NEA)
American Federation of Labor
American Federation of Teachers (AFL)
United Gas, Coke and Chemical Workers (CIO)
Students for Democratic Action
National Women's Christian Temperance Union
Prohibition Party and its youth affiliates
Norman Thomas (speaking for most members of the Socialist Party, Post War World Council, and American Civil Liberties Union, he said)

Against UMT

Organizations which came out definitely against UMT as such included:

National Grange
National Farmers Union
American Farm Bureau Federation
New York State Farm Bureau Federation
Congress of Industrial Organizations
United Mine Workers of America
Catholic War Veterans of the U.S.A.
International Order of Good Templars
National Civic League

Labor Youth League
National Union of Marine Cooks and Stewards
The Committee for Constitutional Government

Alternatives To UMT

A number of organizations and individuals proffered alternative plans designed to build up a large number of militarily trained young men for the reserves without taking these youths from home, school and industry.

These plans involved military drill and tactical study in school or other local facilities, and in some cases also involved technical vocational training. Groups offering such plans were:

American Farm Bureau Federation
Sigma Chi Fraternity
American Association of Junior Colleges
Southern Association of Junior Colleges
Texas Association of Public Junior Colleges
Southern California Junior College Association
Catholic War Veterans of the U.S.

The 18-Year-Old Issue

The proposal to drop the induction age from 19 to 18—or 18 1/2—aroused tremendous interest and probably more passion than any other aspect of the complex and far-reaching draft and universal military training legislation.

Congressmen received a flood of mail on the subject. Most individuals who wrote did not discuss the legislation as a whole but confined their remarks to the 18-year-old issue. Most such letter-writers opposed the measure, though some older men who were veterans—and their relatives—protested that if the youngsters were not taken then vets would have to go again and pointed out that many vets went into the armed forces in World War II at 18.

Proponents of taking youths at 18 argued that they were then at a good breaking-off point, having finished high school and not having acquired families to support or essential industrial skills for which they would have to be deferred, nor would they have completed much college work. They said such youths make good soldiers, being physically elastic and spirited. Proponents argued that military training would make better citizens of them and also fit them better for survival if full-scale war should come and they were thrown into battle.

Most of the pro-18-year draft witnesses, however, favored deferment until completion of high school, or until the nineteenth birthday, whichever came first.

Against Such Inductions

Arguments against drafting the 18-year-olds were:

1. Many of them were too immature.

2. Most of the college-bound group would be interrupted at the end of one year of college instead of "the more advantageous breaking point" of two years.

3. The 18-year draft "demoralizes the upper years of the high school".

4. Many thousands more would graduate from high school yearly if the induction age were 19 (more than one-fifth of the senior high school boys in 1949 passed their 19th birthday while in high school).

5. Additional 1-or-2 year technical and vocational training for non-college-going high school graduates would make them better servicemen.

6. They were more likely to adjust to post-military life if inducted at 19 instead of 18.

Organizations opposing draft of 18-year-olds were:

National Council Against Conscription
National Council for Prevention of War
Women's International League for Peace and Freedom

American Baptist Convention, Council on Christian Social Progress
Brethren Service Commission of the Church of the Brethren
Commission on World Peace of the Methodist Church

The Reserves

Advocates of more reliance upon the reserve forces—led by reserve officer and National Guard associations—criticized the Pentagon for not giving the reserves and National Guard a bigger role in the mobilization and for failure to build an effective reserve system.

The National Guard Association and the Reserve Officers Association objected to the Pentagon-sponsored bill which would have deleted from existing law the policy statement that the National Guard must be maintained in strength and in organization. They asked that men not be draft-eligible if in the Guard, and that units, not individuals, be called.

The Air Reserve Association of the U. S. said that it suspected that the regulars were doing a "hatchet" job on the reserves.

The American Legion backed the reserve organization stands; VFW wanted the Organized Reserve brought up to full strength via the draft if necessary, and AMVETS asked that the reserves be strengthened. American Veterans Committee suggested that the reserves be organized like the British home guard.

The CIO wanted civilians on the board which called up the reserves and a ban on calling them up to break strikes. National Farmers Union was disturbed by the provisions which indicated that eventually all men would be in the reserves.

Student Deferments

One of the thorniest problems in the laps of the mobilizers of manpower for military purposes was the issue of "when and for how long to defer whom."

In the case of students pursuing college-level or post-graduate studies, there were arguments that some or all of these young men be deferred—either before or after basic military training — in order that the U.S. not fall behind in numbers of trained men in the professions.

But others argued that it was undemocratic to permit some men to escape service just because they happened to have academic proficiency and money on which to go to college. (The latter point was countered with proposals for federal scholarship aid to all gifted youths otherwise suited for such treatment.)

Some proponents of the student deferment wanted to limit it to the 75,000 maximum yearly called for in the Senate bill. Others said that 75,000 would prove too little.

Organizations which opposed limiting deferment to the physical sciences only and came out for deferment by merit of the work of the individual student regardless of his field were:

American Council on Education
American Council of Learned Societies
National Art Education Association
CIO

The following organizations argued that 75,000 students yearly should not be the maximum or argued for such deferment numbers for their own profession as would make a 75,000 limit unworkable:

American Council on Education
American Council of Learned Societies
American Pharmaceutical Association
Commission on Professional Manpower for Pharmacy
American Association of Colleges of Pharmacy
Office of Scientific Personnel of the National Academy of Sciences, National Research Council
Joint Committee on Medical Education in Time of National Emergency (composed of Association of American Medical Colleges and Council on Medical Education and Hospitals of the American Medical Association.
Engineers Joint Council, Engineering Manpower Commission. (American Society of Mechanical Engineers, American Society of Civil Engineers, American Institute of Electrical Engineers, American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers, American Institute of Chemical Engineers, American Society for Engineering Education.)
National Society of Professional Engineers
American Dental Association

The following organizations backed the plan for 75,000 student deferments yearly, after four months of basic military training:

AMVETS
VFW
Jewish War Veterans of the U.S.A.
Committee on the Present Danger
Chamber of Commerce of the U.S.A.
CIO
Association of American Universities
Association of American Colleges

The following organizations opposed requiring those to be deferred as students to take their four-month basic military training first:

Students for Democratic Action
NEA
Joint Committee on Medical Education in Time of National Emergency

Other Deferments

Major farm organizations expressed concern over the operation of the draft in rural areas. They were apparently in general agreement that too many farm boys were being taken, at the peril of agricultural production.

American Farm Bureau Federation opposed a general agricultural deferment under Selective Service, said we must keep in farming enough workers skilled in handling farm equipment and livestock.

National Grange asked for "justified" deferment of farm boys and a split basic training plan that would permit a farm boy to go home for that part of the year when farm work would be heaviest.

National Farmers Union complained that, as far as the rural areas are concerned, Selective Service was not selective enough.

Disabled American Veterans appealed to Secretary of Defense George C. Marshall to halt the drafting of doctors and vital medical personnel from Veterans Administration hospitals.

International Association of Chiefs of Police, Inc., asked that policemen be deferred. The National Council of the Churches of Christ, Division of Foreign Missions, asked that the exemption for the ministry be extended to lay missionaries commissioned for life service, and students preparing for such a career.

National Maritime Union (CIO) and Seafarers International Union of North America (AFL) pressed for a national policy of draft deferment for active merchant seamen.

International Association of Machinists, as part of its drive to end job discrimination against older workers, suggested that no business be granted deferments for any employee until it can prove that it has searched for competent men regardless of age.

Conscientious Objectors

A number of organizations urged that a more "constructive" role than sitting in jail be found for conscientious objectors. Some also urged broadened recognition of C.O.'s other than those who qualify as such under the existing legal definition which confined the C.O. classification to those with a religious basis for their views. Witnesses for historic peace churches, whose members usually were recognized as objectors under the terms of the World War II and 1948 draft laws, in some cases joined in such requests.

Among groups urging protection of the right of conscience were:

National Conference of Methodist Youth, Friends Coordinating Committee on Peace (10 Quaker groups), Commission on World Peace of the Methodist Church, Mennonite Central Committee Peace Section, American Civil Liberties Union and National Council for Prevention of War. Norman Thomas testified that most members of ACLU, the Post War World Council, and the Socialist Party agreed with him that C.O's should not be jailed.

The American Legion, VFW, and Montana State Legislature had different ideas. The Legion said C.O.'s should be given work of national importance instead of being left at home, as happens to those so classified under existing law. The Montana solons asked Congress to delete exemptions for those C.O's who would take neither combatant or non-combatant status.

Anti-Discrimination Issue

The following organizations asked for passage of a ban on racial segregation or discrimination, or both, in the armed forces:

American Civil Liberties Union
American Council on Human Rights
American Veterans Committee
CIO
National Association for the Advancement of Colored People
National Council of Churches, Division of Christian Life and Work
National Union of Marine Cooks and Stewards
Students for Democratic Action
Young People's General Assembly for Peace.
National Urban League.

Norman Thomas, who said he was expressing the views of most members of the Post War World Council and of the Socialist Party, U.S.A., also advocated doing away with racial separations in the military.

Non-Military Alternatives

A number of the groups which opposed UMT, and in several cases the draft as well, also put forward alternative policies.

They urged that instead of counting on strength of arms to avert war, the U.S. ought to pour far more of its productive capacity and political energy into aiding world economic reconstruction, development of underdeveloped areas, liquidation of colonialism, and efforts at psychological and physical worldwide disarmament.

Organizations making presentations along these lines included:

Friends Committee on National Legislation
Friends General Conference, Peace and Service Committee, Philadelphia
Presbyterian Church, U.S.A.
Brethren Service Commission of the Church of the Brethren
American Baptist Convention, Council on Christian Social Progress
Commission on World Peace of the Methodist Church
International Council of Community Churches
Women's International League for Peace and Freedom
War Resisters League
National Council for Prevention of War
Labor Youth League
American Labor Party
Young People's General Assembly for Peace
National Committee for Peaceful Alternatives
Prohibition Party and its youth affiliate, American Youth for Political Action.
Council on Christian Social Progress of the American Baptist Convention
National Conference of Methodist Youth.

G. I. Insurance

HR 1 — P.L. 23

Summary — The House and Senate April 13 completed Congressional action on a compromise bill (HR 1) providing cost-free $10,000 life insurance policies for all members of the armed forces while they are in service.

Divided into two parts, the bill's first half replaced the existing system of government life insurance for servicemen, on which payment of premiums was required, with a new free indemnity. The second part amended the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940 to provide servicemen a chance to continue government policies after they are discharged.

Originally, the House had favored free insurance which would not be convertible to other types after the insured serviceman was discharged. The Senate's version was considerably different, and the compromise bill finally put on the statute books reflected the upper chamber's approach more than it did the House's.

The House passed HR 1 by voice vote Jan. 24. The Senate passed its version by voice vote Feb. 26. The compromise measure worked up by a conference committee was approved by both chambers, also by voice votes. President Truman signed the measure into Public Law 23 on April 25.

Provisions — The entire measure was divided into two parts, as follows:

Part I — "Servicemen's Indemnity Act of 1951", which provided that:

Any person on active duty with the armed services since June 27, 1950, shall be automatically insured by the government against death in the amount of $10,000. The insurance shall continue for 120 days after the person's release from active service.

In case of death, the indemnity shall be paid to beneficiaries in equal monthly installments of 120 payments with interest at the rate of 2 1/4 per cent annually. Eligible beneficiaries were described in the law.

Families of all men who died in line of duty since June 27, 1950, would be entitled to receive $10,000. The retroactive feature would apply no matter where death occurred, provided it was in line of duty.

In cases of men who died since that date who were purchasing government insurance then available, but less than $10,000 worth, the government would make an additional payment to the soldier's beneficiary to hike the total benefit to $10,000.

Money to pay the cost of the free insurance program was authorized to be appropriated from the Treasury.

Circumstances under which an insured serviceman would forfeit his insurance rights (by mutiny, for example) were detailed.

Part II — "Insurance Act of 1951", which provided that:

Any person having government insurance who returned to the service would be allowed to retain the policy by making token payments or to redeem the insurance for its cash surrender value with full right to reinstate it after discharge upon payment of the required reserve and the premium for the then-current month.

Service personnel discharged from the service in the future would be eligible to apply within 120 days for government life insurance under the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940, but only under a new term plan and on a nonparticipating basis (no dividends as provided under the then-existing law). The new insurance thus issued would be renewable every five years at gradually increased premium rates. However, these rates would be less than those in effect in 1950 because no dividends would be available.

HOUSE

Committee

The House Veterans Affairs Committee Jan. 15 approved, for the second time, a bill (HR 1) to give free $10,000 life insurance policies to all servicemen on active duty. The bill was reported to the House Jan. 17.

The bill was introduced in the 82nd Congress by Rep. John E. Rankin (D Miss.) after it had been passed by the House at the "lame duck" session of the 81st Congress but not in time for the Senate to act. (See CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, page 331.)

Under the legislation, all men on active duty or called in the future would automatically receive the coverage, which would expire within 90 days after termination of active duty. The insurance would replace the optional National Service Life Insurance issued to more than 18 million servicemen during World War II on a cost-participation basis.

Rankin said Jan. 14 that favorable opinions by Lindsay C. Warren, the Comptroller General, and Edward E. Odom, Veterans Administration solicitor, had answered complaints that the bill might jeopardize the NSLI rights of World War II veterans.

The program was to be retroactive to June 27, 1950. The proposed free plan was endorsed by President Truman. NSLI policies in force would not be affected. Policyholders would continue to retain all their existing rights, but no new NSLI policies would be issued except in the following cases:

1. To disabled Korean veterans unable to obtain commercial coverage at standard rates.

2. To totally disabled veterans, in which cases the government would waive premiums.

Unlike NSLI, which could be continued or converted to other forms after separation from the service, the free insurance would not be convertible to other types of coverage.

Floor Action

The House took up HR 1 on Jan. 24. Debate was relatively brief and non-controversial. Rep. Glenn R. Davis (R Wis.) urged the House to approve the free coverage plan to "get the government out of the insurance business in peacetime and save the taxpayers millions in administrative overhead."

The House then approved the measure by unanimous voice vote. However, before final passage, the House refused to accept an amendment by Rep. Joe L. Evins (D Tenn.) that would have continued the insurance for those veterans wanting coverage upon discharge from active service. The vote, by division, was 79 to 14.

SENATE

Committee

The Senate Finance Committee, to which the insurance legislation was referred, held a one-day hearing Jan. 25. Testimony similar to that heard by the House group was developed. Among witnesses appearing were Reps. Carl Elliott (D Ala.) and Glenn R. Davis (R Wis.), Guy H. Birdsall, Veterans Administration, C. E. Eckert, General Accounting Office, Miles D. Kennedy and Charles W. Stevens, American Legion, Charles E. Foster and Cicero F. Hogan, Disabled American Veterans, Omar B. Ketchum and Robert L. Ashforth, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Harold Russell, Amvets, Maj. Gen. E. A. Walsh, National Guard Association, Vice Adm. H. G. Hamlet, Retired Officers Association, Gordon McKenney, National Association of Life Underwriters, and Ralph R. Lounsbury, Life Insurance Association of America.

The Senate Committee endorsed HR 1 on Feb. 14. Approval was unanimous after minor amendments were made. The cutoff date for free coverage was extended from 90 days after separation from the service, as approved by the House, to 120 days. Ex-servicemen holding government policies would be permitted to keep those policies during subsequent active duty but would have premiums refunded, according to another amendment. (The House bill would have suspended the old policies during service of veterans.)

The bill was called up for floor action Feb. 15, but Finance Committee Chairman Walter F. George (D Ga.) moved that it be postponed until Feb. 19 because of the light Senate attendance.

Floor Action

When HR 1 came up in the Senate again on Feb. 19, Sens. Herbert H. Lehman (D N.Y.), James E. Murray (D Mont.), Matthew M. Neely (D W. Va.) and Harley M. Kilgore (D W. Va.) introduced an amendment to HR 1 to permit the "new" serviceman who entered the forces to apply for National Service Life Insurance on the same basis as those who applied for NSLI before Korea. No formal action was taken on either the amendment or the bill itself, however.

The measure again came up on Feb. 22, but a vote on it was delayed a third time because of the absence of a quorum. But on this date, Chairman George offered a formal substitute bill (S 84) to the pending House measure (HR 1). George told the Senate that S 84 differed in only one major respect from HR 1. It would specifically allow servicemen who entered the forces after the Korean war to continue the insurance after discharge.

When the legislation came up Feb. 26 for the fourth time, there were several different versions of it before the Senate. There was HR 1 which the Senate Committee had reported with some changes. There was Sen. George's formal bill, S 84. There were the substantive amendments to HR 1 which Sens. Lehman, Murray, Neely and Kilgore had readied. Finally, there was a George amendment in the nature of a substitute for HR 1. This amendment in the nature of a substitute embraced the points George had set forth in his formal bill.

George's Amendment

The subsequent action centered on the George amendment in the nature of a substitute, rather than on HR 1 or S 84. In floor debate Feb. 26 George explained the difference between the House measure (and the Senate measure, S 84) and his amendment, as follows: "The House has prohibited the issuing of any further National Service Life Insurance policies after the effective date fixed by the bill (date of enactment). The substitute which I have offered does not cut out further National Service Life Insurance. It permits the veteran to buy NSLI while he is in the service."

George said he offered the amendment in the nature of a substitute so that the Senate could have an opportunity "to decide between the discontinuance of the National Service Life Insurance or the continuance of government insurance to veterans."

Sen. Robert A. Taft (R Ohio) told his colleagues that he favored the George substitute. It would permit the whole matter of GI insurance to be carefully reviewed by a conference committee, and a compromise might be arrived at, he stated.

The George substitute amendment also drew support from Sen. Lehman, who said he would press for his own amendments only if the George proposal were defeated. Sen. William Langer (R N. D.), who had also prepared an amendment similar to the Lehman - Murray - Neely - Kilgore one, registered a similar attitude.

But Sen. Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.) said he preferred the House measure. It would save the government a great deal of money, and had the support of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the Disabled American Veterans and AMVETS, he observed.

Before a vote was taken on George's proposal, Sen. George D. Aiken (R Vt.) sponsored an alteration of the substitute. Affirmed by voice vote, the Aiken amendment provided that a GI insurance policy would not be forfeited if a serviceman deserted, but thereafter re-entered the service and was on active duty. Aiken said his proposal would apply only to a half dozen cases.

Substitute Approved

The Senate then passed George's amendment in the nature of a substitute for HR 1. The action was by voice vote. As approved, the legislation provided free $10,000 life insurance policies for all servicemen on active duty and continued the right of servicemen to buy National Service Life Insurance while in the armed forces. The free insurance would be issued for a limited time, from July 27, 1950, until 120 days after the passage of the measure.

CONFERENCE

Because the Senate's version of HR 1 was thus basically different from the version the House had approved, the legislation was ordered into a conference for harmonization. The Senate's view largely prevailed in the joint group. When the conferees reached a compromise, and reported it to their respective chambers April 12, there was little debate over the legislation. Both the House and Senate approved it by voice votes the following day. President Truman signed it April 25 and it became Public Law 23.

GROUP STANDS

Three major veterans groups, the insurance industry, and the executive agencies lined up in favor of the original House bill, while two other veterans groups and the largest component of the labor movement opposed a key provision.

Veterans of Foreign Wars of the U. S., Disabled American Veterans, and Amvets (American Veterans of World War II) supported the Rankin bill, including the idea of gratuitous coverage to all in the armed forces and the cancellation of coverage 90 days after discharge. National Association of Life Underwriters (representing the agents) also supported the bill. The American Life Convention and the Life Insurance Association of America (representing most of the risk firms handling life policies) opposed any bill which did not provide for ending federal coverage a "reasonable period" after discharge unless the individual was uninsurable at standard rates, thus by general language endorsing that aspect of the bill.

American Legion, American Veterans Committee, and the American Federation of Labor vigorously opposed the 90-day cutoff, and asked that veterans of the Korean war be given the same privilege to continue or convert their coverage under National Service Life Insurance as the World War II men had. AVC charged that the new plan was part of a strategy working toward a veterans bonus demand, and AFL said the insurance firms were trying to benefit at the vets' expense.

The Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen opposed the inconvertibility feature of the original bill, as did the AFL's Labor's League for Political Education. The publication "Labor," organ of a number of rail unions, also criticized the feature repeatedly.

Naval Construction

Summary — On the opening day of the 82nd Congress, the House received legislation (HR 1001) authorizing a program to modernize the U. S. fleet and to start construction of new units for it. One of these was to be a 57,000-ton aircraft carrier able to accommodate heavy bombers capable of carrying the atomic bomb. The bill itself did not specify an appropriations figure to pay for the program, but estimates made were: $1,297,143,000 for modernization of existing units, $1,070,949,000 for new construction, and $382 million for "ammunition necessitated by this program."

The House Armed Services Committee took brief testimony from Adm. Forrest P. Sherman, Chief of Naval Operations, in favor of the bill. The Defense Department also endorsed it.

XUM

The House group unanimously approved and reported the measure Jan. 12, and the House itself passed it by a 365-0 roll-call vote Jan. 17. No amendments to the bill were made. (See page 312 for vote.)

The Senate Armed Services Committee also endorsed HR 1001 unanimously, and reported it Feb. 14. No changes were made in the House version. The Senate passed it by a voice vote on Feb. 26, clearing it to the White House where President Truman signed it into law on March 10.

Provisions — As enacted, HR 1001 provided for the construction of new vessels and the modernization by conversion of existing vessels as follows:

New construction, 500,000 tons — including 173 new vessels: one aircraft carrier, 22 mine sweepers, 30 mine-sweeper boats, 7 submarines, 2 ocean escorts, 12 fleet tankers, 2 rocket ships, 1 ice breaker, 66 landing ships, 30 smaller vessels of various types, all to be completed in two years.

Conversion of 1,000,000 tons of existing naval vessels: 6 Essex-type carriers to accommodate improved jet aircraft, 12 cruisers, 2 guided missile cruisers, 194 destroyers, 12 radar picket destroyers, 31 landing craft, 34 smaller vessels of various types.

A section banned transfer of any American vessel to another country under the Mutual Defense Assistance Act unless that vessel has been stricken from the Navy register.

Money to pay for the program was authorized to be appropriated subsequently. No express figure was given.

The sale or transfer of any battleship, carrier, cruiser, destroyer or submarine still on the Navy Register was banned unless specifically authorized by Congress.

Provisions of earlier laws which set tonnage limits on naval construction were rescinded.

HOUSE

Committee

Chairman Carl Vinson (D Ga.) of the Armed Services Committee introduced the naval construction bill (HR 1001) on Jan. 3, opening day of the new Congress. On Jan. 9, the 25-man Committee unanimously endorsed the bill, after a brief, closed-door hearing at which Adm. Forrest P. Sherman, Chief of Naval Operations, was the sole witness. He explained details of the proposed program. Vinson said the legislation had the approval of the Defense Department and the Bureau of the Budget and could be called "an Administration bill."

As reported formally on Jan. 12, the measure authorized construction of a 57,000-ton aircraft carrier, the largest single vessel contemplated under the building program.

Besides authorization of the new carrier, which would be the largest in the country's fleet and accommodate heavy bombers capable of carrying the atomic bomb, the measure provided for the building of 173 new naval vessels and the conversion of 291 others to modern standards. The flattop probably would cost $235 million, according to Vinson, and would take more than three years to complete. Also authorized were two prototype "ocean escorts" designed to combat an enemy's snorkel-equipped submarines, seven snorkel submarines of our own, 12 fleet tankers, two rocket launchers and other miscellaneous types.

Existing vessels authorized to be modernized included six Essex class carriers to handle heavier and faster aircraft, 12 cruisers for special anti-aircraft purposes, two cruisers for guided missile launchers and more than 200 destroyers for specialized purposes.

HR 1001 contained a separate provision, prohibiting the sale, transfer, or other disposition of any battleship, cruiser, destroyer, or submarine unless it has been formally removed from the Navy register as of no further naval use.

Floor Action

When the House took up HR 1001 on Jan. 17, it gave the measure its unanimous approval. The action came on a 365-to-0 roll-call vote after brief debate. It was the first major bill passed by either chamber in the new session.

The short debate was marked by renewed recriminations over cancellation of the proposed 65,000-ton supercarrier, the U.S.S. United States, in 1949, by Defense Secretary Louis Johnson after construction had begun.

Chairman Vinson estimated that the 1949 cost of the carrier would have been $189 million as against about $235 million for the new vessel. He added that the government also had paid $2,718,672 to the Newport News Shipbuilding & Drydock Co., which had the construction contract, in a termination settlement agreement.

But Rep. James E. Van Zandt (R Pa.) put the total loss at $65 million in labor and higher material costs for the new ship, plus three years of lost time.

There were no amendments to the bill from the floor. It passed exactly as it was reported.

SENATE

Committee

The House-passed measure was referred to a Senate Armed Services Subcommittee, which unanimously approved it Feb. 7 after hearing secret testimony by Sherman. Sen. Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.), who headed the Subcommittee, said his group made only "minor changes" in the bill. The full Armed Services Committee unanimously approved the bill Feb. 14, and it was reported Feb. 21.

Floor Action

The Senate took up HR 1001 on Feb. 26. Sen. Byrd told his colleagues he was advised that the program was "very vital to the war effort" and asked for prompt action. He assured Sen. Edwin C. Johnson (D Colo.) that the Armed Services Committee had been unable to "find any 'fat' in the program" proposed, and that the group considered the legislation "one of the most meritorious which has been presented so far as the national defense is concerned."

Byrd noted that the sums needed to finance the program would "be spent over a number of years. For example, the aircraft carrier would not be completed for perhaps two or three years." He told Sen. Robert C. Hendrickson (R N.J.) the carrier would probably cost "about $212 million." That would not include the planes for it, but would only pay for the vessel itself, "the largest carrier in existence."

There was virtually no debate. No amendments were offered. The Senate passed the measure by voice vote. The bill was thus cleared to the White House, the Senate having made no changes in the form of the bill passed by the House.

President Truman signed HR 1001 into Public Law 3 on March 10.

Military Construction

Summary — The largest single military construction program ever approved in peacetime was authorized by Congress in 1951. The bill only authorized construction; funds were appropriated under separate legislation. (See page 162).

Most of the $5,864,301,178 authorized went to the Air Force. It was granted $3,543,661,800. The Army received $1,473,791,528, and the Navy $846,847,850.

The program included expansion of existing military bases and erection of new ones in 44 states and in many places throughout the world. The Air Force alone was authorized to open 77 extra bases, some of them, according to Secretary of Defense Robert A. Lovett, "on a series of bases in North Africa and also metropolitan France."

Much of the proposed construction was so secret it was not specifically mentioned in the legislation. A total of $1.5 billion was authorized for unlisted projects.

The construction program was formally requested June 20 when then-Secretary of Defense George C. Marshall in letters to Congressional leaders asked for authorization to spend $6,561,262,000 in a two - year construction program. The amount granted was $796,961,209 short of this figure, because of Congress' decision to authorize only those sums that would have to be appropriated during the current fiscal year for construction work.

Ordinarily Congress has authorized in full large construction jobs scheduled to take years to complete, and has appropriated the necessary money for the various stages of work from year to year. Some committee members contended delaying part of the authorization would not save anything and might result in higher costs in the long run, but Rep. Overton Brooks (D La.), top - ranking committee Democrat, defended the policy because of "the unsettled international situation and because we feel the economy of the country can only take so much strain."

House Armed Services Committee hearings on HR 4524 started June 27. The Committee considered the Defense Department requests on an item by item basis, cutting almost all to conform with the one - year formula, but actually reducing or eliminating few projects. On July 24 after approving a $5,768,720,000 construction program under HR 4524, the Committee substituted a clean bill, HR 4914.

HR 4914 was passed by the House Aug. 14 on a 353-5 roll call vote (See page 312.)

The Senate passed the bill Sept. 5 with just three additions to the House version. In conference, two of the Senate increases were accepted, and one item, for the establishment of an Air Force base in North Carolina, was deleted.

The Senate agreed to the conference report on Sept. 14, the House passed it Sept. 18, and the President signed HR 4914 on Sept. 28, and it became Public Law 155.

Provisions — As enacted, HR 4914 authorized construction as follows:

(A)	In Continental U. S.	$3,563,327,158
(B)	Overseas	679,804,220
(C)	Classified	1,487,403,800
(D)	Jointly with other services	133,766,000
(T)	Totals	$5,864,301,178

Broken down by services, the figures were:

	Army	Navy	Air Force
(A)	$940,450,398	$629,272,960	$1,993,603,800
(B)	175,341,130	89,043,090	415,420,000
(C)	302,234,000	113,531,800	1,071,638,000
(D)	55,766,000	15,000,000	63,000,000
(T)	$1,473,791,528	$846,847,850	$3,543,661,800

The law also authorized:

Housing and other facilities for the planned 3.5 million-strong armed forces. Eight skeleton "railhead facilities" with underground utilities, a few storm houses and overhead utilities to accommodate military units in time of war. About $1 billion to build a string of secret bases girdling Russia. Expansion of airports in the United States, including interceptor fields near large cities.

A total of $1.5 billion was for secret work not specifically listed in the legislation.

The law also included a section requiring the Secretaries of the Army, Navy and Air Force and the Federal Civil Defense Administrator to "come into agreement" with the Armed Services Committees on real estate transactions of over $25,000. This provision had been vetoed by the President in similar legislation (see page 295).

HOUSE

Hearings

House Armed Services hearings on HR 4524 covering the Defense request began June 27 with Robert A. Lovett, then Deputy Secretary of Defense. Lovett said that the Pentagon request for $6.5 billion worth of military construction was reduced from the $12 billion first asked. Trimming conformed with the Defense Department's view that funds should go mainly for "operational requirements", he said.

The Committee decided June 28 to cut from the bill $2 billion in authorization for funds that would not be used during the 1952 fiscal year. Chairman Carl Vinson (D Ga.) said this did not mean that all of the requested program would not eventually be approved. In conformance with this plan, many projects were lopped from the bill.

With its June 29 hearings the Committee began consideration of the requests on an item by item basis, starting with Army construction.

In an all day session June 30, it approved $714,381,000 worth of Army construction after cutting $275,309,000 off the program. Altogether the Army wanted a construction authorization of $1.8 billion.

The Committee also approved the Army plan to set up nine mobilization centers over the nation on a standby basis. The project, to cost about $50 million, called for the installation of sewerage, lights, streets and other facilities, but no barracks. The camps would be used only if large-scale mobilization were ordered. Army representatives told the Committee the mobilization centers could accommodate large concentrations of troops in tents on six weeks notice.

Turning to Navy construction needs July 3, the Committee approved 24 building projects aimed at strengthening the Navy air arm at shore installations in the United States. Some for the Marines were included.

Sixteen Navy projects intended to strengthen overseas bases were approved July 5. Sites included Alaska, Guam, Okinawa, Pearl Harbor, Newfoundland and Cuba. The Committee also authorized additional construction projects in the United States.

The House Committee completed consideration of naval construction projects July 5 and 6 authorizing $794,696,380 for the Navy's shore base construction program. The Navy had asked for over $1 billion.

Hearings on the Air Force construction programs started July 6 with the appearance of Thomas K. Finletter, Air Force Secretary. Finletter told the Committee that unless authority were given for $3.5 billion worth of construction the projected 95-group Air Force would be hampered and strategic air command striking power curtailed. He asked the committee not to follow the one-year-at-a-time policy on Air Force projects, saying authorization of the full projects would save time and head off any impression that Congress was cutting down because of the Korean truce situation.

Nevertheless the committee reduced Air Force building plans by about $20 million. This was a bookkeeping reduction explained by the policy of authorizing for each project only the sum for which money was to be appropriated for the fiscal year that began July 1, 1951.

The Committee July 16 approved 15 Air Force projects whose costs totaled $240,880,000. All the projects involved depots and logistical facilities.

Also part of the huge over-all bill was $111,970,000 in projects to expand the Air Force's research, development and test facilities approved by the Committee July 17. On July 18 the Committee instructed the Air Force to locate proposed new headquarters for its research and development command at the Friendship International Airport, Baltimore. An appropriation of $5,446,000 for buildings was approved.

In another move to build a ring of air bases overseas, the Committee July 13 approved $1,071,638,000 for secret Air Force construction in Europe and areas rimming the Soviet.

Committee

A $5,768,720,000 military construction program in the form of the revised HR 4524 was approved by the Committee July 21. A clean bill, HR 4914, was substituted July 23 and approved the next day.

Floor Action

By a 353-5 roll-call vote, the House Aug. 14 passed HR 4914 without changing the fund authorizations. (Vote page 312.)

Debate on the bill began Aug. 10 but approval was blocked temporarily when Rep. H. R. Gross (R Iowa) made two unsuccessful attempts to eliminate an item calling for a $19,019,000 expansion of the Grandview Airport near Kansas City, Mo. The House Aug. 10 rejected on a 16-56 standing vote a Gross amendment to delete this section from the bill and declined by voice vote Aug. 14 to accept a Gross motion to recommit the bill with instructions that the authorization be stricken from it.

Gross termed the airport project at Grandview a "glorified WPA" project in the home county of President Truman, whose plane landed at the airport on visits to his Independence, Mo., home. Gross suggested that the headquarters of the Continental Air Command and the Central Air Defense Force be established at the nearby airfield in Sedalia, Mo., rather than at what he called a "cow pasture" in Grandview.

The measure authorized establishment and development of military bases in 44 states, in the territories and overseas.

Chairman Vinson of the Armed Services Committee declared the construction program would "very substantially increase our fighting capabilities."

Gross and Rep. Charles B. Hoeven (R Iowa) charged that the selections of sites for bases had been influenced by politics. Gross asked why no site had been proposed in Iowa while 12 projects had been scheduled for Vinson's home state of Georgia. Vinson retorted that sites were based on the findings of military necessity and added that none of the projects in his state were in his Congressional district.

Military Housing Deleted

An amendment by Vinson to delete a provision extending the military housing (Wherry Act) section of the National Housing Act was approved. Vinson explained that the extension was to be considered later in connection with the Defense Housing bill (S 349) (page 184).

The House defeated on voice vote an attempt to kill the big military funds authorization when Rep. Clare E. Hoffman (R Mich.) moved to strike out the enacting clause.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Carl Vinson (D Ga.) — Delete provision to extend a section of the National Housing Act. Voice vote.

Thomas G. Abernethy (D Miss.)— In cases where land is obtained by condemnation procedures, authorize Secretary of Defense to make additional payments, up to 25 per cent of the value of the land to compensate owner for inconvenience, loss of use of land and other losses. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

H. R. Gross (R Iowa) — Delete appropriation of $19,019,000 for new military installation at Grandview, Mo. Standing vote, 16-56.

SENATE

Hearings

The Senate Armed Services Committee began hearings Aug. 27 on HR 4914. Finletter and Lovett, who had appeared before the House Committee, were among the witnesses.

Finletter warned that the Air Force was "sadly behind in its installations, both in the U.S. and abroad." Army spokesmen backed up its request for $100 million for warehousing and storage facilities on the grounds that before the end of fiscal 1952 considerable amounts of military equipment needing indoor storage would be manufactured.

Committee

The Senate Committee accepted the House bill with only three changes: It earmarked $75 million for warehousing and storage facilities, compared with the Army request of $100 million and the House-passed figure of $25 million. The Senate group also authorized $45.5 million more than the House for additional Marine Corps facilities, and allowed $23 million for an Air Force base at Goldsboro, N.C., which the House omitted because of disagreements as to the best site.

Floor Action

HR 4914 was reported in the Senate Sept. 4 and passed by voice vote Sept. 5 after an hour of debate. No amendments were proposed from the Senate floor, but some Senate Committee changes were accepted.

CONFERENCE

On Sept. 12 the two chambers agreed to hold a conference on the two versions of the legislation. House conferees agreed to the Senate provision for $75 million for warehouse facilities.

Conferees from the House also agreed to the Senate provision for 45.5 million for Marine Corps facilities, including some at Quantico, Va., and in Hawaii, since the House Armed Services Committee had approved the authorizations under different bills.

Senate conferees agreed to strike from the bill the provision for an Air Force base at Goldsboro, N.C., because the House Committee wanted to pass on that item in separate legislation. The original House bill had contained an authorization for approximately $33 million for an Air Force base at Raleigh-Durham, N.C., to accommodate two troop carrier wings. The House Committee had deleted this because of disagreement over the location.

When the conference report came before the Senate, it was approved Sept. 14 by voice vote. The House passed it Sept. 18 the same way. The measure was signed into Public Law 155 on Sept. 28.

Land Transfer Act

HR 3096

Summary — On April 23, 1951, the House and Senate passed identical bills (HR 3096 and S 285) requiring congressional Armed Services Committees' approval for large real estate transactions. The Senate then passed the House bill on May 1.

Saying it would cause undue administrative burdens and might prove a "serious impediment" to the defense program, the President on May 15 vetoed the measure in his first veto of 1951.

Two days later the House over-rode the Presidential veto by a 312-68 roll-call vote (See page 312). The Senate did not again vote on the bill.

A modified version of the bill's provisions was included in HR 4914 (Military Construction Act), which became Public Law 155 upon the President's signing it Sept. 28.

Provisions — HR 3096 would have required the Secretaries of the Army, Navy, Air Force and the Federal Civil Defense Administrator to "come into agreement" with the Senate and House Committees on Armed Services before: (1) acquiring real estate where fee title was involved; (2) leasing private property for more than $10,000 annual rent; (3) leasing government - owned property for more than $10,000 annual rent; and (4) transferring government-owned real estate to other government agencies. The restrictions would have applied only to property within the United States, Alaska, Hawaii and Puerto Rico, and specifically excluded property pertaining to river - and - harbor and flood-control projects.

Background — The House committee report accompanying HR 3096 explained that during World War II the House Committee on Naval Affairs became concerned over the acquisition and disposal of large amounts of real estate by the Navy and felt it would be in the public interest to have such transactions scrutinized by the Committee, and so legislated. Neither the Army nor the Air Force were similarly restricted, so the Committees on Armed Services introduced bills covering real estate transactions of the other defense departments. The bills were not endorsed by any of the military departments, nor were they approved by the Budget Bureau. The Senate bill (S 285) introduced Jan. 11 by Sen. Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.), differed from the House bill (HR 3096) introduced March 7 by Rep. Carl Vinson (D Ga.) only as to the limitations on leases the Departments would have been permitted without Committee approval. The original House version required scrutiny of all transactions with more than $50,000 annual rental, while the Senate bill set $10,000 as the limit.

Floor Action

In recommending HR 3096 to the House April 23 the Committee asked acceptance of an amendment to reduce the rental - value figure from $50,000 to $10,000, to line up with the Senate bill. The amendment was accepted, and the House passed HR 3096 by a unanimous voice vote that day. The Senate passed its bill unanimously, too, by voice vote on April 23, and then on May 1, by another unanimous voice vote, agreed to the House bill.

Veto

President Truman criticized Congress for interfering with administrative affairs, and May 15 vetoed HR 3096. On the 17th, the House over-rode the veto by a roll-call vote of 312-68—58 more than the necessary two-thirds. The Senate did not act on the veto.

"Watchdog" regulations became law, however, on Sept. 28, when the President approved HR 4914, the Military Construction Act, which became Public Law 155. (See page 293). Under Title VI of this act the defense departments were required to "come into agreement" with the congressional Armed Services Committees on real estate transactions of over $25,000.

Disabled Veterans' Pensions

Summary — Six years after World War II and 33 years after World War I Congress provided $120 monthly pensions for totally disabled veterans needing the regular attendance of others, when the disabilities were non-service-connected. Civil War veterans had received a like pension after 54 years, Spanish-American War veterans after 27 years.

The bill, HR 3193, was passed by both chambers by unanimous voice votes — the House on June 20, the Senate, July 23.

President Truman vetoed the measure on Aug. 6, predicting its enactment would cost $400 million annually in fifty years.

The President's veto was overridden by the House Aug. 17 with a 318-45 roll-call vote. (See page 312) The Senate's over-riding roll-call vote was 69-9 on Sept. 18 (See page 314). With the Senate's action the bill became Public Law 149.

Provisions — HR 3193, as enacted, increased pensions from $60-$72 monthly to $120 monthly for veterans of World Wars I and II and Korea fighting for non-service-connected disabilities in those cases where they might need the regular aid and attendance of others. The pensions were limited to veterans with no more than $1,000 annual income if single, or $2,500 if with dependents.

Veterans of the above wars already were eligible for pensions of $60 to $72 monthly for disabilities not connected with service, depending on age and length of time on pension rolls, regardless of whether they required attendants. Veterans of the Civil War, Spanish-American War and Indian War were receiving pensions of $120 monthly if they required attendants, regardless of income.

Background — Numerous bills to provide pensions for veterans with permanent non - service - connected total disabilities were introduced in each Congress after the end of World War II. In 1949, the bill HR 2681 was sent back to a committee by the House on a 208-207 vote. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, 1949, pp. 50, 491). In 1950, HR 4617 died in the Senate after passage by the House June 1 by a 365-27 roll-call vote. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, 1950, p. 330.

HOUSE

Chairman John E. Rankin (D Miss.) of the Veterans' Affairs Committee introduced HR 3193, by request, on March 13.

The Committee on Veterans Affairs recommended passage of the bill without amendment on June 13, saying it believed the veterans covered by it were "by far the most meritorious of the non - service - connected - disability class." In their report they estimated that during the first year approximately 400 veterans of World War II, 23,700 of World War I, and 50 of the Spanish - American War would be eligible, with an additional cost for that first year of approximately $16,700,000. They estimated the number of eligible veterans from Korea would be small.

HR 3193 was passed by the House June 20 when it was called on the consent calendar.

SENATE

The Senate Finance Committee reported the bill favorably on June 25 without amendment, and like the House Committee, described the veterans covered as "by far the most meritorious of the non - service - connected - disability class." The bill was passed unanimously by the Senate on July 23.

VETO

President Truman vetoed the measure on Aug. 6, predicting that enactment of the bill would cost taxpayers $400 million a year by the end of the 20th Century. The President also objected that enactment of HR 3193 would "aggravate an already existing disparity in the Government's treatment of non - veterans and veterans whose disabilities are in no way connected with military service."

VETO OVERRIDDEN

On Aug. 17 the House overrode the Presidential veto by a 318-45 rollcall vote. This was 76 votes more than the two-thirds needed to override a veto.

In the brief debate preceding House action, Edith Nourse Rogers (R Mass.) said: "I have received universal approval of the measure, not alone from those who may be affected by its enactment but from all of the major veterans organizations."

James P. S. Devereux (R Md.) said veterans rewarded for combat service, who "get in a destitute situation as envisioned in this bill," would not be able "to eat those combat ribbons and medals."

In the Senate none defended the President's veto. Walter F. George (D Ga.) called the President's estimate "wholly unrealistic, with no relation to the facts." Wayne Morse (R Ore.) discounted as "false economy" the argument that the cost would be too great, and said a "great principle" and a "moral obligation" were involved.

The Senate vote on Sept. 18 was 69-9 to override. This was 17 more votes than the required two-thirds majority, and HR 3193 was the first bill in 1951 to be enacted over the President's veto. It thus became Public Law 149.

VA Negro Hospital

Summary — The House in 1951 rejected a bill to construct a $5 million veterans hospital for Negroes at Booker T. Washington's birthplace in Franklin County, Va. The 1951 measure (HR 314), introduced by Chairman John D. Rankin (D Miss.) of the House Veterans Affairs Committee, was turned down by a roll-call vote of 223 to 117 after the two Negro members of the House, Adam C. Powell, Jr., (D N. Y.) and William L. Dawson (D Ill.), opposed the bill as "class legislation."

Rankin argued that Negroes would get better treatment in a hospital built exclusively for them, and Southern Democrats, joined by 33 Republicans, supported the bill. Northern Democrats and most Republicans opposed it. The Veterans Administration opposed the bill.

Provisions — HR 314 would have authorized appropriation of $5 million to acquire a suitable site at the birthplace of Booker T. Washington in Franklin County, Va., and to erect there a hospital for Negro veterans.

Background — The Veterans Administration in 1951 was already operating one hospital for Negro veterans, built after World War I at Tuskegee, Ala., and managed and staffed completely by Negroes. In 1947 another Negro veterans hospital was authorized (but not constructed) for Mound Bayou, Miss.

Identical bills were introduced during the 80th and 81st Congresses to construct the Booker T. Washington hospital and were passed by the House but received no Senate action.

Committee Report

The House Veterans Affairs Committee in early 1951 took up two bills to erect the Booker T. Washington hospital. In addition to Rankin's bill (HR 314) it had before it HR 358 by Rep. Edith Nourse Rogers (R Mass.). Both were introduced Jan. 3.

The Committee reported HR 314 March 13, recommending construction of the hospital because of the number of Negro veterans in the area and as "a timely recognition of the services rendered by Booker T. Washington, one of the outstanding leaders of the Negro race."

The Veterans Administration report on the bill, included in the Committee report, said that within a 200 mile radius the VA was already operating eight hospitals and expected to open three more, and that Negro patients would be treated at all. It expressed concern about the difficulty of obtaining staff for hospitals already authorized, and said this problem would be further complicated in a community remote from a medical center. In addition, the VA said that the ratio of hospital beds to veterans in Virginia was already higher than the national average, and said the Bureau of the Budget opposed the bill.

Floor Action

The bill reached the floor of the House June 6 where Reps. Adam C. Powell, Jr. (D N.Y.) and William L. Dawson (D Ill.) successfully opposed it, charging that approval of the bill would break down recent accomplishments toward eliminating segregation in the armed forces.

The two Negro legislators said Negroes ask only for "equal treatment". Powell said Negro veterans were receiving adequate medical care in non-segregated hospitals, and that a separate hospital would be costly and unnecessary. He called the Booker T. Washington Memorial Association, which supported the hospital, a "phony organization" and charged that the land to be used for the proposed hospital was "individually owned by Dr. (S. J.) Phillips and the Booker T. Washington Fund."

Rep. Powell's motion that the enacting clause be stricken, killing the bill, was accepted by a roll-call vote of 223 to 117, with 89 Democrats for the motion and 84 against it, 133 Republicans supporting and 33 opposing it.

Military Reserve System

A bill (HR 5426) to revise the U. S. military reserve system was passed by the House but received no Senate action before the 1951 session ended.

The bill would divide members of the reserve components into "ready," "standby" and "retired" classifications. Under its terms the President could call the first class to active duty for up to 24 months, after Congress set the number of reserves needed in a given emergency.

The other two groups could be called only in time of war or national emergency delcared by Congress. The President's power to call men to active duty would be limited sharply.

HOUSE

The bill, known as the Armed Services Reserve Act of 1951, was introduced by Rep. Overton Brooks (D La.), chairman of the Subcommitee on Civilian Components of the House Armed Services Committee. This group held extensive hearings on the reserve system and in a report July 16 charged military leaders with failure "to provide for the contingency of a partial mobilization" and with causing "irreparable harm. . .to the reserve program."

The Subcommittee said the military had "done an outstanding job in getting men and materiel to the combat zone" after the outbreak of war in Korea. However in doing so, the Subcommittee said:

The armed services called inactive and volunteer reservists to active duty indiscriminately and before the members of the organized reserve although it was "the general belief" that the organized reserve would be called first.

Inactive reservists who were employed in essential industries were not allowed cancellation of orders. "Homes were broken, businesses lost," and there were unwarranted hardships.

As a result of administrative failure, grandfathers, men with multiple dependents and reservists in college, who were veterans of World War II were called while nonveteran single men were not, although many belonged to the organized reserve.

Hearings began July 30 on the reserve bill itself, originally introduced as HR 4860. The Subcommittee heard testimony supporting the bill from Julius Ochs Adler, general manager of the New York Times and member of the Reserve Forces Policy Board. He said the bill was necessary to outline responsibilities of reservists and should not be sold to the public as a "sugar pill." Assistant Secretary of Defense Anna M. Rosenberg said the bill would permit reserve and national guard units to be ready for combat in half the time then required.

Committee Approval

The Subcommittee approved a revised version of the measure Sept. 19.

Opposition to the bill, headed by W. Sterling Cole (R N.Y), centered on the proposed power of the President to call up the "ready" reserve without the Congressional approval which would be required for the "standby" and "retired" reserves.

The Subcommittee agreed on the provision after two amendments were added. One, introduced by James E. Van Zandt (R Pa.), would require approval of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the Secretary of Defense before the President could act. The other offered by Edward deGraffenried (D Ala.) would limit the number of reserves the President could call up to the amount the armed forces were below authorized strength.

On Sept. 27 a "clean" bill (HR 5426) was approved unanimously by the full Armed Services Committee. The bill incorporated a further restriction in form of an amendment by Brooks which would give Congress the right to determine the number of "ready" reserves the President could call up during a national emergency.

Under the plan originally proposed by the Defense Department, the President would have had unlimited authority to call up the "ready" reserve after he declared a national emergency.

The Committee rejected a proposal by Rep. Paul J. Kilday (D Tex.) limiting the service of Universal Military Training graduates to 30 days except in event of war.

Floor Action

The measure was taken up in the House Oct. 15 and was passed by voice vote. It was not acted on by the Senate during 1951.

Marine Corps Size

S 677

The Senate May 4 unanimously passed a bill (S 677) to fix the top strength of the Marine Corps at 400,000 officers and men, more than double the prevailing strength of 196,000, and to make its commandant a consultant of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. The measure was reported out by the House Armed Services Committee on June 30, but the bill did not reach the House floor.

The Senate measure was sponsored by Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.), a twice-wounded Marine veteran of World War II, and 43 other Senators. It was designed to insure the existence of a Marine Corps of four full - strength combat divisions, four full - strength air wings, and the necessary supporting organizations.

SENATE

Hearings

At hearings before the Senate Armed Services Committee, top military brass clashed with Marine Corps supporters.

George C. Marshall, then Secretary of Defense, opposed the bill, which he said would "disturb the traditional balanced relationship of the Marine Corps to the other operating forces of the naval establishment."

He also said the Joint Chiefs of Staff unanimously opposed adding the Marine commandant as "unnecessary, undesirable and impracticable." Marshall's views were presented in a letter as the Committee opened hearings April 13.

Sen. Douglas, in direct testimony, and Sens. Irving M. Ives (R N.Y.) and Walter F. George (D Ga.) in written statements, took the opposite stand from Marshall.

Two witnesses testified for the bill April 13. They were Gen. Thomas Holcomb, Saint Marys City, Md., Marine Corps Commandant from 1936 to 1943 and now retired, and Brig. Gen. Karl S. Day, East Williston, N.Y., of the Marine Corps reserve.

Admiral Forrest P. Sherman, then chief of naval operations, told the committee April 17 that the Marine Corps is "in no danger of dissolution", and that the pending bill "is an unnecessary device to safeguard" it.

XUM

Francis P. Matthews, at that time Secretary of the Navy, also opposed the Douglas bill.

Strongly supporting the Douglas bill were Gen. A. A. Vandegrift, former Marine Commandant, James P. S. Devereux, retired Marine general and now a Maryland Congressman (R), John Nicholas Brown, former assistant secretary of the Navy for air, and Arthur B. Hanson, reserve Marine major and Washington attorney.

Committee Approval

The Senate Armed Services Committee reported S 677 on May 2, after deleting a provision to make the Marines' commandant a full member of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, endorsing, rather, a proposal to make him a JCS consultant.

Floor Action

When the bill reached the floor May 4 the Senate accepted the Committee's change, then passed the measure by unanimous consent. There was no debate.

HOUSE

Hearings

At House Armed Services Committee hearings, Admiral Sherman, who also had testified before the Senate Committee, appeared May 23 in opposition to the bill.

Sherman said a Marine Corps strength of 400,000 would tend to cut into the quality of the Corps. He suggested Corps strength be fixed at a minimum of 20 per cent of the Navy.

Sherman said it was good policy for the Joint Chiefs to consult frequently with the Marine Corps commandant, but opposed language in the bill which he said would make the Marine chief a consultant on all matters. Proposals to make the commandant a member of the Joint Chiefs, Sherman said, would be a step toward separation of the Corps from the Navy.

Opposing the bill June 26, Gen. J. Lawton Collins, Army Chief of Staff, said there was no necessity to make the commandant a permanent member of the JCS.

Bill Reported

However, as the House Committee the same day approved the bill, it would make the Marine commandant a full JCS member. The Committee officially reported the measure June 30.

The bill did not reach the House floor during the first session.

Air Force Organization

HR 1726—P.L. 150

Summary — The Air Force Organization Act of 1951 (HR 1726) setting up three major divisions in the command of the Chief of Staff of the Air Force became law Sept. 19.

The main purpose of the legislation was to provide a statutory basis for the internal organization of the Air Force and Department of the Air Force. Prior to its enactment, Air Force organization was based on the National Security Act of 1947, which merely mentioned it as a separate service.

HOUSE

The Organization Act started out as HR 399, by Rep. Carl Vinson (D Ga.). It provided for a legal status for the Air Force similar to that of other services and for establishment of a new Tactical Air Command.

However, provisions of HR 399 would have stripped the Air Force of its medical service and several other units. The measure would have shifted the Air Force's quartermaster and judge advocate general's departments, chaplains and engineers to the Army. It would have abolished the Air Force medical service and split its duties between the Army and Navy.

In hearings before the House Armed Services Committee, Air Force Secretary Thomas K. Finletter objected vigorously to these provisions. At the close of its second hearing, Jan. 11 Committee Chairman Vinson directed his staff to rewrite the bill so the Air Force would be "in charge of its own housekeeping."

A new bill (HR 1726) was reported from the Armed Services Committee Jan. 22, 1951. The revised Air Force Organization Act of 1951 was passed by the House Jan. 24, by voice vote and without debate.

SENATE

The bill was reported in the Senate June 18, 1951, by the Armed Services Committee. The Senate passed a Committee - amended version June 21, by voice vote. This reversed two House provisions. One Senate change would have given the ranking air officer "command over" rather than "supervision of" the Air Force. The other eliminated the House provision authorizing three major Air Force commands — Defense, Strategic and Tactical.

Conference Report

The House asked for a conference June 22. The Senate agreed June 25. The conference report was filed Sept. 14, and the Senate agreed to it the same date. Three days later, the House agreed.

Under terms of the report, the ranking air officer was given "command over" the three combat commands but was limited to "supervision of" all other parts of the Air Force. The House provision authorizing the three commands was retained.

The act became Pubic Law 150 on receiving the President's signature.

Experimental Submarines

HR 1227 — P.L. 176

Because of design changes, overtime and shift work, and inflationary trends, the Navy in 1951 was authorized to spend an additional $8 million on two experimental submarines begun in 1947.

When the two submarines were in the preliminary design stage in 1947 their cost was estimated at $30 million. Congress raised the limitation to $41 million in 1949, and advised the Navy to ask for a larger fund if needed.

Rep. Lansdale G. Sasscer (D Md.) of the House Armed Services Committee introduced HR 1227 on Jan. 9. It called for a $45,600,000 limit on the cost of the submarines. Before repoarting the bill June 12, the Committee increased the proposed sum to $50 million to allow for "subsequent inflationary trends," although the Navy estimated in June, 1951, that the cost would not exceed $48,130,000.

The Committee explained that because of the "possibility" of additional increases it recommended the higher limit to avoid a succession of bills to raise the authorization.

The House Aug. 2 passed the bill by voice vote without amendment.

The Senate Armed Services Committee reported the bill Sept. 14. It recommended that the House-passed limit be reduced to $49 million in view of the Navy estimate.

The Senate accepted this Committee amendment, and passed the bill without debate on a voice vote Oct. 1.

On Oct. 5 the House concurred in the Senate amendment. The bill was signed by the President on Oct. 16, and became Public Law 176.

Cars for Veterans

S 1864 — P.L. 187

Summary—In the closing days of the first session Congress overrode a Presidential veto to pass a bill (S 1864) authorizing the Veterans Administration to provide up to $1,600 for the purchase of an automobile by any veteran of World War II or Korea who had lost one or both feet, one or both hands, or his sight, in line of duty. Applications had to be filed within three years of the bill's enactment or of the veteran's discharge from active duty.

HOUSE

A House version (HR 4233) of the legislation was introduced May 23 by Rep. Carl Elliott (D Ala.). It carried a provision to allow cash to veterans who did not get a car. When introduced it would have provided the car or cash only to veterans who had lost one or both legs, but before reporting it June 13 the House Veterans' Affairs Committee enlarged its coverage to include veterans who had lost one or both hands or who were blind.

The House passed its bill on a call of the Calendar June 20.

SENATE

A similar bill (S 1864) was introduced July 18 in the Senate by Herbert H. Lehman (D N.Y.), John O. Pastore (D R.I.), Richard M. Nixon (R Cal.), and James E. Murray (D Mont.), all of the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee. It would have supplied the cars only to veterans who had lost one or both legs, and would not allow the alternative of cash to eligible veterans. The bill was reported July 25 by the Labor and Public Welfare Committee.

The Senate passed S 1864 on call of the Calendar Sept. 9.

The House Committee on Veterans' Affairs substituted the text of its own bill (HR 4233) and reported S 1864 Aug. 15. The House passed this version by voice vote Sept. 17. On Sept. 19 the Senate requested a conference, and the House agreed Sept. 20.

CONFERENCE

The conferees eliminated the House provision for cash in lieu of a payment on an automobile, but accepted the House's inclusion of men who had lost one or both hands or who were blinded in line of duty. The conference report was agreed to by the House Oct. 5 and by the Senate Oct. 11.

VETO, OVERRIDE

The bill was vetoed by President Truman on Oct. 18. In his veto message the President said he would gladly approve legislation limiting the aid to veterans who had lost a leg on the theory that this would compensate for loss of mobility, but he objected to the special benefits for veterans who had lost only one hand or arm or are blind.

There were 70,000 World War II veterans rated 100 per cent disabled who could not qualify for an automobile under the bill, Mr. Truman said, and 9,200 veterans who have lost only one hand or arm who could qualify.

The Senate on Oct. 19 voted 55 to 10, 12 more than the two-thirds necessary, to override this veto. All 10 Senators voting against overriding the President were Democrats. Thirty Democrats and 25 Republicans voted to override. (See page 314).

The House vote, Oct. 20 was 223-53, 39 more than the necessary two-thirds. On the roll call, 117 Democrats and 105 Republicans favored overriding and 28 Democrats and 25 Republicans voted to uphold the veto. (See page 312).

Rep. Gerald R. Ford, Jr., (R Mich.) objected that the bill gave "one veteran a benefit which is not accorded another even though the other has an equally terrible disability."

Upon passage over the Presidential veto the bill became Public Law 187.

Veterans Co-Op Housing

HR 5745— P.L. 243

A bill (HR 5745) authorizing the Federal National Mortgage Association to purchase $30 million worth of securities issued to construct veterans cooperative housing was signed Oct. 30 and became Public Law 243.

The bill was reported by the House Banking Committee Oct. 20 and passed by the House that day by voice vote. It was passed by voice vote in the Senate Oct. 20. Sen. J. William Fulbright (D Ark.) told the Senate some veterans who had invested in projects were unable to get private lenders to take their government-backed mortgages at the four per cent interest rate allowed. He added that if FNMA were permitted to take over the mortgages, the projects could be completed. Fulbright offered a minor amendment which the Senate accepted. However, on a reconsideration, the measure was repassed by the Senate without the amendment.

Under provisions of the bill loans in any one state would be limited to not more than $3.5 million.

Korean Veterans Housing

Action was completed by Congress Oct. 16 on a bill (S 2244) extending to Korean veterans all housing privileges granted to other former servicemen. The measure, signed Oct. 26, became Public Law 214.

Through its provisions, Korean veterans became eligible for housing loans under the GI Bill of Rights and for preference in obtaining certain housing.

The measure, which amended the National Housing Act of 1937, was reported by the Senate Banking and Currency Committee Oct. 15. After only a minute's consideration, the Senate passed the bill by voice vote that day. The House passed it without amendment Oct. 16, also without a record vote.

VA Hospital Probe

When Dr. Paul B. Magnuson, Chicago orthopedic surgeon, was "involuntarily separated" and replaced as Chief Medical Officer of the Veterans Administration on Jan. 14, protests from medical schools and individual doctors led to an investigation of VA medical policies. The probe was conducted by a Senate Labor and Public Welfare Subcommittee headed by Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.).

First witness was VA Administrator Carl R. Gray, Jr., who testified at a closed hearing Feb. 8. He said, according to Humphrey, that Dr. Magnuson was dismissed not because of a change in VA policy but because of an administrative dispute. Gray denied he had interfered with the practice of medicine and said Magnuson wanted virtual autonomy for his division.

Magnuson testified Feb. 20. He said the existing VA setup was not conducive to a clear - cut medical care policy. He insisted he was fired as a result of long - standing differences with Gray's administration over administrative policies for veterans hospitals. He said that without consulting the Chief Medical Director, Gray would take actions which "directly or indirectly adversely affected medical care."

A trio of doctors representing the Association of Medical Colleges and the Medical Schools Deans' Committee charged Feb. 20 in an Association statement unanimously approved by 50 medical schools that "increasing difficulties experienced during the past two years threaten the continued existence of the present excellent medical program" of the VA.

The witnesses who testified in closed session, were Drs. Joseph C. Hinsey, dean of Cornell University Medical School and chairman of the Association's executive council; R. High Wood, dean of Emory University Medical School and chairman of the Association committee on Veterans Administration-medical school relationships, and John Truslow of the Medical College of Virginia.

Defend Medical Program

Gen. Paul R. Hawley of the American College of Surgeons and former VA medical director, Dr. Harold A. Rusk of the National Security Resources Board, and Dr. Harold S. Diehl of the University of Minnesota testified March 8 in defense of the VA medical program. However, Hawley felt that the situation was evidence "of a policy of administration which in my considered opinion will very shortly destroy one of the finest accomplishments in all history in the fields of medical care and medical education."

Robert L. L. McCormick, Director of Research for the Citizens' Committee for the Hoover Report, said March 13 that "these difficulties threaten to disrupt, and might even destroy, the medical service a grateful nation wants to give the veteran." U. S. Public Health Service, Army and Navy medical officials urged, according to Humphrey, "an administrative pattern of . . . VA medical care that is free from any outside interference."

COMMITTEE REPORT

The Senate Labor Subcommittee issued a report July 10 criticizing Veterans Administrator Gray for precipitating a "crisis" in the medical care program of VA. The report expressed the "deep displeasure and shock" of the Committee at the "administrator's nightmare" in the VA medical organization under Gray.

The Subcommittee praised Gray, however, for cooperating in its inquiry, and noted that during the final hearings May 10 and 11 testimony indicated that Gray was willing to strengthen the hand of Vice. Adm. Joel T. Boone, who replaced Magnuson as Chief Medical Director.

The Subcommittee recommended formal delegation to the Chief Medical Director of primary authority over VA medical activities; appointment of managers of VA hospitals only on the prior approval of the medical director; integration of the work of special services activities with the functions of the medical department; revision of budget control and personnel ceiling procedures in VA hospitals.

The Subcommittee also recommended legislative changes in P.L. 293 (79th Cong.) to "leave no doubt whatsoever" that Congress intended chief medical directors of VA to have principal authority over the medical and hospital program, that they be appointed by the President with consent of the Senate and that a number of changes be made in the special medical group which advises the VA on its medical program.

Gray, commenting on the report July 12, said that the Subcommittee's proposals if put into effect would divide authority and create confusion in the VA.

Preparedness. Investigations

Summary—More than 30 reports on numerous phases of the national defense effort were issued during 1951 by a special Preparedness Subcommittee of the Senate Armed Services Committee. The group, created July 27, 1950, was appointed to keep a "continuous watchfulness" on the rearmament program, explore bottlenecks and shortages, and to eliminate duplicating investigations.

The group released four reports during 1950 (CQ Almanac Vol. VI, 1950, p. 320) and swung into action during 1951 with 30 or more investigations into such problems as manpower, military housing, commodities such as tin, tungsten and rubber, and general conditions in scores of military indoctrination and training centers in the U.S.

The Subcommittee consisted of Lyndon B. Johnson (D Tex.), chairman; Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.), Lester C. Hunt (D Wyo.), John C. Stennis (D Miss.), Styles Bridges (R N.H.), Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.), and Wayne Morse (R Ore.).

REPORTS

GI Housing

"Shameful profiteering" in servicemen's housing near large posts was described in two reports by the Subcommittee. In its first report, issued July 19, the group called for immediate solution of the "urgent and almost tragic housing problem" facing military personnel. The investigation covered the following bases:

Camp Breckenridge, Ky.
Camp Rucker, Ala.
Fort Leonard Wood, Mo.

A second and broader survey was undertaken by the Subcommittee and a report released Sept. 24 substantiated earlier findings of rent gouging and substandard housing. Bases covered in the second probe included:

Camp Lejeune, N. C.
Fort Jackson, S. C.
Camp Polk, La.
Chanute Air Base, Rantoul, Ill.
Camp Atterbury, Ind.
Camp Pickett, Va.
Fort Dix, N. J.
U. S. Naval Training Center, Bainbridge, Md.

Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md.
Ent Air Force Base and Camp Carson, Colorado Springs, Colo.
Pensacola Naval Air Station, Fla.
Fort Devens, Mass.
Lake Charles Air Force Base, La.
Alexandria Air Force Base, La.
Eglin Field, Fla.

Manpower

Two of the group's reports dealt with excessive administrative manpower in the armed forces. In a June 10 report on manpower utilization at military indoctrination centers, the Subcommittee said that it had found three to five divisions of combat-qualified men performing "chair corps" or household duties. Sen. Johnson pointed out that this was "enough men to fill our commitment to Europe."

As a result of its investigation of 16 basic training and indoctrination centers, the group recommended a revision by the armed services of policies and standards. It urged that limited - service men (including athletes), women in uniform, and civilians be used to the fullest extent to replace the nearly 100,000 men doing desk work, kitchen work and other similar jobs.

The actual number comprising the "chair corps", according to the Senate group, was 95,784, of which 10,520 were officers and 85,264 enlisted men.

The second report dealing with manpower was issued Nov. 13. The group protested that the nation's defense set-up was top heavy and that Washington, D.C., abounded in "upper brass." The report said that the number of generals, admirals and Defense Department civilian officials stationed in the Pentagon and surrounding area was near the level of World War II, when the armed forces were three and one-half times their present size.

Training Centers

The Preparedness Subcommittee decided Jan. 31 to "make a complete and thorough investigation" of basic training centers of the Army, Navy and Air Force, and in the following months the group investigated scores of bases throughout the country.

The investigation was prompted by reports of widespread sickness and suicides at the Lackland Air Force Training Center near San Antonio, Tex. The group issued a report on the Lackland Air Base Feb. 19 and said the rumors were unfounded, but criticized the AF for overcrowding of recruits. It recommended that Congress consider abolishing volunteer recruiting. Further probes of 16 recruit training centers caused the group to conclude that the armed forces were doing "a commendable job" of operating reception and basic training centers. The Subcommittee's praise was included in an April 16 report. It issued individual reports on each base as well. Bases covered and dates of reports follow:

Fort Jackson, S. C. - April 25.
Camp Jaffe, Ark. - April 25.
Fort Leonard Wood, Mo. - April 25.
Marine Depot, San Diego, Calif. - April 25.
Fort Ord, Calif. - May 7.
Naval Training Station, Newport R.I. - May 7.
Naval Training Center, Great Lakes, Ill. - May 7.
Sampson Air Force Base, Geneva, N. Y. - May 7.
Marine Depot, Parris Island - May 21.
Camp Roberts, Calif. - May 21.
Fort Dix, N. J. - May 21.
Fort Knox, Ky. - May 21.
Sheppard Air Force Base, Texas- June 1.
Naval Training Center, San Diego, Calif. - June 1.
Fort Riley, Kan. - June 1.
Camp Breckenridge, Ky. - June 1.

The group did not, however, find perfect conditions at all the bases. For instance it criticized the morale at Fort Knox and the housing at Camp Roberts.

Navy, Marines

In a later report, issued Oct. 25, the Subcommittee covered six Navy and Marine Corps installations and generally expressed satisfaction with conditions existing in the bases covered. However, it criticized the "lack of cost consciousness" in all the bases and low morale at three Marine bases —Camp Lejeune, Camp Pendleton and El Toro. The low morale, the group said, was due primarily to the rapid mobilization program which required calling reserves who did not expect to return to military service in so short a time. The bases covered were:

Marine Corps Air Station, Quantico, Va.
Marine Corps Air Station, El Toro, Calif.
Camp Lejeune, N. C.
Camp Pendleton, Calif.
Submarine Base, New London, Conn.
Amphibious Base, Little Creek, Norfolk, Va.

Factors considered in both investigations included housing, clothing medical care, recreation facilities, training programs, and morale.

Commodities

The Subcommittee issued reports on three specific commodities during 1951 — tin, tungsten and rubber. In a March 6 report, the group disclosed that tin prices had advanced more than 150 per cent since the outbreak of Korean hostilities and urged the U.S. to halt its tin-buying program rather than pay soaring prices. The group acknowledged that tin "is vitally needed for the nation's domestic and military economy" but added that "we are no longer in the position where we must buy at any price." There was more tin in the United States when it made the survey than there was in 1941, the group reported.

Within 24 hours after the report was released, the government took action in line with the group's suggestions. An announcement by the General Services Administration, buyer of tin for the nation's stockpile, said purchase of the commodity would be suspended "until (prices) reach a reasonable level." Purchases for industrial uses would be held to the "barest minimum," it added.

In a July 5 report, the Preparedness Subcommittee said that the nation's tungsten supply situation was "little short of desperate." Stockpiles were "down to a danger point," the group said, because the Munitions Board failed to buy enough tungsten from July, 1946, to July, 1950. It blamed the Army for not telling the Board of its needs and scored the Board for not discovering them.

An accelerated rubber stockpiling program and tighter regulation of civilian consumption of natural rubber was recommended by the group in a Sept. 4 report. It was sharply critical of former Defense Administrator William H. Harrison's decision in April 1951 to relax rubber stockpiling and release more natural rubber for civilian consumption. The report called for development of domestic sources of natural rubber, and expansion of synthetic rubber production and use, including expansion of German synthetic rubber plants.

On Sept. 12 Jess Larson, General Services Administrator, wrote Johnson that "certain market interests" had interpreted the group's report to mean the government would "launch an intensive buying program" and that within six days after the report was issued, the price of natural rubber had gone up 11 per cent.

Other Topics

An investigation into standardization of specifications led the group to declare in a Nov. 11 report that tax money was being wasted by the "inexcusable failure" of the Departments of Army and Agriculture to get together on their specifications for procurement of dried eggs and inspection of poultry.

"The issues may not be very dramatic," the group admitted, but still the taxpayer was losing money because of lack of standardized grading and duplication of effort in inspection.

Other reports issued during 1951 included one Feb. 22, on the defense of Alaska. The Committee said Alaska was embarked on "a realistic plan for the defense of the Territory." Another report, issued April 9, charged that a Defense Department employee had been given $4,500 by Orange, Tex., officials to increase Army freight shipments through the port there. The employee resigned, according to Defense officials.

Other Reports

Three other reports, issued late in the year, were concerned mainly with waste and delay in the defense program. Cracking its whip at the Defense Department, the Senate group Nov. 29 said a dangerous lag was evident in the production of defense hard good — planes, tanks, ships and guns. The main reason for the delay, the report said, was failure to assign top priority to military production.

In a Dec. 7 report, the group said that the Air Force still had too many able-bodied men in "chair corps" jobs and urged greater use of limited-service men. After a survey of six Air Force Training Centers, the Subcommitee said that waste in the Air Force and other armed services could "create a profound danger to the finances of the nation."

The six Centers checked were:

Langley Air Force Base, Va

Carswell Air Force Base, Tex.

Lowry Air Force Base, Colo.

Mather Air Force Base, Calif.

March Air Force Base, Calif.

Keesler Air Force Base, Miss.

In a Dec. 26 report, the Subcommittee accused the Army of "inexcusable and indefensible waste" after an on-the-scene survey of eight Army training installations. The group again repeated its charge of waste of manpower and cited other examples of waste of materials. On the positive side, the report said the Army was doing a good job of feeding, clothing and housing.

Training installations inspected were:

Camp Atterbury, Ind.

Fort Belvoir, Va.

Camp McCoy, Wis.

Camp Rucker, Ala

Fort Devens, Mass.

Fort Lewis, Wash.

Camp Kilmer, N. J.

Camp Edwards, Mass.

Parcel Post Limits

Summary — Despite Post Office Department opposition, the Congress in 1951 passed legislation reducing size and weight limits on fourth class (parcel post) mail, to get the Post Office Department "out of the freight business." The restrictions were applied only to and from first - class post offices — those of large cities. Exempted were live baby fowl and plant parcels.

Identical bills were introduced in the House (April 2) by M. G. Burnside (D W.Va.) and in the Senate (April 13) by Olin D. Johnston (D S.C.) for himself and four other Senators. The Post Office and Civil Service Committees of both chambers conducted hearings on them.

The Senate Committee approved S 1335 with amendments on Aug. 21; the Senate passed it by voice vote on Sept. 6. The House Committee approved the bill Sept. 24 with further amendments. These the House accepted. It added an exemption, and passed the bill Oct. 8.

The Senate requested a conference and the House agreed on Oct. 15. In conference the House - passed version on S 1335 was accepted, and this was agreed to by both House and Senate on Oct. 17.

The President signed S 1335 on Oct. 24.

Provisions — S 1335, as finally passed, applied to fourth - class mail sent to or from first-class post offices (those of larger cities) and set limits of:

40 pounds in the first and second zones and 20 pounds in the third to eighth zones. The previous limit had been 70 pounds in all zones.

72 inches for length and girth combined. This limit previously was 100 inches.

Limits on packages to and from rural areas, Army and Fleet post offices and possessions and territories were unchanged at 100 inches in girth and length combined and 70 pounds in weight.

Parcels containing books, live plants, trees, shrubs or agricultural commodities were also exempted.

Background—The Parcel Post service was established in 1912 to provide transportation service for small parcels not exceeding 11 pounds in weight and 72 inches in length and girth combined. Later orders of the Postmaster General gradually liberalized these limits to 70 pounds and 100 inches.

During the fiscal year 1950, according to reports of the House and Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committees, the Parcel Post service handled 1,008,631,565 pieces weighing 6,950,255,267 pounds. Only .537 per cent of the packages exceeded 50 pounds in weight but this aggregate covered 5 million parcels and 300 million pounds.

The Committee reports said that because of a difference which has developed between parcel post rates and Railway Express rates, the Post Office Department was in the express and freight business while motor carriers and the Railway Express Agency competing for similar business were faced with a very critical loss of revenue because of the diversion of parcel shipping from Railway Express to Parcel Post. Not only had the companies suffered considerable financial loss, the reports continued, but 40,000 Railway Express employees had lost their jobs.

The Committees felt that even increasing parcel post rates to cover costs would not correct the difference because such items as the $50 million annual contribution by the government toward retirement of postal employees, free rents in government buildings, and taxes would not show in Post Office Department costs but must be accounted for in charges by private firms.

The Committees heard testimony that approximately 93 per cent of all parcels were sent to patrons of the 2,500 first - class post offices in communities where alternate express facilities were available, so that they were not dependent upon the service to receive merchandise.

SENATE

Olin D. Johnston (D S.C.), Chairman of the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee on April 13 introduced S 1335, to readjust the fourth - class mail size and weight limitations, for himself and George A. Smathers (D Fla.), James H. Duff (R Pa.), Matthew M. Neely (D W.Va.) and John O. Pastore (D R.I.).

Committee

The Post Office and Civil Service Committee opened hearings on S 1335 April 26. K. N. Merritt of the Railway Express Agency endorsed the proposal to reduce the size and weight limits, saying the Parcel Post business of the Post Office Department was the direct cause of the drop in Railway Express business and employment. The Department was in the freight business in competition with private enterprise, he said.

Other support came from Hartman Barber of the Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, Freight Handlers, Express and Station Employees (AFL), while opposition was voiced by Frank B. Taussig, executive vice - president of the Grolier Society, New York, and Dr. Luther Evans, Librarian of Congress.

On April 27 mail order firms opposed the bill. Witnesses included Paul W. Brown of Sears, Roebuck and Co., who challenged Merritt's testimony. Brown contended the public interest was not "best served by depriving citizens in the larger towns of a service still made available to citizens of towns with slightly less population." Brown said the decrease in express business was caused by a diversion to truck movement at lower rates.

This stand was supported by Edward B. Rubin of Spiegel, Inc., Chicago; Faye Waggoner of Aldens, Inc., Chicago, and by a representative of Wm. E. Wright and Sons Co., West Warren, Mass.

Opponents of S 1335 testifying May 2 included Paul H. Bolton, National Association of Wholesalers, Alvin Voges, Florida Express Fruit Shippers Association, J. T. Sanders, the National Grange, and Lloyd King, American Text Book Publishers Institute.

In letters to the Committee dated July 13 and Aug. 15 Postmaster General J. M. Donaldson said the Post Office Department opposed the bill on the ground that it discriminated against patrons of first and second-class post offices. He also said it would take considerably more time for window clerks to handle parcels if they had to determine the clast of post office at the place of address before determining the mailability of packages and "any increase in the time required to accept parcels would be a substantial increase in the expenditures for handling this class of mail."

The bill as introduced had set the weight limit for zones three to eight at 20 pounds and had excepted from size restrictions only packages to or from third and fourth-class post offices. The Committee proposed changing the weight limit for zones three to eight to 30 pounds, and exempted from the new limits baby fowl, live plants, trees, shrubs and agricultural commodities.

With these amendments, the Committee recommended passage, reporting the bill to the Senate on Aug. 21 (legislative day, Aug. 1).

Floor Action

The Senate passed S 1335 by voice vote on Sept. 6.

Herbert H. Lehman (D N.Y.) contended passage constituted a "serious discrimination" against parcel post users in big cities. One of the bill's sponsors, Johnston agreed, but said the exceptions for third and fourth-class post offices were necessary if rural areas were to be served at all. Since the express companies cannot serve them, he said, the Post Office Department must.

Lehman also objected that the bill would not save the Post Office money but that, on the contrary, its expenses might be increased by shippers breaking large packages into smaller ones. Johnston also agreed that this might happen, but said the Department lacked facilities to handle packages as large as were permitted, and that the Department was putting express companies out of business by doing so.

George D. Aiken (R Vt.) said passage of the bill would put the express companies "on trial". If they failed to provide adequate service, he said, Congress might revert to a larger parcel post service.

Neely contended that the "unfair competition" of the government's service had "robbed 32,000 express employees of their jobs in the last four years."

Before passage of the bill Johnston won adoption of an amendment adding books to the exceptions from the new size and weight limitations.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Olin D. Johnston (D S.C.), Everett M. Dirksen (R Ill.), Herman Welker (R Idaho), George A. Smathers (D Fla.) Thomas R. Underwood (D Ky.), John O. Pastore (D R.I.) and Frank Carlson (R Kan.) — Exempt books containing no advertising matter. Voice vote.

HOUSE

M. G. Burnside (D W.Va.) introduced HR 3465, identical to S 1335 as introduced, on April 2.

Committee

The House Post Office and Civil Service Committee held hearings on HR 3465 Sept. 18 - 20. Spokesmen for the Railway Express Agency, Inc., again urged adoption of the measure as a step toward getting the Post Office "out of the freight business." Alfred L. Hammell, president of Railway Express, attacking what he called "unfair competition" offered by parcel post, said parcel post operations in the previous five years had lost over $350 million, despite the fact that operations were tax-free and that the Post Office did not pay for the space in government-owned buildings.

Deputy Postmaster General Vincent C. Burke said that changing the weight limitations would only result in an increased number of smaller parcels and said that higher rates would do more to cut volume. The reason the Post Office handled so many packages, he said, was that "we operate the greatest bargain counter going."

He urged that if Congress enacted the bill it provide uniform weight limits for all areas without exceptions. The different limits and exemptions of the Senate bill would make the law very difficult to administer, Burke argued.

An American Poultry and Hatchery Federation, Inc., representative, William A. Collett, testified in opposition to the bill on Sept. 20. Collett also represented Luziers, Inc., a cosmetic firm.

HR 3465 was approved by the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee on Sept. 21.

A few days later the Committee approved the companion Senate measure, S 1335. Before reporting it on Sept. 24, however, the Committee amended it to restore the original weight limit of 20 pounds for the third to eighth zones, instead of the 30 pound limit set by the Senate. The House Committee also restricted the new limits to first-class post offices by adding second-class offices to those exempted.

Floor Action

These committee amendments were accepted by the House and the measure was passed by voice vote on Oct. 8. The House also amended S 1335 to except parcels to and from Army and Fleet post offices and possessions and territories from the new smaller limits.

Tom Murray (D Tenn.), Edward H. Rees (R Kan.), Burnside, James S. Golden (R Ky.) and John Lesinski Jr. (D Mich.), all of the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee, supported the bill with statements explaining that its purpose was to stop Post Office Department competition with private enterprise.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Committee — Limit to 20 pounds weight of parcels to parcel post zones three to eight. Voice vote.

Committee — Remove size and weight limitations from packages to or from second - class post offices. Voice.

Tom Murray (D Tenn.) — Exempt from bill's provisions parcels to and from Army, Fleet, territorial and possession's post offices. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

William C. Lantaff (D Fla.) — Extend new weight and size limits to all classes of post offices. Voice vote.

CONFERENCE

The Senate on Oct. 12 requested a conference on the bill, and on Oct. 15 the House agreed.

The Senate version set new weight limits of 40 pounds for the first and second zones and 30 pounds for zones three to eight. The House limited the weight for the third to eighth zones to 20 pounds. The Senate had exempted only third and fourth - class post offices; the House also exempted second - class post offices, and parcels to and from the Army and Fleet post offices, possessions and territories.

In both weight limits and zone exemptions, the House version was accepted in conference. Both House and Senate approved the conference report on S 1335 by voice votes on Oct. 17.

President Truman signed the bill on Oct. 24, and S 1335 became Public Law 199.

Postal Rate Increases

S 1046—P. L. 233

Summary — A boost in postal charges to increase revenues by $117 million annually was passed by Congress in 1951 at Administration request.

President Truman, in a Feb. 27 message to Congress, asked for legislation to double the price of post cards and third-class bulk mail rates, and "at least" double over a three-year period the rates on second-class mail, which includes magazines and newspapers.

Identical bills were introduced within a few days by Chairmen of the Senate and House Post Office and Civil Service Committees. Extensive hearings were conducted by both committees. Publishers' representatives protested the proposed increases; some opposed any increases, others insisted they should not be as high as the original bills provided. Representatives from religious, educational, philanthropic, agricultural and fraternal organizations testified that their groups could not afford any increases.

Lo, The Penny Post Card

Among the rate increases was one that ended (on Jan. 1, 1952) the penny post card. The increase to two cents was an Administration suggestion, as were the hikes voted in rates on drop letters, special delivery and registered letter fees.

Some other Administration proposals were modified. A 30 per cent hike, over a three-year period, was authorized in second-class rates; and a 50 per cent increase was granted in third-class bulk mail rates.

Senate passage came Sept. 7, while the House acted finally Sept. 19. A month later, both chambers accepted by voice votes the conference report that reconciled many differences between their versions. First-class, air mail and fourth-class increases, all approved by the Senate, were dropped in conference. However, a Senate amendment adding a Title II on annual leave for government employees was retained. (For Annual Leave story, see page 323.)

President Truman signed S 1046 on Oct. 30 and it became Public Law 233.

Provisions — The act as passed would:

Increase from one cent to two cents the rate on post cards and drop letters after Jan. 1, 1952. Post cards bought in lots of 50 or more were to cost an additional 10 per cent.

Increase second-class postal rates by 30 per cent over a three-year period at the rate of 10 per cent a year, beginning April 1, 1952.

Deny second-class mailing rates to publications containing more than 75 per cent advertising in more than one-half of their issues over a 12-month period. Transportation schedules, fares and related information were specifically excepted from the definition of advertising.

Exempt from second-class rates increases publications of non-profit religious, educational, scientific, philanthropic, agricultural, labor, fraternal or veterans organizations and publications designed for use in classroom or for religious instruction, whether or not published for profit. Publishers were required to file proof of qualification with the Postmaster General.

Increase the minimum charge for third-class bulk matter from one cent to one and one-half cents per piece, effective July 1, 1952. Non-profit organizations' publications were exempted from these third-class increases, too.

Increase the special delivery fee for first-class mail as follows: From 15 cents to 20 for mail under two pounds; from 25 to 35 cents for mail weighing two to 10 pounds; and from 35 to 50 cents for pieces over 10 pounds.

Increase special delivery fees for other classes of mail from 25 to 35 cents for mail under two pounds, from 35 to 45 cents for mail between two and 10 pounds, and from 45 to 60 cents for mail over 10 pounds.

Provide various registration fee increases. On material up to $5 in value the fee was increased from 20 cents to 40; between $5 and $25 the increase was from 35 cents to 55 cents; between $400 and $500 the increase was from $1 to $1.25; and between $900 and $1,000 the increase was from $1.50 to $1.75.

Authorize the Postmaster General to prescribe fees for special services such as registry, money orders, collect-on-delivery mail, insurance, and return receipts.

Establish a Joint Committee on the Postal Service to be composed of three members each from the Senate and House Committees on Post Office and Civil Service. The joint committee received an authorization of $100,000 to investigate and report before Jan. 15, 1953, on: Rates and charges in relation to handling costs, by classes and services; extent to which costs of free postal service, overage on international postal service, subsidies provided by acts of Congress and services provided by other government agencies should be excluded in computing postal costs; expenditures on behalf of the Post Office by other government agencies such as employees' retirement, use of government buildings, maintenance services, etc., and extent to which expenses in excess of revenues are justified in the public interest.

Establish revised federal vacation and sick leave system for all government employees to become effective Jan. 6, 1952. (See Page 323.)

Background — In 1949 Postmaster General Jesse M. Donaldson reported that his department annually went $550 million in the red, and requested increases in rates to reduce that part of the debt attributable to general mail users. Bills to provide partial relief were introduced in both houses and received Committees' approval, but did not receive floor action during 1949.

The House passed its bill on Feb. 9, 1950, by voice vote. The Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee conducted new hearings on the House-passed bill in April, May and June, but took no action. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, 1950, pp. 427-429).

President Truman, in a message to Congress Feb. 27, 1951, said that the mail service deficit for fiscal 1952 would be about $521 million and that all major types of postal service except first - class mail were provided at a loss. He proposed that postage on post cards be raised from one cent to two cents, that second - class mail rates be "at least" doubled, that the rate on third - class mail be increased from one cent to two cents, and that rates for special services be increased "by enough to eliminate the deficit in this portion of the postal operation."

Bills to increase the postal revenues were introduced on Feb. 28 by Tom Murray (D Tenn.), Chairman of the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee, and on March 6 by Olin D. Johnston (D S.C.), Chairman of the Senate Committee.

SENATE

Hearings

The Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee conducted 18 days of hearings on S 1046 between March 20 and May 17. Postmaster Donaldson was the first witness. He discussed provisions of the bill in detail, and said that if Congress opposed the increases, thus tacitly endorsing the Post Office's operating at a deficit, it should not charge inefficient management.

Donaldson said the proposed increases would furnish only about $166 million to apply against the annual deficit of about $500 million. Much of this deficit, he said, was from "advertising matter" sent through the mails at reduced rates.

At further hearings on April 3, W. C. Doherty, president of the National Association of Letter Carriers, supported the bill, but proposed various amendments, including an increase in first - class postal rates and airmail rates, and the request that postal functions cut for economy reasons in April, 1950, be restored.

Next day E. T. Meredith, general manager of the Meredith Publishing Company which issues "Better Homes and Gardens" and other publications told the Committee that some magazines would fail under the impact of doubled postal rates. J. T. Sanders, legislative counsel for the National Grange, said that the postal service should be viewed according to its benefits to the public and the nation, and that "commercial considerations should not be the over - riding factor in postal legislation."

Other witnesses who opposed the bill April 4 included E. Urner Goodman, National Welfare Social Assembly of New York, and Carl Seifert, Pennsylvania Association of Colleges.

Propose Smaller Increase

Publishers representing 207 small and medium - size magazines told the Senate Committee April 10 that the proposed 100 per cent rate increase in second - class rates would put many such publications out of business. They suggested an increase of not more than 25 per cent, spread over three years.

The witnesses included Donald Snyder, Boston, publisher of the Atlantic Monthly; Borden Putnam, New York, partner in the accounting firm of J. K. Lasser and Co.; William J. Rooke, Atlanta, president of the W. R. C. Smith Publishing Co., and Albert Kalmbach of Milwaukee, president of the Kalmbach Publishing Co.

Newspaper publishers appeared before the Senators April 11 and opposed the 100 per cent increase. Spokesmen included C. C. Lane, assistant business manager of the New York Times, and Cranston Williams, general manager of the American Newspaper Publishers Association. Lane said enough second-class mail would be diverted to other channels to leave little if any increased postal revenue. Williams suggested a 10 per cent increase and a reassessment of the entire problem.

Spokesmen for farm publishers, Charles E. Sweet, Capper Publications, Topeka, Kan., and John B. Gordon of the Progressive Farmer, told the Committee April 12 they would be willing to accept a 30 per cent increase, but that the 100 per cent boost would wreck their businesses.

George J. Hecht, publisher of "Parents' Magazine" and other periodicals, said in testimony April 13 the postal department is a service institution and that no more effort should be made to cut out its deficit than to make Agriculture Department services to pay their way.

Religious Publications

Dr. Daniel Poling, Philadelphia, editor of "The Christian Herald", and other religious editors testitified their publications would be hard hit by a mail - rate increase. The others included Dr. Herbert F. Osteyee, American Baptist Publication Society, Philadelphia, speaking for a group of Protestant publishing houses, and F. A. Fink, president of the Catholic Press Association of the U. S.

Benjamin Bogin, vice president of Conde Nast publications, Greenwich, Conn., proposed a one-third increase in second class rates, spread over three years. Mrs. Eleanor Walker, publisher of "The Grade Teacher," Darien, Conn., testified that her publication could stand no more than a 15 per cent increase.

William H. Kircher of "The Farmer," St. Paul, Minn., asked that farm publications be treated as educational media.

Wendell Berge and A. Alvis Layne, Jr., representing Associated Third Class Mail Users, Inc., composed of 506 members, argued April 17 that a proposed 100 per cent increase in third class mail rates would fail to raise the expected revenue.

Opposing a hike in third class rates and the c.o.d. fee were Sigmond A. Robinson, Real Silk Hosiery Mills, Inc., Indianapolis; L. B. Whitehouse, of Morton Manufacturing Corp., Lynchburg, Va., and Edward F. Dinan of Fashion Frocks, Inc., Cincinnati.

Spokesmen for the National Tuberculosis Association, the National Society for Crippled Children and Adults, and the American Humane Association and its 600 affiliates also opposed the postal rate bill.

NEA Representative

Ed M. Anderson, representing the National Editorial Association (about 6,000 members) testified April 18 that his group would be willing to accept "reasonable" increases of not more than 30 per cent, spread over three years, provided the Post Office Department improved its service, that a thorough survey was made of postal rate structures, that free rural mail was retained and equality to costs was instituted. The suggested rise in second class rates, he said, "is entirely too great."

R. J. Christian, representing 20 Seventh Day Adventist publishing houses told the Committee, "the proposed rates constitute an actual and real danger to the freedom of the press by imposing burdens and restrictions not hitherto known in this country."

O. R. Strackbein, legislation representative of the International Allied Printing Trades Association, said more accurate information was needed on postal rates before Congress considered increasing them.

Witnesses April 19 on S 1046 included E. J. Volz, of the International Photo - Engravers Union, Charles E. Foster of the Disabled American Veterans, Sam O'Neal of the National Council on Business Mail, John McDonald Kane of the Mail Advertising Service Association, and Edward N. Mayer, Jr., of the Direct Mail Advertising Association. All opposed the legislation.

Would Wipe Out Profits?

A. L. Cole, business manager of "Reader's Digest", testified April 20 on behalf of the National Association of Magazine Publishers in opposition to the proposed second class rate increase. It would wipe out net profits of many of his group's 343 members, he contended.

George L. Warfel of the National Association of Special Delivery Messengers on April 23 argued that the proposed increase in special delivery rates would reduce the volume and raise the unit cost.

Herbert G. Pillen of the Controlled Circulation Newspapers of America, Inc., protested the proposed rate increase in free - distribution newspapers and urged for such publications standard second class mailing privileges.

William D. Patterson of the Saturday Review of Literature opposed an increase in book mailing rates. Angus McDonald of the National Farmers Union opposed any rate hikes which would reduce rural area service.

In favor of the proposed increases was Charles L. Ashcraft, of the National Rural Letter Carriers' Association.

Testifying April 24 in opposition to the second class increase were two Curtis Publishing Co. spokesmen, Walter D. Fuller, chairman, and L. H. Palmer. The hike would force diversion to other distribution methods and bring an actual loss in postal receipts, they contended.

Samuel Neusner of the Jewish Ledger Publications, Hartford, Conn., opposed the second class increase April 25. A brief from Edward Stevens of the Connecticut Editorial Association supported Neusner's views.

Frank B. Taussig of the Grolier Society, Inc., publisher of sets of educational books, opposed the bill. Dr. Luther Harris Evans of the Library of Congress asked that books be given second class mailing privileges.

Witnesses Clash

A clash occurred May 1 when a present and a former postal official testified. Vincent C. Burke, deputy postmaster general, referring to a magazine article by another witness, objected to "blows below the belt." The other witness, James J. Doran, former director of budget and planning rates for the Post Office Department, had criticized some postal practices in his article. In his testimony, Doran said the Department could save money by dropping some procedures.

On April 25, the National Farmers Union filed a statement with the Committee calling for higher rates for publications carrying much advertising.

In another appearance before the Committee May 17, Postmaster General Donaldson said he would not object to an increase in first - class letter mail rates if the other classes would pay more.

Noting that some newspaper spokesmen strongly opposed raising second - class rates for publications, Donaldson said "publishers will not be hurt very much" even if these rates were doubled.

Meantime, a bipartisan group of eight Senators had on April 12 introduced a resolution calling for a joint Congressional committee to study postal rates and policies. Frank Carlson (R Kan.), heading the group, said Congress lacked "sufficient information to legislate intelligently on such complicated and controversial questions as postal rates." The resolution (S J Res 60,) would have set up a joint committee composed of members of both houses. It also would have established an advisory body of representatives of the public, commercial mail users, management engineering and accounting firms, public transportation and distribution concerns, postal employee groups and the Post Office Department.

Among matters to have been considered were mailing privileges of newspapers and whether Post Office figures on mailing costs were accurate. Other Senators sponsoring S J Res 60 were Olin D. Johnston (D S.C.) John O. Pastore (D R.I.), Thomas R. Underwood (D Ky.), Everett M. Dirksen (R Ill.), William Langer (R N.D.), Herman Welker (R Idaho) and John M. Butler (R Md.).

The provisions of this resolution were later incorporated into S 1046.

Committee

The Committee approved S 1046 on July 17, after preparing amendments to increase rates on first class mail from 3 to 4 cents, on airmail letters from 6 to 8 cents and on air postals and post cards from 4 to 5 cents. It agreed to increases in second - class mail, but recommended 10 per cent each year for three years, or a total of 30 per cent, whereas the bill as introduced had called for an increase over three years of 50 per cent.

Religious, temperance, scientific and educational books designed for classroom and religious instruction were exempted from the increased rates. The Committee recommended the third-class bulk mail minimum be 1 1/4 cents the first year and 1 1/2 the second instead of the 2 cents the original bill recommended.

Another amendment was added to the bill on Aug. 14 by the Committee, to provide an increase in fourth class (parcel post) rates to bring in an estimated $63 million additional revenue.

It was estimated that the bill as approved by the Committee would increase postal revenue approximately $360 million.

Floor Action

S 1046, reported in the Senate on Aug. 21, was debated and amended on Sept. 6, and amended further and finally passed on Sept. 7.

As it came before the Senate, the bill contained a provision for restoration of twice-daily mail deliveries in residential areas. Richard B. Russell (D Ga.) set off a long debate with an amendment to knock this provision out of the bill. Langer spoke in support of the renewal of two mail deliveries and denounced Postmaster General Donaldson. With only a handful of Members present, the Russell amendment was adopted by voice vote. Next day Langer moved to reconsider this vote, but his motion was rejected on a 17-46 roll call. (For voting, see Page 406.)

Controversy developed Sept. 6 during the debate on the provision increasing cost of air mail stamps. Chief objector was Edwin C. Johnson (D Colo.) who protested the rate boost would "destroy the airlines." He said that trial of an eight-cent air mail stamp rate during World War II resulted in a sharp decline in air mail volume because it "priced air mail out of the market." When the rate was cut back to six cents, the volume returned, he argued.

But Johnson (D S.C.) said adoption of the amendment would wipe out almost $17 million of revenue.

The Colorado Senator's amendment to strike out the air mail increase was defeated on a roll-call vote, 18-49.

The Committee had recommended two 25 per cent increases in third-class bulk mail rates. An amendment introduced by Dennis Chavez (D N.M.) Sept. 6 to cut out the second increase, making the total increase only 25 per cent, was passed by voice vote. Next day the Senate reversed itself in a standing vote on a motion by Long to reconsider, and the Committee provision for an additional 25 per cent increase the second year was accepted.

The Senate also attached to the bill, without opposition, a provision for a unified leave system for all federal employees.

It turned down, 28-32, an amendment by Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) to increase second-class postal rates a total of 60 per cent over a three-year period. But immediately afterward it accepted, 36-24, an amendment by Russell B. Long (D La.) which held newspapers to the 30 per cent increase recommended by the Committee, but applied the 60 per cent increase to other second-class mail.

Two amendments submitted by Long to keep some post cards at a penny were turned down, one by a vote of 10-56, the other by standing vote.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Richard B. Russell (D Ga.)—Eliminate a provision for restoration of twice-daily mail deliveries in residential areas. Voice vote.

Dennis Chavez (D N.M.)—Limit increases on third-class bulk mail to 25 per cent by knocking out an additional hike after the first year. Voice.

Olin D. Johnston (D S.C.) — Provide unified system of leave for employees. Voice.

Russell B. Long (D La.)—Increase newspaper rate 10 per cent each year for three years, and other second-class rates 20 per cent each year for three years. Roll-call vote, 36-24.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Edwin C. Johnson (D Colo.)—Strike out an increase—from six to eight cents an ounce—in air mail rates. Roll-call vote, 18-49.

Russell B. Long (D La.)—Exempt postal cards used by individuals, religious, charitable or service organizations from proposed increase. Roll call, 10-56.

Long—Exempt individual handwritten post cards not used for advertising, commercial or political solicitation, from proposed increase. Standing vote.

Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.)—Increase second-class postal rates 20 per cent each year for three years, instead of 10 per cent. Roll call, 28-32.

HOUSE

The Administration bill (HR 2982) was introduced in the House Feb. 28 by Chairman Tom Murray (D Tenn.) of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee. Revenue increases from the proposed postal rates hikes were estimated at more than $163 million.

The Committee approved it with amendments on June 7. A majority of the Committee reported it June 11, and minority views were filed Juy 18.

HR 2982 reached the House floor Sept. 19. There it was again amended and passed. The House then took up the Senate - passed bill (S 1046) and amended it by substituting the text of HR 2982. The legislators passed S 1046 and vacated the proceedings by which they had previously passed HR 2982.

Hearings

Committee Hearings on the House bill (HR 2982) started March 6 with the testimony of Postmaster General Donaldson. He supported the President's recommendations for rate increases as the only way to pare the deficit.

The Postmaster General said reduced rate mailing privileges were sometimes "abused" by politicians sending out campaign material.

Benjamin Bogin, vice-president of Conde Nast Publications, and Godfrey Hammond, publisher of Popular Science Monthly and Outdoor Life, testifying March 13, conceded that some increase might be justified but they said the publishing industry thought it should be held to about 30 per cent instead of the 100 per cent the bill stipulated.

Bogin claimed large national magazines with heavy advertising pay their own way through the mails, because zone rates on advertising material are sufficiently high to offset any loss which might result from low rates on editorial material.

Charles E. Sweet of Capper Publications, Inc., said the increase in rates would hike his company's postal bill to "far more" than the company's "gross profit before income taxes last year."

The Post Office Department probably makes a profit on handling the average daily newspaper because the newspapers themselves do most of the sorting, sacking and delivery to the post office — "work they are charging us for," Frank A. Daniels, general manager of the Raleigh, N.C. News and Observer and chairman of the Postal Committee of the American Newspaper Publishers Association told the committee March 30. Postal rates on second-class mail should not be increased more than 30 per cent, he stated.

C. C. Lane of the New York Times, suggested a 10 per cent increase in second-class rates while the Department worked out an accounting system to show how much it cost to handle newspapers. Charles M. Puckette, general manager of the Chattanooga Times, appearing on behalf of the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association, said postal rates on newspapers should not be boosted more than 25 per cent. A. L. Cole, of "Reader's Digest," testified March 16 that first-class rates should be increased if rates were to go up on other classes of mail.

Some Would Suspend

On April 3, spokesmen for the Emergency Committee of Small and Medium-size Magazine Publishers said increased mailing costs "unquestionably" would force suspension of some publications and cut the already small profits of others.

Opposing the second-class increase April 4 and 5 were: Ed M. Anderson, publisher of five North Carolina weeklies and spokesman for the National Editorial Association which represents 5,000 weeklies and small dailies, Walter D. Fuller, head of the Curtis Publishing Company, speaking for the National Association of Magazine Publishers, J. T. Sanders of the National Grange, E. Urner Goodman, program director of the Boy Scouts of America, representing 21 national health and welfare organizations, and spokesmen for the Inland Daily Press Association, American Association of Advertising Agencies, and the American Federation of Labor.

Farm magazine publishers testifying April 5 said the proposed mail-rate hike would cripple or ruin many publications and damage the dissemination of information to the 17 million farm families.

Other magazine publishers lined up against the rate hike bill April 6. Witnesses fearing hardships for their organizations' publications under a rate increase were Elizabeth A. Smart, Women's Christian Temperance Union; Omar B. Ketchum, Veterans of Foreign Wars; George J. Hecht, president of the Parents' Institute, Inc., and publisher of "Parents' Magazine" and several other periodicals; Godfrey M. Lebhar, Associated Business Publications, and Joy Elmer Morgan, Journal of the National Education Association.

Some of the witnesses suggested smaller rate hikes, but others asked exemption from any increase.

Committee

The Committe began a section-by-section study of the bill May 17. As finally approved by the group June 7, the measure would:

Double the penny post card rate.

Increase second-class rates 60 per cent, spread over three years. This provision was approved on a 17-6 vote, despite the President's original request for a 100 per cent increase.

Continue (1) existing rates for non-profit religious, educational, fraternal and labor publications; (2) the minimum rate on second - class mail of one-eighth cent a piece; and (3) free-in-county rates to small newspapers.

Increase third-class rates 50 per cent. The new rate would be 1 1/2 cents a piece instead of the current one cent each.

Increase the special charge for odd-shaped third-class pieces from three to five cents.

Increase special delivery rates from 15 to 23 cents.

Keep fourth-class book rates at the existing level. (A 25 per cent increase in fourth class rates had been authorized by the Interstate Commerce Commission.)

A section granting $150 million in pay hikes to postal workers, suggested by Edward H. Rees (R Kans.) was approved June 6, over the objection of Chairman Murray. On June 7, however, the Committee cut out this section, which would have more than offset the mail rate increases.

Reports Bill

After this final change the Committee approved the bill. As reported June 11, it would have increased postal revenues by $123,571,000 the first year and by $138,400,000 after three years.

The House Rules Committee July 20 cleared the bill for floor action but at that time refused to grant a rule waiving points of order made from the House floor. Reconsidering July 24, the Committee granted the waiver. Chairman Murray and others of the Post Office Committee appeared before the Rules group in favor of the point - of - order waiver. Still other Post Office Committee members opposed the request.

H. R. Gross (R Iowa) told the Rules Committee he considered the bill invalid and intended to raise that objection when it reached the House floor. He contended the Committee had erroneously overlooked one of its own votes that technically killed the bill.

The Rules group by granting the waiver, blocked Gross from raising this point during the floor debate.

Floor Action

The bill was amended still further when it reached the House floor Sept. 19.

Much of the debate centered around the Committee recommendation for a second - class rate increase of 60 per cent spread over a three - year period. The House refused to cut the figure in half for newspapers alone but accepted an amendment by John E. Lyle, Jr., (D Tex.) limiting the increase to 30 per cent for all second-class mail. Lyle's amendment was accepted on a standing vote of 109-80 and then on a teller vote, 131-98. The only other amendment agreed to by the House was offered by Eugene J. McCarthy (D Minn.) to exempt publications used for instruction in churches and schools from the proposed increase, regardless of whether they were published for profit. Non-profit publications already were exempted by terms of the bill.

Three amendments were ruled out on points of order raised by Tom Murray (D Tenn.), Chairman of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee: Carl T. Curtis (R Neb.) would have terminated the free mailing privilege of all goverment agencies and Members of Congress; Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) wanted to prevent rate increases from taking effect until the Postmaster General had restored twice-a-day delivery service; Robert J. Corbett (R Pa.) would have authorized further investigations of postal operations to be made by a staff of experts appointed jointly by the House and Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committees. This proposal paralleled, on a smaller scale, a provision in the Senate bill (S 1046) setting up a Joint Committee on Postal Services.

Another amendment offered by Corbett would have made the rate on third - class bulk mail 1 1/4 cents a piece instead of 1 1/2 cents. The amendment was rejected on voice vote after Albert P. Morano (R Conn.) pointed out that most third - class mail is handled through postage meters, and that few of the 100,000 postage meters in use could register and print 1/4 cent units.

James G. Fulton (R Pa.) charged that many publishers maintained their second - class mailing privilege by keeping "deadheads" (non - paying subscribers) on their circulation list.

He offered an amendment which would have required yearly filing with the Post Office of a sworn list of bona fide subscribers, showing dates and amounts of payment and expiration of subscriptions. The amendment was rejected on voice vote.

During the course of the debate two motions to "strike the enacting clause" — kill the bill — were rejected. The first was offered by Edwin Arthur Hall (R N.Y.) and the second by Wayne L. Hays (D Ohio.)

HR 2982 was passed by voice vote, whereupon the House took up for consideration the Senate - passed bill (S 1046). After substituting the text of HR 2982, the House passed S 1046 by voice vote. Immediately it vacated the earlier action in which it passed HR 2982. The House bill thus went back to the Senate under the number S 1046.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

John E. Lyle, Jr. (D Tex.) — Limit second - class rate increase to 30 per cent. Accepted first by standing vote, 109-80; then by teller vote, 131-98.

Eugene J. McCarthy (D Minn.) — Exempt publications for classroom or religious instruction use from rate increase. Teller, 89-84 (after first being rejected on standing vote, 64-73).

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Edward H. Rees (R Kan.) — Limit second - class rate increase for newspapers to 30 per cent. Voice vote.

James G. Fulton (R Pa.) — Require second - class users to file sworn list of bona fide subscribers yearly. Voice.

Robert J. Corbett (R Pa.) — Make third - class bulk rate 1 1/4 cents instead of 1 1/2 cents. Voice.

Corbett — Authorize Senate and House Post Office Committees to employ a joint staff to study postal operations. Ruled out of order.

Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) — Provide that rate increases shall not take effect until delivery services are restored. Ruled out of order.

Carl T. Curtis (R Neb.) — Terminate free mailing privileges of all government agencies, including the legislative branch. Ruled out of order.

CONFERENCE

Most sections of the House-passed version of S 1046 differed considerably from the Senate bill. The Senate asked for a conference on Sept. 20, and the House gave its agreement on Sept. 25.

The Senate bill called for an increase in letter postage from 3 to 4 cents and in airmail letters from 6 to 8 cents. The House had raised neither. The conferees decided against these increases.

Both had increased post card rates from one cent to two, and the House had added a provision to charge an additional 10 per cent for post cards in lots of 100 or more. The Senate bill contained no such provision, but in conference it was agreed that an additional 10 per cent be charged on post cards in lots of 50 or more.

The Senate version had provided three increases of 20 per cent each for all bulk second-class mail except newspapers which were to have three increases of 10 per cent each. The House made the 10 per cent increase for three years applicable to all kinds of second-class mail. The House version was accepted.

In the section specifying that publications having more than 75 per cent advertising in more than one-half their issues a year should be ineligible for second-class mailing privileges, the Senate had excepted from the definition of advertising such information as transportation schedules and fares. This exception was agreed to by the House conferees.

The Senate version listed temperance organizations among groups to be exempted from higher second-class postal charges. The House bill did not mention them. In conference, reference to them was omitted, but the conference report explained that this omission did not necessarily exclude them because they might qualify as educational groups, which were exempted from the higher charges.

The House had not exempted the various non-profit groups from the increased rates for third-class mail, while the Senate had. The Senate provision for exemption was accepted.

Third-Class Matter

The Senate bill would have boosted the minimum charge per piece for third-class bulk matter to 1 1/4 cents three months after enactment and 1 1/2 cents a year later. The House bill established the 1 1/2 cent rate beginning July 1, 1952. During House debate it was explained that machines handling much of this mail were unable to print and register units of 1/4 cent, and for this reason the House increase was accepted.

The House increase from three cents to five cents for handling pieces of odd size and shape was rejected in conference.

On fourth-class mail the Senate set new rates higher than those in effect at the time it passed S 1046 on Sept. 7, but less than the rates which became effective Oct. 1 under an order of the Postmaster General agreed to by the Interstate Commerce Commission. This order was the result of a stipulation in the Supplemental Appropriation Act, 1951, (P.L. 843, 81st Congress) directing the Postmaster General to establish new rates sufficient to pay the cost of fourth-class service. The House version of S 1046 had not changed fourth-class rates. The conferees deleted the bill's fourth-class provisions, thus allowing the higher rates of the Postmaster General's Oct. 1 order to stand.

The Senate rates for special delivery fees were accepted. The only difference with the House version had been that the House had increased the fee for first-class special delivery under two pounds from 15 cents to 23 cents, while the Senate had raised the rate to only 20 cents.

The group retained provisions of the House bill which authorized the Postmaster General to prescribe fees for such special services as registry, money orders, collect-on-delivery mail, insurance and return receipts.

The Senate version had established a joint House-Senate committee to study the whole postal problem. The House version did not. The conferees amended this Senate section slightly and accepted it.

The Senate bill had also provided for establishment of an advisory council on postal affairs, the council to be composed of representatives of the general public, users of mails, accounting and management engineering firms, postal experts, postal employees organizations, public transportation and distributing organizations, and the Post Office Department. The House-passed bill had not contained this provision, and the conference group deleted it.

The graduated federal leave system which the Senate included in its postal rate bill was approved by the conferees.

Final Action

Both Chambers of Congress on Oct. 19 adopted the conference report on S 1046 by voice votes.

President Truman signed the bill Oct. 30, and it became Public Law 233.

Annual Leave

S 1046 (Title II)—P. L. 233

Summary — A revised graduated leave system for federal employees became law when the bill to readjust postal rates (S 1046) was passed in October of 1951. (For the story on postal rates, see page 318). The path the new leave system took through Congress, in becoming law, was a tortuous one.

Early in the year, four bills were introduced in the House and one in the Senate to reduce annual leave for federal employees. Three bills were introduced in the Senate to give postal employees the same leave privileges as other federal employees.

When the Independent Offices Appropriation bill (HR 3880) was being considered on the floor June 19, the Senate accepted an amendment by Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) to reduce annual leave of civilian government employees from 26 to 20 days. (For story on Independent Offices Appropriation bill, see page 115.).

Meantime, HR 3605 to grant annual and sick leave privileges to substitute postal employees, was passed by the House June 4, and reached the Senate floor on the consent calendar June 21. Frank Carlson (R Kans.) attempted to attach a proposal to increase annual leave for all postal employees from 15 to 20 days, so that they would receive the same privileges accorded other federal employees by the Douglas rider to HR 3880. Russell B. Long (D La.) objected at that time, however.

Hearings on S 832

The Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee conducted two days of hearings June 27 and 28 on S 832, which originally would have reduced federal employees' leave to 15 days until the end of the national emergency. The Committee amended the bill to provide a graduated scale of leave based on length of service, and approved it July 10. The Senate amended it further on July 17, but then postponed further consideration of S 832 when it again took up HR 3605. The Senate amended HR 3605 by substituting for the House-passed bill the amended text of S 832, passed this version, and then requested a conference on HR 3605 that same day, July 17. The House did not appoint conferees.

During consideration of the Treasury - Post Office Departments Appropriation bill (HR 3282) on July 27, the Senate accepted an amendment offered by Douglas, to provide as annual leave for Postal employees the 20 days of the Douglas rider to HR 3880 — which had not yet received final approval. The Senate passed HR 3282 with the Douglas amendment July 27, but in conference the amendment was deleted, and when HR 3282 was passed Aug. 9 it contained no motion of annual leave. (For story on Treasury - Post Office Appropriation bill, see page 134.).

The Douglas rider was retained in HR 3880, however, through two conferences. The bill was passed Aug. 16 and a conference report on it was approved Aug. 31. So the reduction in annual leave to 20 days, retroactive to July 1, 1951, became law for civilian officers and employees.

This was repealed as part of an amendment to S 1046, the bill to readjust postal rates. The amendment introduced Sept. 6 by Chairman Olin D. Johnston (D S.C.) of the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Commission, provided for the same schedule of graduated leave the Senate had previously approved as a substitue for HR 3605. The Senate endorsed the amendment by unanimous voice vote, and passed S 1046, also by voice vote, on Sept. 7. The provisions of this amendment applied to postal workers as well as almost all other civilian employees of the Government.

Before passing S 1046 Sept. 19 the House amended it considerably, omitting the annual leave provisions. These were restored in conference, with slight amendments, and on Oct. 19 both Chambers accepted the conference report. S 1046 was signed by President Truman on Oct. 30 and became Public Law 233.

Provisions — As passed, S 1046 established for postal and all civilian federal workers with certain exceptions made necessary by particular jobs, this graduated annual vacation leave system based on length of service:

Less than three years of service— 13 days leave

Three to 15 years of service — 20 days.

Over 15 years of service — 26 days.

The accumulation of annual vacation leave was limited to 60 days at the end of any year.

All employees were limited to 13 days of sick leave annually, and this was made cumulative without limit.

The new leave system was to take effect Jan. 6, 1952.

Standards Had Varied

Previous vacation leave had been 26 days a year for civil service employees and 15 days annually for postal workers. Previous sick leave with pay was 15 days a year, cumulative to 90 days.

Among laws repealed by the act was the Douglas rider to the 1952 Independent Offices Appropriations bill (HR 3880, P. L. 137) which cut annual leave for classified government employees from 26 days to 20 starting July 1, 1951. The effect of the repeal was to continue the old rates of leave until S 1046 became operative Jan. 6, 1952.

"LEAVE" FLOOR ACTION

In all, five bills including leave proposals received floor consideration at the first session. Here is a description of the bills and the action on them.

S 832, to reduce the annual leave of federal employees to 15 days during the national emergency, was introduced Feb. 8 by Francis Case (R S.D.), and was referred to the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee.

The Committee conducted hearings June 27 and 28. On June 27, those testifying for the bill included Case, Robert C. Ramspeck, chairman of the Civil Service Commission, spokesmen for the Budget Bureau, and five members of AFL unions of postal workers. Other witnesses basically favoring the bill represented the National Federation of Federal Employees (Ind.) and the United National Association of Post Office Clerks (Ind.).

Opposing the bill were Mrs. Frances Perkins, Civil Service Commissioner, the American Federation of Government Employees (AFL) and the East Coast Metal Trades Conference (AFL).

Organizations represented at the hearing June 28 included the AFL Government Employees Council, the National Association of Post Office and General Services Maintenance Employees (Ind.), the United Public Workers of America (Ind.), and the CIO Government and Civic Employees Organizing Committee.

The Committee approved S 832 on July 10, but first substituted for the original text a proposal for a permanent revision of annual and sick leave for federal employees on a graduated scale based on length of service. The substitution also placed postal workers on the same leave basis with civil service workers.

The amended bill would have provided 13 days of annual leave for those with less than two years of service; 20 days a year for two to 15 years in service; and 26 days annually for employees with more than 15 years in the government. The bill also allowed 13 days of sick leave a year for all employees, and stated that this might be accrued indefinitely. The new scale for leave was to have become effective Jan. 6, 1952.

In The Senate

S 832 came up for Senate consideration on July 17. John O. Pastore (D R.I.) explained that it would save the Government 15 million work days with a cash value approximating $178 million, minus about $25 or $30 million because of the increased leave granted postal workers.

The Senate accepted by voice vote an amendment by Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.) and Burnet R. Maybank (D S.C.) respecting the effect of leave changes on the wages of employees paid at hourly or daily rates: a committee modification repealing annual leave provisions in HR 3880, the Independent Offices Appropriation bill; and a modified Douglas amendment to make Oct. 14, 1951, the effective date of S 832.

After amending S 832, the Senate took up HR 3605, amended it to substitute the language of S 832 as amended, and passed it by voice vote. It then postponed indefinitely further consideration of S 832.

HR 3605

On April 9 Rep. Tom Murray (D Tenn.) introduced HR 3605 to grant annual and sick leave privileges to substitute postal employees. The bill was reported from the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee on April 26, and was passed on the consent calendar June 4, after acceptance of a committee amendment to include temporary as well as indefinitely employed postal workers.

When it was called up on the Senate consent calendar June 21, Frank Carlson (R Kans.) attempted to attach a proposal to increase from 15 days to 20 days the annual vacation leave for 500,000 postal employees. Russell B. Long (D La.) objected, saying he felt the adjustment should be considered but that he felt it should receive further committee consideration.

The bill reached the Senate floor again on July 17. This time it was amended by substituting the amended text of S 832, and then passed by voice vote. Because of the extensive charges it had made in HR 3605, the Senate then adopted a motion by Pastore to seek a conference with the House on this bill.

The House did not act upon this request for a conference; Congress had taken no final action on HR 3605 when the first session closed.

When introduced and through all hearings S 1046 concerned only increased postal rates (see page 318.) But when it reached the Senate floor on Sept. 6, Olin D. Johnston (D S.C.), chairman of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee, introduced as an amendment Title II, to cover annual leave. Johnston explained that this was the same leave system the Senate had passed on July 17 as an amendment to HR 3605 substituting for the House text the Senate text of S 832. Since the House had not named conferees on HR 3605, Johnston said he thought "this is the best way to be sure the system will be considered in conference before the end of the session."

Carlson, Herbert H. Lehman (D-N.Y.), William Benton (D Conn.), and William Langer (R N.D.) all endorsed the annual leave amendment, and it was accepted by a unanimous voice vote in the Senate. S 1046 was passed by a voice vote of the Senate Sept. 7.

The House passed a different version of S 1046 on Sept. 19. Its version concerned only postal rates and did not include the annual leave provisions. The Senate requested a conference on S 1046 Sept. 20, and the House acceded on Sept. 25.

In conference the annual leave section was amended slightly and accepted. The Senate had specified 13 days of vacation leave for employees with less than two years of government service, 20 days for employees who had served from two to 15 years, and 26 days for those with over 15 years in service. The conferees changed this to apply the 13 days to employees with up to three years of service, and the 20 days to government workers employed from three to 15 years, leaving 26 days for employees with more than 15 years in federal service. The conference group also added to the list of employees excepted from the new schedule of leave the officers and employees of any corporation under the Farm Credit Administration for which directors were elected or appointed by private interests.

Both Senate and House accepted the conference report by voice votes on Oct. 19, and President Truman signed S 1046 on Oct. 30. It became Public Law 233.

When the Independent Offices Appropriation bill (HR 3880) was being considered on the Senate floor June 19, Douglas offered an amendment to reduce annual leave of government employees to 20 days. His amendment was approved by a 51 to 26 roll-call vote June 19 (for voting see page 175), and the bill was passed by voice vote of the Senate June 20.

Because of various disagreements between the chambers, this bill was twice referred to conference, but when finally passed Aug. 16 (see page 119), carried the Douglas rider to reduce annual leave, and an amendment by Rep. Albert Thomas (D Tex.) to require employees to forfeit by June 30, 1952, any annual leave earned but unused during 1951.

The annual leave reduction retroactive to July 1, 1951, therefore became Public Law 137 when HR 3880 was approved on Aug. 31. This section of P.L. 137 was repealed, however, by S 1046, P.L. 233.

HR 3282

This was the Treasury - Post Office Departments Appropriations bill for 1952. During Senate consideration of it July 27, Douglas offered an amendment to provide for postal employees the same annual leave set forth for other employees in his rider to HR 3880 — 20 days. Postal employees had been entitled to only 15.

The Douglas amendment first was ruled out of order, but was then accepted by voice vote after the Senate agreed by a 63-0 roll call vote (for voting, see page 177.) to suspend the rules so that Douglas could offer his amendment. Douglas accepted a change offered by Frank Carlson (R Kan.) to extend the provisions of Douglas' amendment to include temporary employees of the Post Office.

The same day the Senate asked for a conference, and on Aug. 1 the House agreed. In conference, the Douglas amendment was deleted, and when HR 3282 was finally passed Aug. 9 it contained no mention of annual leave for either civil service or postal employees.

Other Bills

Four bills on annual leave were introduced in the House, and were referred to the Post Office and Civil Service Committee, but received no action. They were: HR 2378 introduced Feb. 5 by Charles W. Vursell (R Ill.): HR 3032 on March 5 by Carl T. Curtis (R Neb.): HR 3610 on April 9 by Olin E. Teague (D Tex.), and HR 3714 on April 13 by Otto E. Passman (D La.). The first three would have reduced annual leave to 15 days; HR 3714 called for a reduction to 20 days.

In addition to S 832, five other Senate bills on leave, were introduced, but only S 832 received Senate action.

S 411, introduced Jan. 11 by William Langer (R N.D.) and S 534 on Jan. 17 by Homer Ferguson (R Mich.) would have granted postal employees 26 days of annual leave instead of the 15 to which they then were entitled.

S 1248 was introduced April 3 by Olin D. Johnston (D S.C.), and would have provided for temporary and indefinite substitute employees of the Post Office the same annual and sick leave rights granted, classified substitute employees.

S 1046 as passed equalized leave privileges for various classes of employees.

S 1516 introduced by Johnston on May 22 would have allowed employees to transfer accumulated annual leave against any indebtedness accumulated from service prior to Jan. 1, 1940.

Langer on Jan. 8 introduced a bill,, S 198, to allow married women employees maternity leave with pay.

Federal Workers' Raises

Summary — A wage increase of 10 per cent, retroactive to July 1, 1951, for all civil service and various other federal employees was authorized by Congress Oct. 19. Chairman Tom Murray (D Tenn.) of the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee said the legislation would affect about 1,100,000 employees and cost about $418,000,000 annually.

Bills for a 17 per cent boost in wages were introduced by Rep. George M. Rhodes (D Pa.) on Jan. 3 and by Sen. Olin D. Johnston (D S.C.) on Jan. 22. During their consideration May 16 Civil Service Commission Chairman, Robert L. Ramspeck, proposed a 6.97 per cent increase; President Truman on July 12 suggested a seven per cent raise, and on June 20 CIO Government and Civil Employees Organizing Committee spokesman said a 20 per cent increase would be "very modest."

The Senate passed S 622 on Sept. 17, providing a 10 per cent pay raise up to a maximum of $800 a year, but specifying no minimum. The House acted on Sept. 20, first passing its own bill and then substituting that text under the Senate bill number. The House bill would have granted a flat $400 a year raise to employees with the exception of legislative staff, for whom it provided a 10 per cent increase to a maximum of $800.

In conference the Senate's 10 per cent increase, with a maximum of $800 and a minimum of $300, received approval. Both Chambers adopted the conference report on Oct. 19, the President signed S 622 on Oct. 24, and it became Public Law 201.

Provisions — S 622 as finally passed provided a 10 per cent raise for classified "white - collar" federal employees, with a minimum of $300 to employees earning less than $3,000 a year, and a maximum of $800 for employees earning more than $8,000 annually.

Background — The Post Office and Civil Service Committee report to the Senate on July 20 based its recommendation for pay increases to the "white-collar" workers upon the Bureau of Labor Statistics Price Index which listed the cost of living in April, 1951, as 184.6 compared with 169.7 in October, 1949, the time of the last previous pay increase.

The report said there had been no wage increases and some decreases between 1930 and 1945; and average increases of 15.9 per cent, 14.2 per cent, 11 per cent and 4.1 per cent in July, 1945, 1946 and 1948, and October, 1949. The 1945-1948 increases, however, had been heavily weighted in favor of lowest-bracket employees, and upper-bracket employees had received 14.2 per cent raises at most until 1949 when three new grades were established for 400 employees at the top of the general schedule.

The report also mentioned that "blue-collar" employees had received pay boosts because they were paid on the basis of local prevailing wages.

The Committee felt that almost equal dollar increases to all employees "compressed the pay schedules to a point where job values are distorted," increasing the relative value of simpler, less difficult and less responsible jobs and decreasing the relative value of the more complex, difficult and responsible jobs.

"In a career service," the Committee said, "the result is to offer less incentive to the more capable employes to assume more responsible positions in the service, or even to remain in a service which is unwilling to recognize in a substantive manner the differences in job requirements."

SENATE

Chairman Johnston (D S.C.) of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee Jan. 22 introduced S 622 to raise the wages of classified government workers. The bill would have provided a 17 per cent increase on that part of an employee's wages up to $5,000 a year.

Hearings

Hearings on Johnston's measure started May 16 when a joint meeting of Senate and House Post Office and Civil Service Subcommittees heard Chairman Robert L. Ramspeck of the Civil Service Commission propose a 6.97 per cent wage boost for federal employees.

Ramspeck said such a raise would be fair and "within the general limitation established by the economic stabilization agency" for wage increases. He explained that the 6.97 figure had been arrived at using as a starting point the cost of living index report of Jan. 15, 1950.

The across-the-board percentage increase proposed by Ramspeck would have averaged $255 a year for each employee under Civil Service, or a total of about $254,000,000 annually, he said. The pay raise would have ranged from $165 to $800 a year for the classified civil service workers and from $100 to $310 a year for the custodial workers and guards.

Ramspeck said federal employees in the lower classifications were better paid than those in private industry, but that private industry paid better in the middle and top grade jobs than did the federal government.

Samuel Edes of the Wage Stabilization Board testified before the Senate Subcommittee May 23 that government workers could receive pay increases of 10 per cent or more without violating the national wage policy. The Wage Stabilization Act did not set a 10 per cent maximum on pay boosts or require that Jan. 15, 1950, be used as the date for calculating raises where hardship or inequities resulted from rising living costs, he said.

Officers of various government employee unions testified for wage boosts larger than the 6.97 per cent proposed by the Civil Service Commission.

Subcommittee Chairman John O. Pastore (D R.I.) told the group on May 23 that he would recommend the increase be 8.7 per cent.

On July 12 President Truman sent messages to the Senate and House Committee Chairmen asking for a 7 per cent "across the board" pay increase for federal workers. Such a pay boost was necessary, he said, to keep the government staffed with competent employees.

Committee's Recommendation

Shortly after the President's message was received the Committee approved an increase of 8.8 per cent for most civil service workers, with a limit of $800 a year. This top limit lowered the average increase to 8.4 per cent. Johnston explained the Committee action was based on the recommendations of its Subcommittee which had completed its work before the President's views were known.

Floor Action

S 622 was passed Sept. 17 after two days of floor action.

Several amendments were accepted to include under the bill's provisions increases for foreign service employees, doctors and nurses in the Veterans Administration, employees of the judiciary, and some District of Columbia workers.

Hikes Retroactive

The Senate accepted by voice vote an amendment by William Langer (R N.D.) to make the pay increases retroactive to July 1, 1951.

Langer also offered an amendment to provide a minimum increase of $400 a year or 8.8 per cent — whichever is greater — and a maximum of $800 a year. However, a substitute amendment, offered by A. S. Mike Monroney (D Okla.) and accepted by the Senate, raised the pay hike to 10 per cent for federal workers. The amendment also limited the increase to $800 a year but eliminated the minimum $400 increase in the Langer amendment.

Monroney said that Langer's amendment would mean a 28 per cent increase for some lower-paid employees. This, he warned, might precipitate new pay raises in private industry and add to inflation.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Harley M. Kilgore (D W.Va.) — Include employees of the judiciary who are under classified rates of pay Voice vote.

Brien McMahon (D Conn.) — Increase rates of basic compensation for Foreign Service officers by 8.8 per cent or $800 a year —whichever is less. Modified by Olin D. Johnston (D S.C.) to include persons in Foreign Service under the Classification Act of 1949. Voice.

Modified by Johnston (D S.C.) to increase pay raise to 10 per cent instead of 8.8 per cent. Voice.

Langer — Establish compensation schedule to provide for a minimum increase of $400 a year or 8.8 per cent —whichever was greater — but not to exceed $800 per year. Modified by A. S. Mike Monroney (D Okla.) to establish a compensation schedule to provide for a 10 per cent increase or $800 a year — whichever is less — for classified employees (while eliminating the $400 minimum increase) and provide that charwomen working part time shall be paid at the rate of $2,610 a year and head charwomen working part time at $2,750 a year. Voice.

HOUSE

House bill HR 339, identical to S 622 as introduced, was submitted by Rep. Rhodes on Jan. 3. House Post Office and Civil Service Committee hearings were conducted on this bill, and it was amended by the House and passed by voice vote on Sept. 20. The House immediately vacated its action in passing HR 339, substituted the text of HR 339 for the text of S 622, then passed S 622 as amended.

Hearings

The first hearing on HR 339 was a joint meeting with the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Subcommittee at which Chairman Ramspeck testified. (See Senate section of this story, above.)

Ramspeck again testified June 14 before the House group, recommending a 6.9 per cent across-the-board pay raise for nearly one million classified government workers. It was estimated that the increase would add about $250 million a year to federal payrolls.

Committee Chairman Tom Murray (D Tenn.) opposed the recommendation, saying the government instead should reduce the number of federal civilian employees and cut down the annual leave with pay granted to government workers.

Urges Temporary Increase

Murray suggested that the Committee give serious consideration to a temporary cost of living increase of not more than $300 to workers in the lower pay brackets, for one year.

Ramspeck argued that his raise recommendation compared with an average seven per cent increase enjoyed in comparable work in private industry.

On June 20 Richard Shoemaker of the Government and Civic Employees Organizing Committee (CIO.) testified that the 6.9 per cent increase suggested by the Civil Service Commission was "peanuts" and out of touch with current living costs. Shoemaker said a 20 per cent increase would be "very modest" and would be based on "justice and equity."

Luther C. Steward, National Federation of Federal Employees (independent), also recommended a pay increase and urged that greater emphasis be placed upon quality rather than quantity in the federal service so that money ultimately could be saved.

James A. Campbell, American Federation of Government Employees (AFL), likewise backed the pay increase.

Committee's Proposal

As approved by the Committee Aug. 1, HR 339 provided a $400 yearly pay increase for all civil service employees and many others, retroactive to July 1. Annual cost was estimated at $400 million for the 1,000,000 workers. Before reporting the bill Aug. 23, the Committee agreed to an amendment offered by Robert J. Corbett (R Pa.) requiring non-defense agencies to absorb the increases in salaries without resorting to supplementary fund requests.

Floor Action

When the measure reached the House floor Sept. 20, it was amended to grant legislative employees a raise of either $400 a year or 10 per cent, whichever was larger. The 10 per cent increase was limited to a maximum of $800.

The House by a 118-117 teller vote struck out Corbett's amendment to require non-defense agencies to pay the salary increases from existing funds.

As passed by the House HR 339 also provided for a 20 cent an hour increase for federal employees paid on an hourly basis.

After passing HR 339 by voice vote the House took up the Senate-passed bill, S 622, amended it to substitute the text of HR 339 as passed, and by voice vote passed its text under the number S 622. Passage of HR 339 then was vacated, by unanimous consent.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Pat Sutton (D Tenn.) — (to HR 339) Grant raise of $400 a year or 10 per cent — whichever was greater — to federal legislative employees. Voice vote.

George M. Rhodes (D Pa.) — (to HR 339) Delete section requiring non-defense federal agencies to pay the salary raises without supplementary funds. Teller, 118-117.

Tom Murray (D Tenn.) — Substitute HR 339 text for text of S 622. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Victor Wickersham (D Okla.) — (to HR 339) Extend $400 annual raise to county and state committeemen under the agricultural program. Voice vote.

CONFERENCE

The Senate requested a conference on S 622 on Sept. 22, and the House agreed Sept. 25.

Conferees agreed on a schedule giving employees a 10 per cent raise, but providing a minimum boost of $300 for employees making less than $3,000 a year, and a maximum increase of $800 for employees above the $8,000 level.

The House had voted a flat $400 increase to all employees while the Senate had voted a straight 10 per cent increase with an $800 ceiling, but with no minimum provision.

Provisions for similar pay increases for District of Columbia policemen, firemen, school teachers and per diem employes had been included in the Senate version of S 622 but were deleted in conference. Senate conferees agreed to act upon a separate bill the House had passed for these raises.

Chambers Approve

Both House and Senate quickly gave approval to the conference report on S 622. The House passed it Oct. 19 by a roll-call vote of 318-26. (For voting, see page 404.) The Senate adopted it by voice vote a few hours later.

S 622 was signed by the President on Oct. 24, and became Public Law 201.

Postal Pay Raise

S 355 — P.L. 204

Summary — Congress in 1951 granted aproximately 500,000 postal employees pay boosts ranging from $400 to a maximum of $800 with the enactment of S 355. (Other federal employees received raises in separate legislation, see page 326.)

The Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee Feb. 26 began hearings on the postal raise and finally reported a bill (S 355) on Aug. 22. The Senate passed it with amendments on Sept. 14.

The House Post Office and Civil Service Committee began hearings June 14, and Aug. 1 approved two bills: HR 244 to raise salaries of graded employees, and HR 4255 to reclassify postmasters and postal supervisors and give them raises. Both were passed on voice vote without amendment, on Sept. 20.

In conference most of the provisions of the Senate bill, which covered the provisions of the House bills (HR 244 and HR 4255) were accepted. The House section making the raises retroactive to July 1 was accepted. Both Chambers adopted the conference report Oct. 19 — the Senate by voice vote and the House by a 339-7 roll call. (For voting, see page 404.)

President Truman signed S 355 on Oct 24, and it became Public Law 204.

Provisions — As finally passed, the measure would:

Eliminate the first two postal worker pay grades and grant a flat $400 increase for other postal worker grades. (The combination of these provisions gave lowest - bracket employees raises of about $600.)

Grant an additional $200, or a two-grade promotion for all graded employees who entered the service after July 1, 1945, and had not received a two-grade increase in the meantime.

Increase by 20 per cent the pay of all fourth class postmasters.

Reclassify all other postmasters and supervisors, with an 8.8 per cent increase in salary after reclassification (subject to a ceiling of $800 on any increase.)

Grant a 20-cent-an-hour raise for hourly employees.

Increase the mileage allowance for rural carriers from eight cents to nine cents.

SENATE

Olin D. Johnston (D S.C.), chairman of the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Commitee, Jan. 11 introduced two bills (S 355, S 376) for postal workers' raises, on behalf of himself and William Langer (R N.D.), Zales N. Ecton (R Mont.) and Matthew M. Neely (D W.Va.). S 355 eliminated the lowest pay grades and provided a 17 per cent increase on pay up to $5,000 annually. S 376 would have reclassified the postal field service and established uniform procedures for computing salaries of postmasters and supervisors, and also dealt with overtime and leave. The bill as finally passed under S 355 included modified provisions from both of these measures.

Hearings

William C. Doherty, president of the National Association of Letter Carriers appeared to support the raises at a Subcomittee hearing Feb. 26. Doherty urged consolidation of the two bills, with the 17 per cent pay raise.

E. C. Hallbeck, legislative representative for the National Federation of Post Office Clerks; William C. Armbrust, president of the United National Association of Post Office Clerks; and Dr. Harry L. Bowlby, general secretary of the Lord's Day Alliance of the U.S., also supported the raise in Feb. 26 testimony.

Union representatives of 28,000 postal workers in the New York metropolitan area said low wages were forcing a majority of mail carriers in their area to take extra jobs to meet high living costs and that without increased postal salaries it would be "extremely unlikely that the postal service would be able to maintain its present force of experienced employees."

Witnesses on March 19 testified that postal assistants often earned more "take home" pay than the postmasters who supervised them. Bernard F.Dickmann,St. Louis postmaster and president of the National Association of Postmasters, and Jesse V. Horton, legislative representative of the National Association of Postal Supervisors, favored a $20 million pay increase, an average of eight per cent, for the nation's 41,000 postmasters and 17,000 postal inspectors.

George D. Riley of the National Legislative Committee of the American Federation of Labor told the Subcommittee March 22 that even a 17 per cent increase in pay sought for postal employees would not make up for the increased cost of living. It would require an average increase of $720 for government employees to keep pace with the advances received by employees in private industry up to October, 1950, Riley added.

The postal increases also were supported March 22 by representatives of the American Veterans Committee; the CIO Government and Civic Employees Organizing Committee; the American Federation of Government Employees; the National Association of Postoffice and Postal Transportation Service, Mail Handlers, Watchmen and Messengers, National Federation of Federal Employees, the Star Route Mail Carriers, the National Association of Postal Clerks, and the AFL Government Employees Council.

Postmaster General Jesse M. Donaldson testified May 17. He supported moves to raise the wages of postal workers but said the Department's views on how much of a raise should be given had not yet been thoroughly worked out.

The Subcommittee rewrote S 355 to include some provisions of S 376 and to provide an average wage increase of 8.8 per cent, and aproved it on June 6.

Committee

The full Committee July 12 approved a pay raise plan and directed the Subcommittee to draw up a bill for an 8.8 per cent across-the-board increase. It recommended eliminating postal worker grades 1 and 2 and making an upward adjustment of about $200 in salaries of graded employees who entered service after July, 1945. The proposed plan also included a reclassification of salaries of postmasters and supervisors with salary boosts to a maximum of $800.

In substantially this form S 355 was approved by the Committee on Aug. 14 and reported in the Senate Aug. 22.

Floor Action

When the bill reached the Senate floor Sept. 14 Johnston explained that the increases were figured on a percentage basis, rather than across-the-board, at the recommendation of the Civil Service Commission, the Post Office Department and the Bureau of the Budget. A lump - sum increase, he warned, would squeeze the various grades together, and more money would be needed later to get the various brackets back in line.

Johnston told the Senate that the Post Office Department estimated the cost of the bill as follows: Adjustments in salaries of postmasters and supervisors specified, $36,965,000; elimination of the two lowest automatic grades, $10 million; mandatory two - grade promotions, $28,410,000; and additional increased pay for employees in automatic grades, $125,654,193. These sums totaled $201,029,193.

The Senate accepted by a roll-call vote of 71 to 0 (see page 406) an amendment by Frank Carlson (R Kan.) setting minimum increases of $400 and maximums of $800. Exempted were fourth - class postmasters who were to receive a 20 per cent increase, and hourly employees whose increase was set at 20 cents an hour.

Other amendments accepted set July 1 as the effective date of the raises, increased equipment maintenance payments to rural carriers from eight to nine cents a mile, and specified that only 85 per cent of gross postal receipts should be counted in determining classes of post offices.

The Senate then passed the bill by voice vote.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Frank Carlson (R Kan.) — Establish a floor of $400 for pay increase and a ceiling of $800, except for fourth - class postmasters who were to receive a 20 per cent increase, and hourly employees who were to receive an hourly increase of 20 cents. Roll-call vote, 71-0.

Carlson — Provide that only 85 per cent of gross postal receipts be counted in determining the class of the post office or the compensation of the postmaster or postal employees. Voice.

Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) — Provide for payment to rural carriers of nine cents a mile or $3 a day, whichever was greater, for maintenance of equipment. Voice.

William Langer (R N.D.) — Provide that the bill become effective July 1, 1951. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Frank Carlson (R Kan.) — Establish minimum annual increase for postal employees at $400. Withdrawn.

William Langer (R N.D.) — Amend Carlson amendment to establish minimum annual increase at $600. Withdrawn.

Langer — Amend Carlson amendment to establish a minimum increase of $600. Voice vote.

Langer — Amend Carlson amendment to establish a minimum increase of $500. Standing.

HOUSE

The House bill to boost postal workers' pay was HR 244, introduced Jan. 3 by George P. Miller (D Calif.) The bill would have reduced the number of automatic postal grades, moved those in the lower grades to upper grades, increased salaries under $5,000 by 17 per cent and over $5,000 by eight per cent.

The reclassification of postmasters and postal supervisors, eventually covered in S 355 was passed by the House as HR 4255, introduced May 24 by James H. Morrison (D La.).

Hearings

The House Post Office and Civil Service Committee started hearings on pay increases June 14. Hearings that day and on June 19 and 20 concerned recommendations for raises for all federal employees (see page 326). On June 26 Postmaster General Jesse M. Donaldson and his Assistant, Alfer B. Strom, testified about the specific plight of postal employees and urged that they be granted a wage boost.

Bernard Dickmann, who earlier appeared at Senate hearings, endorsed proposed pay increases for postmasters throughout the country in a June 27 appearance. Other witnesses June 27 and 28 favoring raises represented the National Association of Postal Supervisors, National League of District Postmasters and the National Federation of Post Office Clerks.

Further supporting testimony came July 9 - 13 from representatives of the Post Office Maintenance Employees, the United National Association of Post Office Clerks, National Federation of Post Office Clerks, National Postal Transportation Association, Post Office and Railway Mail Service Handlers, Watchmen and Messengers, National Association of Special Delivery Messengers, National Alliance of Postal Employees, National Rural Letter Carriers Association, National Association of Letter Carriers, National Federation of Post Office

Motor Vehicle Employees and other federal employee groups, and from numerous Members of Congress.

Committee

The Committee approved HR 244 and HR 4255 on Aug. 1 and reported them Aug. 23. As reported, HR 244 would have eliminated the first three postal salary grades; granted one or two - grade increases to employees who had entered the service after July 1, 1945, and had not received at least two grade increases by operation of law; provided a flat $400 salary increase to all postal employees paid on an annual basis except fourth-class postmasters who would have received a 20 per cent raise; and granted to hourly employees a 20-cent-an-hour increase.

HR 4255 would have reclassified postmasters and postal supervisors, and contained a provision that none would receive an increase of more than $800 or less than $400 a year.

Floor Action

The House Sept. 20 passed the two bills by voice votes.

In its action on HR 244, it rejected several amendments. It then took up S 355 — the Senate-passed bill covering provisions of both House bills— and affixed the number S 355 to the text of HR 244. The amended S 355 was passed by voice vote and the action in passing HR 244 was vacated.

AMENDMENT ACCEPTED

Tom Murray (D Tenn.) — Substitute text of HR 244, as passed, for text of S 355. Voice vote.

AMENDMENTS (TO HR 244) REJECTED

John Jarman (D Okla.) — Provide no salary be raised to more than $7,500 annually. Voice.

Tom Murray (D Tenn.) — Eliminate retroactive date of July 1, 1951. Standing, 18-122.

Murray — Eliminate automatic advancement in grade for certain employees. Voice.

Katharine St. George (R N.Y.) — Insert escalator clause calling for fixed increases or decreases in pay according to fluctuations of the consumers price index. Standing, 90-103.

CONFERENCE

The Senate-House Conference Committee, considering the differing postal pay bills, accepted most of the provisions of the Senate bill, including the elimination of two rather than three bottom pay grades, and the reclassification schedule for postmasters and postal supervisors which the House had passed separately under HR 4255. The Senate plan to count only 85 per cent of gross postal receipts in determining classes of post offices and compensations of postmasters was rejected, however, in favor of the House provision for counting 100 per cent of receipts.

A House version providing that the increases should be retroactive to July 1 was retained.

The House adopted the conference report Oct. 19 by a 339-7 roll-call vote (see page 404), and the Senate agreed to it a few hours later by voice vote.

President Truman signed S 355 on Oct. 24, and it became Public Law 204. The Post Office Department estimated that it would result in additional salary expenses of approximately $255,000,000 a year.

"Ethics" Investigation

Summary — A Senate Labor and Public Welfare Subcommittee for three weeks in 1951 investigated ethical standards in government. It heard testimony by officials in government and leaders in religion, political science, journalism, public affairs and industry.

As a result of its study, the group wrote legislation (S J Res 107) calling for the establishment of a Commission on Ethics in Government. This measure was reported favorably by the full Committee Oct. 9.

A second legislative proposal (S 2293) was introduced Oct. 17 by three Subcommittee members. It proposed a code of conduct for employees in the executive branch of the government. It received no Committee action during the first session.

The hearings were conducted on a measure (S Con Res 21) introduced March 28 by J. William Fulbright (D Ark.) to provide for the designation by Congress of a commission of eminent citizens not in government to consider the problem of ethical standards of conduct in public affairs. The Subcommittee found that the preponderance of opinions expressed at hearings favored a commission, but decided to include representatives in public office. The Subcommittee also recommended the establishment of the commission by a joint resolution rather than by concurrent resolution so that an unwillingness on the part of the executive branch to participate could not be inferred. (Joint resolutions require Presidential approval; concurrent resolutions do not.)

Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) was chairman of the Ethics Subcommittee. Other members were Sens. George D. Aiken (R Vt.), Hubert H. Humphrey (D. Minn.), Matthew M. Neely (D W.Va.), and Wayne Morse (R Ore.).

SENATE

Hearings

The Senate Labor Subcommittee started hearings June 19 on Fulbright's S Con Res 21 to establish a Commission on Ethics. Lead-off witness was Lindsay C. Warren, Comptroller General and former Democratic Representative from North Carolina. He favored Fulbright's proposal and also recommended that Congress:

Restore the act of 1872 regulating the handling of claims against the government by former federal officials and employees; reinstitute and broaden a 1919 law relative to the prosecution of claims for military supplies; strengthen the criminal code on bribery of government employees; require government employees who accept employment with firms dealing with the government to register and meet certain standards of conduct; prohibit the giving or accepting of gifts by government employees and firms dealing with the government; restrict all business involving the government to working hours and government buildings; open dockets of all agencies before which private attorneys and representatives practice or appear; and institute a course to educate government employees on how the American taxpayer pays the bills.

Warren called the cost-plus contract "the greatest device ever invented for pumping out the Treasury." Military procurement procedure improved greatly after World War II, he said.

Benton's "Ten Commandments"

Sen. William Benton (D Conn.) also approved Fulbright's proposal and added a new proposal of his own— "Ten Congressional Commandments."

They included: Disclosure by Congressmen of private financial interest in pending legislation; a pledge not to exert extra - legal pressure over executive agencies; fair treatment for Congressional witnesses; a pledge not to abuse the privilege of Congressional immunity and not to indulge in personal vilification or in "irrelevant and inconsequential" talk in committee or on the floor.

Benton recommended plugging loopholes in the Corrupt Practices Act, particularly on campaign expenditures. He quoted a Congressional Quarterly article on campaign expenditures to illustrate that reported spending was far below actual expenditures. (See page 40.)

Budget Director J. Howard Lawton told the Subcommittee June 20 that he favored Fulbright's proposal, but he believed that government ethics were above average. It was unfortunate, he said, that pressure groups, five percenters, and "deviationsts" received the most publicity.

Dr. Theodore Meyer Greene of Yale University told the group there were four "basic political weaknesses in our nation": An alarming political apathy; a tendency to respect the letter rather than the spirit of the law; preoccupation with the dramatic, such as graft and crime; and indifference to major governmental policies; and susceptibility to and tolerance of smear campaigns.

Robert H. Jackson, associate justice of the U.S. Supreme Court, testified June 21 that a code of ethics for government workers would be a good thing, but would not prevent "defaults."

Ickes On Congress

Congress must improve its own ethical standards if it is to end the "miasmic moral climate" in government, former Secretary of Interior Harold L. Ickes told the Subcommittee June 22.

"Let no one within the halls of Congress. . . unduly slur the overwhelming mass of honest and faithful employees. . . simply because there has been a slipping of a few feet," Ickes told the group. "As a matter of fact," he added, "Congress is largely responsible for the hate and suspicion that permeates the air of America today."

David Lilienthal, former chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, in testimony June 25, said that he did not agree with "the world-is-going-to-the-dogs" view prevailing today. He said "the proportion of men of unusual talents and ethics standards in both the Congress and the executive branch is remarkably high."

Lilienthal supported the Fulbright resolution, adding "There is really no adequate substitute for a built-in code of ethics built into the individual and brought along with him when he joins the public service."

Marquis Childs, newspaper columnist, said June 25 that it would be necessary to make Washington a walled city with passports "to stop absolutely the barter of political influence."

Erwin D. Canham, editor of the Christian Science Monitor, said June 27, that newspapers could be "powerful allies" in improving ethical standards in government, but there needs to be first some "housecleaning" in news practices. "We should hold the balance more effectively between reckless charge and responsible denial," he urged.

Would Laws Help?

Reinhold Niebuhr, noted theologian, testified June 27 that the most stringent laws would not make conduct ethical "if the moral tone of a nation becomes low and the public conscience becomes tolerant of dishonesty in public office."

Judge Learned Hand, retired chief judge of the U.S. Court of Appeals, Second Circuit, testified June 28 that records often include letters stating that a Congressman was "interested in this case." Judge Hand did not think much could be done about current government scandals.

D.. A. Hulcy, president of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, proposed June 29 that government officials draw up a code of ethics for themselves and enforce it "by moral persuasion or other appropriate means."

Fulbright testified July 2 on his resolution (S Con Res 21). He said he had never known a time when there was "such bitterness" in government.

Washington cocktail parties and "a certain type of dinner party" do more to break down the moral standards of federal officials than "outright bribery," according to former Rep. Jerry Voorhis (D Calif.), secretary of the Cooperative League of the U.S.A. Voorhis testifying July 3 advocated that Congressmen be required to publish names of all persons who seek their help on government matters. That should include approaches made at social functions, he said.

Benjamin V. Cohen, U. S. delegate to the United Nations and one-time advisor to the late President Roosevelt, also testifying July 3, proposed the establishment of a Public Service Council to expose abuses of trust which the government places in its officials, and give credit to officials who refused to take bribes. He did not think a federal commission setting up a code of ethical standards would have much effect.

Lobbying Charge

Michael Straight, chairman of the American Veterans Committee and editor of the New Republic, told the Subcommittee July 3 that in his opinion lobbying was done in the office of Secretary of the Senate, Leslie L. Biffle. Straight specifically mentioned J. Carrol Cone, an assistant vice president of Pan American Airways, whom he called a lobbyist on air mail subsidy legislation. Biffle and Cone denied Straight's charges in statements to reporters. (Pan American has registered Cone under the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act. He is listed as John C. Cone.)

Straight also charged that some federal officials have been wrongfully accused of disloyalty as a means of firing them and replacing them with "men subject to corrupting influences."

Testifying July 5, Columnist Drew Pearson proposed that all Congressmen and federal officials earning $10,000 or more annually be required to disclose their securities holdings.

Chairman Wayne Coy of the Federal Communications Commission, urged the Subcommittee not to push "purity" safeguards too far, as "a bit of abuse" was preferable to incompetency.

Benton J. Stong of the National Farmers Union asked the Subcommittee to question the "propriety" of the relationships between the American Farm Bureau Federation and the U. S. Extension Service.

Plied With Money

Rep. Charles E. Bennett (D Fla.) told the Subcommitee July 6 he had been offered substantial sums of money to help persons seeking defense contracts. "Two weeks ago," he told the group, "I was offered cash" for having arranged some appointments for a person, whom he did not name, with officials in the Navy Department, he said.

Bennett said he rejected the offer and lectured the man who made it. He "seemed surprised" at the refusal, Bennett related, and "said he did this in the last war." The Florida Congressman had introduced a resolution (H Con Res 128) proposing a code of ethics for government officials and employees.

Thurman Arnold, former Assistant Attorney General and former Associate Justice of the U. S. Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, said "I must dissent" to proposed codes of ethics for federal workers.

Influence "Oversold"

"Influence, in my judgment, is a vastly oversold commodity in Washington. In the instances where it appears, it will not be curbed by a humiliating restriction placed on government employees as a whole," he testified July 6.

Walter White, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, also testifying July 6, endorsed the ethics code.

Rep. Carl Albert (D Okla.), a member of a House committee which, during the 81st Congress, investigated lobbying activities (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, 1950, p. 752), testified July 9 in favor of establishing permanent lobbying committees in the Senate and House to keep an eye on such activities. He suggested changes in the lobbying law so that the public might "find out who pays for what and how much."

Testifying July 10, Chairman Robert Ramspeck of the Civil Service Commission, who served 16 years as a Georgia Congressman, said that standards in government were higher than they were when he first came to Washington in 1911 as a clerk in the House post office. However he favored a code of ethics for government employees, provided it had public support.

Morris L. Ernst, New York attorney, testified July 10 that there "has been much loose talk about five percenters and influence peddlers." Many small businesses had to employ representatives in Washington for a five per cent fee in order to obtain government contracts, and neither five percenters nor lobbyists were unethical, providing there was full disclosure of their activites, he contended. Ernst urged that Congressmen be required to make full disclosure of their activities to win reelection and that Congressional Committees have a code of ethics against charging persons without giving those charged a chance to reply.

Committee

After studying the results of the hearings, the Committee Oct. 9 reported a resolution (S J Res 107) calling for the establishment of a commission to investigate ethics in government and public life. The commission would be required to submit a final report not later than two years after appointment of all members.

The Commission would be composed of five members appointed by the President, including two government employees, five members appointed by the President of the Senate, to include two Senators, and five members appointed by the Speaker of the House, to include two Representatives.

In its report on the resolution, the Committee said the good name of the public and the government had been challenged by the findings of Congressional investigations. "Nothing less than a thorough investigation . . .can clear the air."

The report recommended that the proposed commission "deal with the basic dilemmas, pressure and moral conflicts of present-day life. . .rather than individual failures," according to the report.

A second report Oct. 17 — the final report of the Ethics Subcommittee — recommended strengthening the bribery laws and a strict code of official conduct for government employees. It charged that not only government officials, but also some members of Congress had failed to "comply with decent standards of conduct" in running their offices and in political campaigns.

In addition to this report three members of the Subcommittee, Humphrey, Douglas and Aiken, introduced a bill (S 2293) to establish a code for official conduct of officers and employees in the executive branch of the government. The bill, which listed specific actions that would be considered "improper conduct," was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

HOUSE

In the House, 32 Representatives joined in endorsing one or more of eight identical resolutions (H Con Res 125-132) which were introduced June 21 and days following. The resolutions called for a set of "ten commandments" for ethics in government service.

The House resolutions on ethics provided for placing loyalty to God first, upholding the Constitution, giving a full day's labor for a full day's pay, practicing economy, neither giving nor taking special favors or privileges, making no private promises compromising the duties of public office, not participating in government business, never using public office for private profit, exposing corruption wherever discovered, and never influencing another to violate these principles.

The bills all were referred to the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee, which took no action on them during the first session.

Backers of the legislation were Reps. Clifford R. Hope (R Kan.), James J. Murphy (D N.Y.), Hale Boggs (D La.), William C. Lantaff (D Fla.), Robert J. Corbett (R Pa.), Frank W. Boykin (D Ala.), W. J. Bryan Dorn (D S.C.), Marguerite Stitt Church (R Ill.), Fred E. Busbey (R Ill.), Wesley A. D'Ewart (R Mont.), Harley O. Staggers (D W.Va.), Robert Hale (R Maine), Thaddeus M. Machrowicz (D Mich.), Charles E. Deane (D N.C.), Edward T. Miller (R Md.), Homer D. Angell (R Ore.), Robert T. Secrest (D Ohio), Cleveland M. Bailey (D W.Va.), Paul Cunningham (R Iowa), William L. Springer (R Ill.), Frazier Reams (Ind. Ohio), James P. S. Devereux (R Md.), Ernest Greenwood (D N.Y.), Laurie C. Battle (D Ala.), Henderson Lanham (D Ga.), Charles E. Bennett (D Fla.), Katharine St. George (R N.Y.), James T. Patterson (R Conn.), Gerald R. Ford, Jr., (R Mich.), John Phillips (R Calif.), Clement J. Zablocki (D Wis.), and A. S. Herlong, Jr., (D Fla.).

West Point Fete

HJ RES 285

Although $95,000 for a West Point sesquicentennial celebration in 1952 was included in the military appropriations bill (HR 5054) passed Oct. 12, the House limited the sum to be spent to $5,000 when the authorizing joint resolution (HJ Res 285) was passed Oct. 18.

The reduction was made by a 98-47 standing vote on an amendment offered by Rep. Gerald R. Ford, Jr., (R Mich.). A resolution (H Res 463) providing for consideration of the bill was adopted by a roll-call vote of 179 to 149. (See page 404.)

Alaska, Hawaii Statehood

S 49, S 50

Summary — Bills designed to make Alaska and Hawaii the Nation's 49th and 50th states were introduced in both chambers of Congress in 1951. In the Senate, S 49 for Hawaii and S 50 for Alaska were reported but did not recieve floor action. House bills (HR 1493, 1510 and 1863 for Alaska and HR 49, 1646 and 1862 for Hawaii) were not acted upon.

Background — In 1950 the House passed statehood bills, but the measures were blocked by a filibuster in the Senate. (See CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, 1950, pages 410-13.)

Early in 1951 Sen. Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.) introduced S 49 and S 50, bills which would give statehood to Hawaii and Alaska, respectively. Bills were introduced in the House by Delegates Joseph R. Farrington (R Hawaii) and E. L. Bartlett (D Alaska). All bills were similar to those introduced in 1950.

SENATE

On Feb. 20, the Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee voted against holding further hearings on statehood for Hawaii. A decision on new hearings on Alaska statehood was postponed. The delay was occasioned by a resolution adopted by the Alaska legislature which urged amendment of the bill to provide a different apportionment of delegates to a constitutional convention.

On April 3, the Committee approved the Hawaii bill by a vote of 9-4, the Alaska bill by 7-6. Approval in both cases followed defeat of motions by Hugh Butler (R Neb.) to substitute his bills (S 104 and 105), providing for election by the Territories of their own governors.

In the meantime, the Committee made minor amendments to both bills. Action of the Hawaiian people in approving a state constitution was recognized in the Hawaii bill. The Alaska bill was altered to reapportion delegates to the proposed constitutional convention in accordance with the 1950 census.

Chairman O'Mahoney on May 8 filed reports approving both bills. A minority report on Hawaii was signed by Butler, George W. Malone (R-Nev.) and George A. Smathers (D-Fla.). These Senators were joined by Arthur V. Watkins (R Utah) and Russell B. Long (D La.) in filing a minority report on Alaska.

Reports on Alaska

The majority said admitting Alaska would add to national security and that "statehood for Alaska is desirable for America's peacetime development and economic expansion." It felt that Alaska had shown political maturity when "a substantial majority" voted in favor of statehood.

The minority report said Alaska was suffering from "grave economic ills" which statehood could not resolve. "Aside from the salmon industry, which is declining, federal spending constitutes the Territory's main industry," it declared. The minority contended the bill did "nothing to remove the cloud of Indian claims against Territorial lands" and did "not guarantee protection of the Territory's rights to its tidelands." The section dealing with election of delegates to the constitutional convention was such that, under it, "political elements in the Territory of demonstrated irresponsibility could seize control of and dominate the convention."

Reports on Hawaii

On Hawaii, the majority report said that "statehood would strengthen our national defense." It recognized that Hawaii had "held a duly constituted constitutional convention which has submitted a constitution to the people of Hawaii and that this constitution has been accepted by them. . .That the first steps toward integrating the new State of Hawaii into the Federal Union. . .have been taken on the Territory's own initiative."

In answer to charges of Communist influence in Hawaii, the majority found "evidence. . .the people of Hawaii have successfully cast communistic influence out of all phases of their political, social, cultural and educational activities. . .Whatever alleged Communist influence there may be in Hawaii, it is no bar to statehood."

The minority report said Communists controlled the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union. "Communism has also penetrated very deeply into many of the leading political and social organizations of the islands" and ". . .nothing really effective has been done to rout out the Communists from their positions of influence."

Action Postponed

On Aug. 21, Ernest W. McFarland (D Ariz.), majority floor leader, said that action on both statehood bills would have to be postponed and the Senate had not considered the bills when the first session adjourned.

There was no House action on statehood legislation.

Limitation of Debate

Summary — Senators introduced four amendments during 1951 designed to change prevailing Senate rules dealing with limitation of debate (cloture) on controversial measures. The proposals were referred to the Senate Rules Committee which held hearings, but none received action during the session.

Under existing rules, cloture may be invoked only if 64 Senators—two-thirds of entire Membership of 96—vote to do so. This rule, sponsored by the late Sen. Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.), was adopted as a compromise after a long fight to amend the rules in 1949. (CQ Almanac, Vol. V, 1949, p. 583.)

The Proposals

One of the four proposals considered by the Senate Rules group was a bill (S Res 203) sponsored by the late Sen. Kenneth S. Wherry (R Neb.) which would permit limitation of debate by a two - thirds majority of Senators present and voting.

Another bill (S Res 41), introduced by Sens. Wayne Morse (R. Ore.) and Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.), would require a simple majority of those present to stop debate.

A third proposal (S Res 52) was sponsored by Sens. Irving M. Ives (R N.Y.) and Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr., (R Mass.). Their bill would require a "constitutional majority"—49 Members — to limit debate.

A fourth proposal (S Res 105), a compromise between the two-thirds and simple majority formulas, was offered by 11 Northern Democrats. It would end debate after 48 hours if two - thirds of all Senators present voted to do so or after 15 days if a simple majority of the Senators present so voted.

XUM

Sponsoring the compromise measure were Sens. Herbert H. Lehman (N.Y.), James E. Murray (Mont.), Warren G. Magnuson (Wash.), Paul H. Douglas (Ill.), Humphrey, Theodore Francis Green (R.I.), John O. Pastore (R.I.), William Benton (Conn.), Brien McMahon (Conn.), Matthew M. Neely (W. Va.), and Harley M. Kilgore (W. Va.).

SENATE

Hearings

The Senate Rules Committee Oct. 2 began hearings on the four proposals to amend the cloture rule.

Sen. William Benton (D Conn.), acting chairman, said at the outset he saw no "practical way" of shutting off filibusters against civil rights legislation. He and Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) and Herbert H. Lehman (D N.Y.) denounced such tactics.

Listing "suggestions" for combatting filibusters, Benton mentioned the possibility of taking "a very long look at appropriations bills affecting Southern states." However, he joined Humphrey and Sen. A. S. (Mike) Monroney (D Okla.) in opposing such a move.

Humphrey forecast a change in political temperament in the South which would affect that region's attitude toward civil rights and the filibuster.

Lehman scored the existing rule for "invoking cloture" as "a plain prescription for potential legislative paralysis."

Witnesses appearing Oct. 2 to assail the Senate cloture rule included Michael Straight, American Veterans Committee, Elmer W. Henderson, American Council on Human Rights, and Patrick Murphy Malin, American Civil Liberties Union. Malin said "decision by filibuster is analogous to decision by dictatorship."

Walter White, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said that at the San Francisco conference on the Japanese peace treaty, Russia used all the "techniques of delay" perfected on the Senate floor.

Offers Two Plans

United Automobile Workers (CIO) head Walter P. Reuther Oct. 3 accused the Senate of unlawfully yielding to rule by minorities and "the dead hand of the past." He proposed two plans for blocking filibusters, based on his contention that each new Congress is free to adopt its own rules.

Other spokesmen urging easier debate - stopping rules Oct. 3 represented the Congress of Industrial Organizations, Americans for Democratic Action, National Council of Jewish Women, American Jewish Congress, American Jewish Committee and the National Council of Negro Women.

At Oct. 9 hearings Sen. Wayne Morse (R Ore.) called for an immediate showdown with "around-the-clock" Senate sessions for as many days as necessary to wear down filibusters. He said the present rule was adopted in 1949 after a political "deal" in which some Republicans supported the rule in exchange for southern Democratic opposition to extension of some power lines in the Northwest.

Sen. John C. Stennis (D Miss.), one of the leaders of the southern opposition to the move, said the present cloture rule was a "good faith settlement." He said a "barrier" was needed to offset influence of "various pressure groups."

Sen. A. Willis Robertson (D Va.) also defended unlimited debate, saying that to take away a Senator's "right to defend his State" would remove one of the Senate's distinguishing characteristics.

Sen. William E. Jenner (R Ind.), speaking for himself and Wherry who was ill, said both opposed the Morse resolution to impose a debate time limit by majority vote of the Senators present. They favored, instead, a return to the old rule of cloture by vote of two - thirds or more of the Senators present and voting (S Res 203).

Sen. Irving M. Ives (R N.Y.) argued for cloture by vote of 49 or more Members (S Res 52), saying that tighter or less tight restrictions would permit minorities to govern Senate action.

Senate Majority Leader Ernest W. McFarland (D Ariz.) said "flatly no" Oct. 10 to proposals that the Senate stay in session in 1951 for a showdown over civil rights legislation. McFarland's statement came after Benton disclosed he planned "to do everything I can to precipitate a showdown" on the issue "as soon as I can."

There was no first session cloture showdown but Benton announced Oct. 23 that he would propose a review of Senate Rules to eliminate "antiquated procedures" when Congress met in 1952. Benton made the statement before the Rules Committee.

Anti - filibuster proposals continued to meet opposition, however. Sen. Richard B. Russell (D Ga.) contended that present rules were necessary as protection against any "power drunk" majority. Sen. Carl Hayden (D Ariz.), chairman of the full Rules Committee, also opposed any rule that would permit the Senate, by a majority vote, to cut off debate.

Federal Judgeships

S 1203

The Senate Oct. 9, 1951, passed by voice vote a bill (S 1203) creating 19 new permanent federal judgeships, after deciding in favor of Sen. Kenneth McKellar (D) in a bitter dispute with his Tennessee colleague, Sen. Estes Kefauver (D).

The legislation was not acted on by the House during 1951.

By a 60 - 19 roll-call vote the Senate accepted McKellar's amendment calling for a temporary additional federal judge for the Middle Tennessee District. (For voting, see page 399.)

Kefauver favored a permanent roving judge to serve both the Middle and Western Districts. Kefauver's plan was endorsed by the Senate Judiciary Committee. However, McKellar's amendment won the backing of Committee Chairman Pat McCarran (D Nev.) during floor debate. It had gained the endorsement of the Federal Judicial Conference, subsequent to the time the Judiciary Committee reported S 1203 to the Senate.

Other sections of the bill were not disputed.

As passed by the Senate, S 1203 would provide:

Two additional judges in the North Circuit Court of Appeals, covering Far West states, and one in the Fifth Circuit, covering Southeast states.

New District Judgeships in: Southern District of California, Colorado, Delaware, Southern District of Florida, Nevada, Northern District of Ohio, Eastern District of Pennsylvania, Eastern District of Texas, Eastern District of Virginia, Western District of Washington, Eastern District of Wisconsin, Alaska, and a roving judgeship in the Northern and Southern Indiana Districts.

Make the following temporary judgeships permanent: Southern District of Texas, and roving judgeships in Eastern and Western Districts of Missouri and Northern and Southern Districts of West Virginia.

Create temporary judgeships in the middle district of Tennessee and in Arizona and two such posts in the Southern District of New York.

Senate

The bill was introduced March 22 by McCarran. His Judiciary Committee reported it to the Senate Aug. 20.

The Senate passed the legislation Oct. 9 after accepting four amendments. It rejected a Committee amendment which would have provided a roving judge for the three districts of North Carolina. The change was turned down at the request of Willis Smith (D N.C.) who explained that he and the senior Senator from North Carolina, Clyde R. Hoey (D) had previously favored it but had since decided further study was needed.

When McKellar's amendment was called up, he delivered a 45 - minute speech in its favor. Kefauver, he said, had been "running all over the state" to win support for his plan "since he found himself without a leg to stand on."

In his turn, Kefauver said the Western District needed an additional judge because it had a larger population and more court cases than the Middle District.

After deciding in favor of McKellar on a 60-19 roll-call vote, the Senators give the bill final passage by voice vote.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

James E. Murray (D Mont.), Warren G. Magnuson (D Wash.) and Harry P. Cain (R Wash.) — Amend Committee amendment to provide two additional circuit judges for the Ninth Circuit. Voice vote.

Pat McCarran (D Nev.) — Eliminate provision calling for an additional judgeship for the Northern District of Georgia. (McCarran offered the amendment at the request of Sen. Richard B. Russell (D Ga.). Voice.

Alexander F. Wiley (R Wis.)—Provide an additional judge for the Eastern District of Wisconsin. Voice.

Kenneth McKellar (D Tenn.) — Provide a temporary additional judge for the Middle District of Tennessee instead of additional roving judge. Roll call, 60-19.

Committee Vote

The first formal roll-call vote taken by the Senate of the 82nd Congress came Jan. 15 when the upper chamber rejected a move by Minority Leader Kenneth Wherry (R Neb.) to increase membership of the Senate's standing committee on Appropriations. The vote was 44 to 38 to uphold a ruling by Vice President Alben Barkley that Wherry's motion was out of order. (See page 399 for vote.)

Wherry's proposal was to raise membership of the Appropriations group from 21 Senators to 23. The ballot against his proposal was purely partisan. Every Democrat voted against his move by supporting Barkley's ruling. Every Republican voted to override the ruling and, in effect, support Wherry.

Speaker Elected

As the 82nd Congress convened at noon Jan. 3, 1951, the new House of Representatives elected Sam Rayburn (D Tex.) as its Speaker. The roll-call vote was 231-192. It was a strict party-line ballot, with 231 Democrats supporting Rayburn for a sixth term as Speaker and none voting against him, and 192 Republicans voting against him and none for his election. (Vote on page 400.)

After Rayburn had been elected over the Republican candidate, Minority Leader Joseph W. Martin, Jr. (R Mass.), he urged all Americans, in and out of Congress, to "lay aside little differences" in these troubled times and make this nation "strong enough to maintain its liberty and its security . . . so that international desperados and despots will fear to get in our path."

Speaking to the new Members of the House and the Members who won re-election, Rayburn reminded them that the "United States of America cannot wrap two oceans around it and stay secure, safe and free."

Adjournment Roll Call

On June 15, for the seventh time in the 24 weeks of the 82nd Congress, the House held a Friday session. Although there was no legislative business on the calendar, Members rejected, 75-161 (196 absentees) the motion by Majority Leader John W. McCormack (D Mass.) to adjourn. (See vote p. 400) Rep. Paul C. Jones (D Mo.) took the floor to urge a longer work week in order to "enjoy a recess during the hot trying days of the late Summer." McCormack pointed out that "the House has caught up with every piece of legislative business."

Several Members took advantage of the one-and-a-half hour session to make one minute speeches.

President Truman had contrasted the number of our casualties in Korea with the greater toll taken on this nation's highways, and GOP Members chided him for making the comparison.

Vote Probe Powers

H Res 436

The House Banking and Currency Committee in 1951 was voted broad investigating powers, including the right to subpoena witnesses and demand records, both within and outside the United States, on all matters within its jurisdiction. The action was taken by a 284-15 roll-call vote of the House Oct. 8. In the voting, 154 Democrats, 129 Republicans and one Independent favored the resolution; three Democrats and 12 Republicans opposed it. (See page 404.).

Rep. Leo E. Allen (R Ill.) objected to the authorization of foreign "junketing," but Committee Chairman Brent Spence (D Ky.) explained the group might have to check on strategic materials production and Export-Import Bank loans abroad.

The measure also contained specific permission to investigate reports of poorly-built homes constructed with government - insured or guaranteed loans.

House Rules Change

H Res 7

Summary — A Republican-Southern Democratic coalition in the House of Representatives easily won a battle Jan. 3, the opening day of Congress, to change the House rules and increase the power of the House Rules Committee to determine what legislation should go to the House floor for debate.

By a roll-call vote of 179-247 the coalition rejected a resolution (H Res 7) by Chairman Adolph J. Sabath (D Ill.) of the House Rules Committee to bar changes in the House rules of the 81st Congress. On this vote 158 Republicans and 89 Democrats (82 from Southern states and 7 from adjacent states) teamed up to defeat Sabath's move; 141 Democrats and 37 Republicans favored his resolution.

Rep. E. E. Cox (D Ga.) then offered a substitute resolution, agreed to by a vote of 243-180, which repealed the "21-day rule" of the 81st Congress which allowed other committees to bypass the Rules Committee in order to bring legislation to the House floor. (All votes on page 400.)

Background — Exactly two years previously, on Jan. 3, 1949 and the opening day of the 81st Congress, the House trimmed the powers of the Rules Committee. It provided that the chairman of a legislative House committee which had reported a bill favorably and filed a resolution asking for its consideration by the House could bring the resolution directly to the House floor if the Rules Committee reported unfavorably on it or failed to report on it within 21 calendar days after its introduction.

The House on that occasion voted 275-143 to close debate and vote on the resolution by Sabath which contained the rule amendment. Adoption of the resolution by voice vote followed. Some 225 Democrats and 49 Republicans backed Sabath's 1949 motion, while 112 Republicans and 31 Democrats (29 from Southern states, and 2 from Kentucky) opposed it (See CQ Almanac, Vol. V, pp. 577-578).

Cox tried to repeal the 21-day rule on Jan. 20, 1950, but his resolution was defeated 183-236, with 171 Democrats, 64 Republicans and one ALP member opposed and 98 Republicans and 85 Democrats in favor of the Cox resolution.

In the two-year interval between 1949 and 1951 a total of 58 Democrats from the South and adjacent states were recruited to the ranks opposed to the 21-day rule.

Thirty-six new members opposed the Sabath resolution in 1951, although their predecessors favored it. Of this number 8 were Southerners and 24 were Republicans who replaced Democrats defeated in the November election of 1950.

The following table indicates the growth of Southern opposition to the 21-day rule:

Floor Action

In addressing the House on the first day of the 82nd Congress, Sabath said he was not sure that his resolution would again be agreed to. But he pointed out that the 21-day discharge amendment to the rules had proved very effective, during the two years it had been in effect.

"Under the 21-day discharge rule the House had the privilege and the opportunity of voting on eight important bills reported favorably by legislative committees on which the Committee on Rules failed to act or denied rules—the rivers and harbors, flood-control bill, the joint resolution providing for U. S. participation in international organizations, statehood for Alaska and Hawaii, the national science foundation bill, the mining bill, the veterans' hospital bill and the poll-tax bill," he told his colleagues. All these bills easily passed the House.

"I think the resolution before us should be adopted so we can continue to have orderly procedure and advance legislation that is recommended by the President and favorably reported to the House by the various committees," he said.

Sabath charged that the Democratic majority in the Rules Committee was "only a paper majority" because three of the Democratic members — Cox, Howard W. Smith (D Va.), and William M. Colmer (D Miss.)—"do not cooperate with the majority of the members but prefer to cooperate with and deal with the Republican minority." Defeat of his resolution by the "unholy alliance" of the Southern Democrats with the Republicans would "tear down the rights of every member of the House," he predicted.

Republican Attack

Republicans who led the attack on the Sabath resolution were Reps. Leo E. Allen (R Ill.), ranking minority member on the Rules Committee, Clarence J. Brown (R Ohio) and Christian A. Herter (R Mass.), other minority members of the committee, and Carl T. Curtis (R Neb.).

Since it is the purpose of the Rules Committee to channel legislation to the House for consideration, they argued that the 21-day rule had proved "confusing." They denied that the Rules Committee could pigeon - hole legislation indefinitely under the old rule, because a discharge petition signed by a majority of the House—218 Members — could bring legislation to the House floor for debate. Also, legislation on the Union or Consent Calendar could be brought up for consideration by the House "without any reference whatever to the Rules Committee," Herter pointed out.

Before the 21-day rule went into effect the Rules Committee exercised a review on "unwise, unsound, ill-timed, spendthrift and socialistic measures," Halleck (R Ind.) argued.

Brown said the "liberals" in the House wanted to perpetuate the 21-day rule so they could continue "their great liberality with the people's liberties and the people's finances."

Opposed to the change in the 21-day rule were Reps. Herman P. Eberharter (D Pa.), John W. McCormack (D Mass.), Clifford P. Case (R N.J.), Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.), Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.), James G. Fulton (R Pa.) and Chet Holifield (D Calif.).

They argued that the 21-day rule was more democratic than the old rule, and it had been popularly received by the country when it was adopted. The question before the House is "whether the people shall have more direct expression in the House than they had before when bills had to go through the Rules Committee," Javits said.

CORRECTION—Vol. VII, 1951: Page 336
Col. 2, third paragraph from bottom, last line should read, "Only the mining bill failed to pass the House" (not "All these bills, etc.").

Case told his colleagues that "it should never be possible for the House to escape or avoid declaring its position on any important issue."

"Dictatorial Control"

McCormack and Celler both charged that the Rules Committee had been under the "dictatorial control" of a group of Southern Democrats and Republicans. "Of course orderly procedure requires some supervision of House agenda, but it is absurd to allow ironclad, uninhibited control to a few," Celler said. "We need no wet nurse."

Eberharter charged that legislative committee chairmen often had to change provisions of bills reported favorably by their committees in order to get a rule from the Rules Committee before the 21-day rule was adopted.

There was only one speech made on the Cox substitute, and Cox made it. He said the 21-day rule was agreed to two years previously when "there was demand for the scalps of people who had stood in the way of reform measures advocated by many prominent figures in this House and the country. The Rules Committee had incurred the displeasure of many because it had, in keeping with what it believed to be the good of the country, refused to stampede under the lash of the whip applied by strong unofficial minority groups."

If the 21-day rule were repealed, as Cox urged, it would be "in the interest of orderly procedure," he said.

The votes by which the Sabath resolution was defeated and the Cox proposal approved were then taken.

Temporary Reorganization

S 101, HR 1545

Summary — The Senate voted Feb. 5 to give President Truman the authority he had requested to make temporary reorganizations in federal agencies concerned with the national emergency. But the Senate's bill (S 101) giving the President this power was only half-a-loaf compared to what the Administration had originally requested. Numerous restrictions were placed on its powers to effect emergency reorganizations.

The companion bill (HR 1545) drawn in the House was even more stringent. It added more restrictions. Nevertheless, when the measure came up in the lower chamber, the Representatives rejected it by a 169-227 roll-call ballot March 13. (Vote on page 400.)

Defeat was the first major set-back for Mr. Truman's legislative program for the new Congress.

Provisions— The main provisions of S 101 — the only temporary reorganization bill to draw favorable action — were as follows:

1. It added a new title III to the Reorganization Act of 1949 providing for temporary reorganizations necessary to promote the national defense.

2. It extended authority not included in the original act to transfer functions vested in one agency to another, on a temporary basis, with a view to eliminating duplications and to meet the needs of the mobilization program.

3. Each house of Congress was given only 18 days in which to act on a resolution disapproving a Presidential reorganization plan after it was submitted to Congress. (Each house normally has 60 days to disapprove a plan under the Reorganization Act of 1949.)

4. Senate confirmation was required of the top officers of each defense agency created by the measure.

5. It excluded authority of the President to abolish or create new departments or to abolish or transfer the civil function of the Corps of Engineers.

6. It provided for the reversion of the transferred functions to their original status at the end of the emergency.

Background — President Truman on Dec. 18, 1950, asked the 81st Congress to rush through before the end of the year "legislation along the general lines of Title I of the first War Powers Act, 1941, which contained the emergency reorganization powers available to the President during World War II.

"The current mobilization effort requires that the President be able to adjust from time to time, by rapid executive action, the organization of the Executive Branch," his message to Congress stated.

"The changes that will be made under this authority will be temporary in nature, for the purpose of furthering the defense effort. When the emergency has ended, the agencies affected will revert to their present status unless further action is taken by the Congress," he said. He emphasized that the legislation was "of vital importance to the war effort" and was necessary to prevent delay in reorganization under the 1949 Reorganization Act that "would only hamper the over - all effort."

Congress did not act on the President's request before the end of the 81st Congress, but action was started in the Senate shortly after the beginning of the 82nd Congress on S 101, a measure introduced by Chairman John L. McClellan (D Ark.) of the Senate Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

SENATE

Hearings

The Senate Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments opened hearings on Sen. John L. McClellan's (D Ark.) reorganization bill (S 101) on Jan. 23. Administration spokesmen objected to certain of its features.

Budget Director Frederick J. Lawton said the veto rights Congress wanted to reserve on emergency reorganization made for inflexibility and would prevent speedy action when it was most needed. Lawton noted that S 101 provided that the President's temporary plans would become law within 15 days unless Congress said no. Under the 1949 Act, a plan became law 60 days after it was submitted unless the House or Senate killed it.

Lawton said a delay of even 15 days might be too much, under defense stress.

John W. Snyder, Secretary of the Treasury, and Charles Sawyer, Secretary of Commerce, wrote letters to the Committee. Snyder held the Presidential request for a reactivation of the reorganization powers of World War II was "preferable" to the approach embodied in the McClellan bill. Sawyer joined Snyder in urging that the President be granted to ing that the President be granted power to make reorganizations by executive order, without formal recourse to Congress.

Committee

But the Senate Committee over-rode Administration objections to S 101, and reported it Jan. 25. However, the endorsed bill gave Congress only 12 days in which to reject a temporary reorganization plan, and thus represented a softening of the 15 - day feature Chairman McClellan originally favored.

Additional restrictions were placed in the bill. The civil functions of the Army Engineers were exempted from reorganization, transfer, abolition or consolidation under terms of S 101. Creation of any new agency was barred. An expiration date of June 30, 1952, was set.

All plans submitted to Congress under the process spelled out in the measure were to be temporary ones for emergency, national defense purposes only.

Regular permanent reorganization plans, the Committee noted, should still be presented to lawmakers for approval or rejection — with Congress having a total of 60 days in which to study the plans and act on them.

Floor Action

The Senate passed S 101 by voice vote Feb. 5 after adopting two amendments offered by Sen. John W. Bricker (R Ohio).

One Bricker amendment provided that Congress be given 18 days in which to adopt a resolution disapproving a Presidential reorganization plan after it was submitted to Congress.

The second Bricker amendment required Senate confirmation of the top officers of each defense agency created under the measure. Both amendments were agreed to by voice vote.

HOUSE

Committee

Chairman William L. Dawson (D Ill.) of the House Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments introduced a companion temporary reorganization bill (HR 1545) on Jan. 15. The measure was referred to a subcommittee of his group, which held a one-day hearing on it Feb. 9. At the hearing, Herbert A. Bergson, general counsel of the Office of Defense Mobilization, testified how the contemplated plans might affect that agency.

Another witness was chairman Carl Vinson (D Ga.) of the House Armed Services Committee, who testified in favor of an amendment to prohibit the President from shifting the combatant functions of the armed forces and the flood control functions of the Army Engineers Corps to a war agency.

The Subcommittee approved HR 1545 on Feb. 19, and the full Committee followed suit on Feb. 28. As formally reported to the House on March 5, the measure gave the President emergency powers to shuffle non - military government agencies. The legislation would permit the President to act if neither the House nor Senate disapproved his course within 18 days after his reorganization plans were submitted to Congress. The bill differed in two provisions from the Senate's measure:

1. It did not withhold from the President authority to abolish or transfer the civil functions of the Corps of Army Engineers.

2. It exempted the military functions of the Defense Department from the reorganization authority of the President.

Floor Action

In general debate on HR 1545 on March 8, Reps. W. J. Bryan Dorn (D S. C.), John Bell Williams, (D Miss.) and Burr P. Harrison (D Va.) raised the issue of a Fair Employment Practice Commission, questioning whether the legislation would give the President authority to establish such an agency. Rep. Chet Holifield (D. Calif.) vainly sought to placate the Southerners with the assurance that the President could not "create new functions." He argued the President already had authority to write anti-discriminatory provisions into defense contracts, and in any case Congress would be empowered to vote on any FEPC plan.

Stubborn Resistance

However, it became increasingly evident that the Administration-backed bill was encountering stubborn resistance in the House. On March 13, crippling amendments were offered to it — and were accepted. The amendments extended the time in which Congress could veto a temporary reorganization plan from 18 days to 25 days, and provided that a simple majority of either House could block a proposed shuffle. As it came from the Committee the measure had required a "constitutional majority" of 218 before a streamlining action could be barred.

Final Blow

The final blow fell later that day, when a coalition bloc of Southern Democrats and Republicans voted down the bill, 169-227 on a roll-call ballot. (Vote on page 400.) It was the first major defeat for the President's legislative program in 1951.

On the final vote, 46 Democrats almost entirely from the South joined with 181 Republicans to bury the measure. Supporting it were 161 Democrats, five Republicans and one Independent.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

R. Walter Riehlman (R N.Y.) — Lengthen time limit on Congressional veto to 25 days. Voice.

Chet Holifield (D Calif.) — Allow President, where both houses have approved reorganization plan, to initiate proposal prior to expiration of 25-day waiting period. Voice.

George Meader (R Mich.) — Technical amendment to Holifield amendment, providing, in effect, that reorganization plans may be approved or disapproved by a simple instead of constitutional majority. Voice.

Overton Brooks (D La.) -- Prevent abolishment, transfer or consolidation of whole or any part of civil functions of Army Corps of Engineers. Voice.

RFC Reorganization

Effective April 30

Summary — President Truman on Feb. 19 handed Congress his Reorganization Plan No. 1, to alter the Reconstruction Finance Corporation primarily by replacing its five - man Board of Governors with a single administrator. Mr. Truman's move was considered a surprise one because it came only a week after he had renominated all five RFC board members and asked the Senate to confirm them (See Page 690.) The President also asked Congressional approval of his reorganization plan amid the furore then centering on the Senate's investigation of RFC policies. (See Page 498.)

Opponents of RFC reorganization promptly introduced resolutions to disapprove Mr. Truman's Plan. Hearings were held on these resolutions and consequently on the Plan itself. At their close, the Senate and the House each had a resolution before it which called for disapproval of the Plan.

The House voted on its resolution of disapproval on March 14. The measure, sponsored by Clare Hoffman, (R Mich.), drew 200 votes in its favor. Only 197 Representatives voted against the resolution. Under House rules, however, a resolution disapproving a reorganization plan requires 218 votes to be effective. Thus, supporters of the rejection resolution were 18 votes short of victory. The RFC Plan survived the 200-198 ballot against it. (See Page 400 for vote.)

The Senate voted on Homer Capehart's (R Ind.) resolution of disapproval April 13. The roll-call ballot was 41-33 in favor of the measure. But a minimum of 49 Senators is required to vote in favor of a resolution to disapprove a reorganization plan to make the rejection effective.

As had been the case in the lower chamber, opponents of the RFC Plan were unable to kill it even though they outvoted supporters of the reorganization. The President's program thus survived attacks in both chambers. The Plan went into effect April 30.

Provisions — Reorganization Plan No. 1, provided for continuing the RFC as a separate agency under the administration of a single head, instead of the five Governors previously in charge.

The Plan provided for certain additional safeguards with respect to loan policy and to specific loan applications by the creation of a loan policy board of five members to promulgate general policies to govern the granting and denial of applications. Members were to be the RFC administrator, deputy administrator, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Commerce and one additional member to be designated by the President.

It also provided that requested loans in excess of $100,000 be referred for analysis and recommendation to a board of review composed of not less than five employees of the RFC. The Board's views would be presented to the RFC administrator, and if he acted on a loan application contrary to the board's recommendations, he would be required to state his reasons in writing.

The administrator and his deputy could not hold any other employment while in the top RFC posts.

Background — President Truman had proposed in 1950 to transfer the RFC to the Department of Commerce, but the Senate had rejected this plan. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, page 372.) The President's 1951 move to place the agency under a single administrator was preceded by a similar action of the Senate Banking and Currency Subcommittee investigating RFC policies. This group authorized its chairman, J. William Fulbright, (D Ark.), to introduce a bill authorizing a single governor. He did so Jan. 4.

The Fulbright group formally declared its support of this approach a scant two weeks before Mr. Truman made his own proposal (See page 499.)

When the President's emerged, Fulbright hailed the proposal as meeting "the specifications of a plan I could support." Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) another Subcommittee member, called it "a very correct step that should result in great improvement" in RFC operations. Sen. Capehart and Sen. John W. Bricker (R Ohio), also Subcommittee members, opposed the plan. Capehart assailed it as "one which would further involve the RFC loan policy with politics."

Two resolutions of disapproval were offered. H. Res 142 by Rep. Clare E. Hoffman (R Mich.) was introduced Feb. 26 and S Res 76 by Sen. Capehart was introduced Feb. 21.

In addition to the resolutions of disapproval, there were several bills before Congress calling for outright abolition of the RFC.

HOUSE

Committee

The House Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments met to consider Rep. Clare Hoffman's (R Mich.) resolution (H Res 142) calling upon the House to disapprove the President's reorganization proposal. Hearings were held March 2 and 5. Testifying in favor of Plan No. 1 were Sen. Paul Douglas (D Ill.) Rep. Brent Spence (D Ky.), RFC Governors W. E. Harber and Walter Cosgriff, and Robert L. L. McCormick of the Citizens Committee for the Hoover Report.

Harber backed the plan as a "good one" as did RFC Director Walter E. Cosgriff, but sharp opposition was expressed by former Director Harvey Gunderson, who failed to get a reappointment in 1950. Gunderson said all RFC loans — "the Senate Committee to the contrary" — had been "good loans."

On March 5, the Committee decided to disapprove Hoffman's resolution. In effect, this meant the Committee endorsed Mr. Truman's proposed reorganization. The vote by which the Committee rejected Hoffman's expression of disapproval was not announced. But when H Res 142 was reported to the House on March 5, with the recommendation that "the resolution do not pass," the 11 Republican members of the Committee issued a minority statement decrying the recommendation.

Floor Action

The House acted March 14. Although 200 legislators, including 182 Republicans and 18 Democrats, supported Hoffman's resolution to reject Reorganization Plan No. 1, they were 18 short of the 218 needed according to House rules to put such a rejection across. The resolution was rejected by a 200-198 roll-call vote. (See page 400).

No Republicans voted against the rejection resolution, although 18 were absent or paired, and, therefore, did not vote. The 18 Democrats who joined the GOP attempt to defeat the plan were Reps. Watkins M. Abbitt (Va.), Thomas G. Abernethy (Miss.), Graham A. Barden (N. C.), William M. Colmer (Miss.), E. E. Cox (Ga.),

James G. Donovan (N. Y.), Ernest Greenwood (N. Y.), Burr P. Harrison (Va.), Tom B. Fugate (Va.), John E. Rankin (Miss.), Edward J. Robeson, Jr. (Va.), Frank E. Smith (Miss.), Howard W. Smith (Va.), Thomas B. Stanley (Va.), W. M. (Don) Wheeler (Ga.), Jamie L. Whitten (Miss.), John Bell Williams (Miss.) and Arthur Winstead (Miss.).

Thus President Truman's proposal stood.

SENATE

Hearings

The Senate Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments studied Homer Capehart's (R Ind.) resolution (S Res 76) calling for disapproval of the proposed RFC reorganization. Hearings were held March 21-22 and April 3. One theme developed in the testimony was that Congress, not the President, should decide the future of the RFC.

Expenditures Committee Chairman John L. McClellan (D Ark.) proposed that the Presidential Plan be withdrawn temporarily to let Congress decide whether to revamp or abolish the agency.

Chairman Burnet R. Maybank (D S. C.) of the Senate Banking Committee agreed with McClellan. He said his Committee would soon begin hearings on several proposals to abolish the agency outright. (See page 505).

If the Plan reached the Senate floor, nowever, Maybank said he might vote for it "as the better of two rotten apples. The worse apple would be failure to get rid of this bunch of directors," he said. It could also serve as a stop-gap measure until Congress worked out its own reorganization measure, he observed.

Karl E. Mundt (R S.D.), Robert C. Hendrickson (R N.J.), and Richard M. Nixon (R Calif.) agreed with the two Committee chairmen that the Plan should be withdrawn for the time being.

Sen. Henry C. Dworshak (R Idaho) appeared in opposition to the Plan. He doubted that the substitution of a single administrator for the five-man board of directors would assure "elimination of abuses." He asked, for example, how the RFC would be improved if E. Merl Young, alleged RFC expediter, or Harry Vaughan, the President's military aide, were named administrator. Rep. George Meader (R Mich.) also testified against the Plan.

RFC Chairman W. Elmer Harber testified that the type of man appointed to be RFC's sole administrator would be more important than any particular reorganization plan. Budget Director F. J. Lawton "strongly recommended" that Congress approve the Plan.

Sen. George A. Smathers (D Fla.) testified in support of the Plan as a first step toward fundamental reorganization of the agency. He proposed that Congress first approve the Plan, then enact legislation limiting loans to not more than $100,000-$200,000. He proposed the name be changed to "the Small Business Assistance Agency," in view of "the stigma that now attaches to the RFC." RFC's lending activities on behalf of small business have been highly worthwhile and "no evidence of any improper influence in connection with small loans" had been disclosed, he said.

Sen. J. William Fulbright (D Ark.) urged approval of the Plan on April 3, saying it would be "disastrous" to let the RFC continue in a "chaotic" state. Capehart formally testified that the Plan would actually leave the agency at the mercy of a "dictator."

Committee

After its hearings, the Committee April 6 reported favorably the resolution expressing disapproval of the President's Plan. The Committee vote was 7 to 6.

In the group, Sen. A. Willis Robertson (D Va.) joined six Republicans, Joseph R. McCarthy (Wis.), Mundt, Margaret Chase Smith (Maine), Andrew F. Schoeppel (Kan.), Dworshak, and Nixon, in favoring the resolution.

Those who opposed it all were Democrats: Chairman McClellan, Clyde R. Hoey (N.C.), Herbert R. O'Conor (Md.), A. S. Mike Monroney (Okla.), Thomas R. Underwood (Ky.), and Humphrey.

The seven favoring the resolution declared the Plan would not restore public confidence in RFC, and its adoption would be only a temporary expedient which might deter or indefinitely postpone permanent reorganization. The Plan was administratively defective and would destroy "any semblance of bipartisanship in the RFC," they said.

The six who opposed the resolution and supported the Plan held that RFC's vital importance in the wartime economy made immediate action by Congress imperative in reorganizing the agency, which was "drifting further toward deterioration." The Plan would restore the RFC to public confidence, was administratively sound and its adoption would not preclude Congress from enacting subsequent legislation affecting RFC, they said.

The resolution was formally reported April 10.

Floor Action

Senate debate on the RFC reorganization was repeatedly sidetracked by heated discussion of President Truman's dismissal of Gen. MacArthur as Far East commander. (See page 242). That incident tended to eclipse the RFC deliberations.

However, supporters and opponents of the proposed reorganization once again marshaled their arguments. Sen. Capehart, author of the resolution of disapproval, declared: "In being opposed to the Plan the furthest thing from my mind is to eliminate the RFC." Capehart said he recommended "the appointment of two directors who were not involved in the Fulbright investigation, with the suggestion that the President send a third nomination to the Senate. We would then have three directors on the board of the RFC. Later the President could send up two more nominations. To me that is a much better plan than jumping off into the deep and appointing a one-man director of RFC."

Sens. Robertson and James P. Kem (R Mo.) spoke in favor of abolition of the RFC. Sens. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.), Hubert Humphrey (D Minn.), and John J. Sparkman (D Ala.) led those who supported the agency and stressed its character as an agency helpful to small business.

When the Capehart resolution came to a vote, the Senate balloted 41-33 in favor of it. (See vote on page 399). But because Senate rules require 49 Senators to support such a resolution before it can be effective, opponents of the reorganization were defeated.

The President's Plan thus survived in the Senate as it had in the House. Reorganization Plan No. 1 went into effect April 30.

Survey of Interstate Crime

Summary — The Senate investigation of interstate crime generated more public interest than any other action by Congress during the year. Some of the early hearings were seen by what was then the largest audience ever to witness a television show. Committee hearings were held all over the nation. Repercussions from the probe stirred up local interest in many of the cities visited.

The Special Committee to Investigate Organized Crime in Interstate Commerce was active until Sept. 1, 1951. Its life, originally due to expire Feb. 28, was extended three times and the Committee was granted a total of $315,000 for expenses.

The Committee held hearings in such scattered spots as Miami, Kansas City, Philadelphia, Chicago, Detroit, San Francisco, New Orleans and New York City. It questioned governors, mayors, sheriffs and policemen and turned the spotlight on scores of reputed underworld figures. Most of the racketeers were gamblers and narcotics peddlers. Hearings were followed by scores of citations for contempt of Congress and many local indictments for criminal activities. (For details of contempt citations, see story, page 353.)

The Crime Committee chairman until May 1 was Sen. Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.). Sen. Herbert R. O'Conor (D Md.) stepped up to the chairmanship on that date and led the investigation until the Committee dissolved. The group's records and recommendations then were turned over to the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee for further action. The Commerce group decided not to conduct a further crime investigation.

The Crime Committee during its life issued a series of reports detailing its findings. In general, it found a network of organized criminal syndicates extending into almost every state. The syndicates, the Committee reported, could exist only with the support or tolerance of public officials.

Members of the Committee, in addition to Kefauver and O'Conor, were Sen. Lester C. Hunt (D Wyo.), Alexander Wiley (R Wis.) and Charles W. Tobey (R N. H.).

Background — The Crime Committee was set up in 1950 on the urging of Sen. Kefauver. After a dispute over jurisdiction between the Commerce and the Judiciary Committees the Senate voted to create a special committee. The group held hearings from May 26 to the end of the year, continuing without a break into 1951 (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, 1950, p. 437.)

HEARINGS

The Senate's Special Committee to Investigate Organized Crime in Interstate Commerce formally opened its 1951 hearings on Jan. 17 in Cleveland, Ohio. The first witness was Gov. Frank Lausche, who bitterly attacked commercial gambling in Ohio and urged the Committee to press for legislation "to help fight these people." Lausche proposed a federal ban on use of interstate communication wires for betting purposes.

The Committee's next witness, Arthur B. (Mickey) McBride, founder and former owner of Continental Press Service, flatly asserted he had never engaged in any activity in violation of a state or federal law. He denied he had ever had any acquaintance or association with the Capone gang in Chicago. Thomas A. Burke, mayor of Cleveland, said the city police had been successful in closing gambling in the city, but that operations had been taken into the surrounding counties.

Before moving to New Orleans for hearings there, Chairman Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) stated on Jan. 20 he should not have "directed" The Indianapolis News to stop publication of a crime report which the Tennessean called confidential and unverified. He said he should have put his communication to the newspaper in the form of an urgent request. His use of the word "direct" had brought a challenge from the American Society of Newspaper Editors, which had asked what right Kefauver had to control publication in a newspaper.

The Committee then traveled to New Orleans, where Mayor DeLesseps Morrison testified Jan. 25. He declared that New York gambler Frank Costello got his start in organized gambling in New Orleans in 1936, forming the beginning of a "national and perhaps international network of slot machines, gambling houses, night clubs and related activities."

The Senators pronounced themselves dissatisfied with the testimony of Frank J. Clancy, Sheriff of Jefferson Parish (County), La. They added his name to the list of witnesses they intended to cite for contempt of Congress.

$17 Billion Crime Cost

Back in Washington, Kefauver on Jan. 27 made a statement that organized crime was costing the U. S. public at least $17 billion annually. Special legislation was necessary to "destroy the octopus of crime," he observed in a summary of the Committee's activities to that time.

The glare of publicity that the Committee put on criminal activities resulted in "many arrests" and exposure of "many rackets," Kefauver said.

"Los Angeles, San Francisco, Chicago and New York appear to be the major crime centers of the country, and Chicago would appear to take first place," he observed. On the basis of the Committee's findings, organized crime definnitely operated interstate, he said.

Within a week, the Senate endorsed a Committee request for an additional $50,000 to continue its work and for an extra month in which to make its final report. The upper chamber on Feb. 1 approved S Res 60 on voice vote, raising to $200,000 the total, cumulative amount that had been placed at the disposal of the Kefauver group. The Senate extended the unit's life from Feb. 28 to March 31.

On Feb. 7, Sheriff Clancy voluntarily appeared before the Committee in Washington to purge himself of contempt charges. The sheriff told the Committee he had not enforced gambling laws in his parish because the public wanted gambling.

He promised the Committee that he would close all gambling places in his jurisdiction. The Committee voted to drop all charges against Clancy.

The Kefauver Committee then went on the road to study conditions in Detroit and New York.

Detroit Hearings

The Detroit hearings opened Feb. 8. Principal witness was Harry Bennett, former official and "trouble shooter" of the Ford Motor Company. Bennet was asked why he had hired many underworld figures and why a dealer franchise and haul-away contract had been given known criminals.

Bennett said Henry Ford, Sr., had tried to rehabilitate former criminals. He denied that he knew the Ford haul-away contract had gone to a New Jersey figure, Joe Adonis, or that a suburban Detroit dealer franchise had been taken from its original holder and given to a local man, Anthony J. D'Anna.

D'Anna said Bennett put him in business and conceded that he, D'Anna, had done nothing to earn his $27,000 annual salary. Another Detroit witness, Pete Licavoli, refused to answer questions about whether he supplied hoodlum strike-breakers to auto companies.

Carl Renda testified he had been awarded a lucrative scrap metal contract by the Briggs Manufacturing Company even though he had no equipment or experience, but he denied that the contract was awarded as payment for terrorizing union organizers in the mid-'40's.

New York Preview

The Committee went to New York City Feb. 13 to hold closed-door hearings. Witnesses included James A. Leary, prominent Saratoga County Republican; Arthur Leonard, county Democratic leader; Sheriff Frank Hathorn, and Detective Walter Ahearn.

Committee member Tobey said the testimony revealed that a Saratoga detective had been paid $10 a day to carry the day's take from a gambling house to the bank. He also said that a report on Saratoga gambling had been pigeonholed by a State Police official.

The group then turned to New York City affairs and queried Frank Costello, reputed underworld king; Frank C. Bals, former New York deputy police commissioner; James J. Moran, former political associate of ex-mayor William O'Dwyer; Clarence H. Neal, Jr., and Bert Stand, former Tammany officials; and Gerard Catena and Meyer Lansky, alleged underworld figures.

The Committee wound up executive hearings in New York Feb. 15, in possession of the "life stories" of two men prominent in the city for 15 years — Ambassador O'Dwyer, the ex-mayor, and Costello — and then returned to Washington for a week of intensive study of assorted gambling enterprises around the country.

Details of the O'Dwyer and Costello stories were not disclosed. But Chairman Kefauver said both the former Mayor and Costello would testify at public hearings in New York in March.

Punchboard Industry

The Committee turned to the punchboard manufacturing industry Feb. 16 in Washington and heard it described by one witness as prospering since a federal ban had been placed on interstate shipment of slot machines.

The witness, John W. Brookfield, an attorney for the Federal Trade Commission in cases involving lottery merchandise, testified that nine of ten punchboards, which once were designed for patronage of children, had become "strictly gambling boards."

A self-acknowledged "come back money" operator, Richard Remer, of Miami Beach, told the Committee Feb. 17 that it was his job to place bets at race tracks for Louis Rosenbaum of Cincinnati, identified by the Committee as a big-time bookmaker. In effect, it was explained at the hearing, the job of a come-back agent is to step in just before a race is run with bets on a long shot. This drives down the odds and helps "balance the books" for the bet takers.

Remer testified he worked for Rosenbaum for two years, placing bets for him at four tracks in Maryland and two in New Jersey.

Rosenbaum, called as a witness the same day, said he was a betting commissioner and his main business was taking "lay off" bets from bookmakers or others. He testified he handled lay-offs, mostly from small bookmakers, from Cleveland, Miami, Las Vegas, Hot Springs, Los Angeles and other cities.

Alfred (Big Al) Polizzi, acknowledged to the crime investigators, Feb. 19 that he had parlayed gains from rum running and slot machines into legitimate businesses that paid him more than $20,000 a year. Formerly of Cleveland, he said he was currently a partner in a construction firm in Coral Gables, Fla.

"Second Chance" Witnesses

Polizzi was one of several witnesses, threatened previously by the Committee with contempt of Congress charges for refusal to answer questions, who were heard in response to their plea for another chance on the stand.

One of these, Harry (Nig) Rosen, alias Harry Stromberg, told the Committee he was "friendly" with Assistant Supt. of Police George F. Richardson of Philadelphia and often entertained him in New York between 1939 and 1941. He said Richardson "never did anything for me" in return. Rosen testified he himself was a gambler and a bookmaker. Willie Weisberg, another second-chance witness, said he had been in the numbers racket in Philadelphia and had been playing the horses since 1947.

Richardson Feb. 20 scornfully described Rosen as "a yellow cur" and a "bum that couldn't get me." The officer said, "Everybody around Philadelphia knows I've given him a tough time — his whole mob." Richardson also made a flat denial when told by the Committee that Weisberg testified in Philadelphia in 1950 that Richardson kept arresting him (Weisberg) as a blind for failing to enforce the law against other persons.

The Committee Feb. 22 heard testimony from J. Rex Farrior, Hillsborough County, Fla., state's attorney, who had been named in previous Tampa hearings as one of three county law enforcement officials reported to have taken gambler's pay-off money.

Farrior said he was not concerned with gambling, as his jurisdiction covered only capital crimes. Sen. Kefauver said Tampa officials should cooperate in wiping out illegal gambling rather than argue over jurisdiction while crime flourished.

St. Louis Hearings

The Committee held two days of hearings in St. Louis, Mo., Feb. 23 and 24. William L. Holzhausen, president of the St. Louis Police Board, told the group that gambling couldn't be stamped out in St. Louis unless Congress outlawed national race wire services.

William Paul Brown, president of Pioneer News Service, a racing news service, said his organization disseminated its information through public telephones. He denied that any of his employees were "crooks," but admitted that the news service customers were "crooks."

Sidney Wyman, owner of a 5-million-dollar-a-year betting business, said he operated through the Western Union. "People just wire their money in," he said.

John T. Englis, East St. Louis Police Commissioner, testified that he had been given $131,000 in campaign funds between 1943 and 1949, but that he kept the money in a safe deposit box and paid a personal income tax on it.

James J. Carroll, called by the Committee "the nation's biggest bookie," refused to testify when television cameras were trained on him, as they offended his "sense of propriety." Kefauver told him that television was considered to be no different than any other news disseminating device and said he would have to testify. Carroll then walked out. Kefauver said he would seek a contempt citation against Carroll.

California Testimony

The Committee held hearings in Los Angeles Feb. 27 and 28. William Bonelli, member of the State Board of Equalization, told the Committee how the Board controlled liquor licenses. Kefauver criticized the Board for giving licenses to "outsiders with police records."

Retired Capt. Al Guasti, of the Los Angeles County sheriff's office, said he had been allowed to buy a $12,000 liquor license for $525 as a "pay-off" for his campaign support of Bonelli.

Moe Dalitz, identified as the former head of a Cleveland gang, told the group Feb. 28 how he had helped in a 1945 merger of the Detroit Steel Company and the Reliance Steel Company of Cleveland and manipulated the stock to make more than $230,000 on the transaction.

J. Dale Gentry, grand jury foreman in 1948 and 1949, said former Sheriff James Stocker of San Bernardino County let gambling run rampant. Gentry retorted that Stocker had run a gambling casino in his own home, which the sheriff raided.

After the Los Angeles hearings, the Committee moved North to San Francisco. It interrogated Stanley Cohen, an alleged race wire operator. When Cohen refused to answer most of the questions put to him March 2 and 3, the Committee voted to cite him for contempt.

Public Relations Fund

Among other witnesses were Arthur H. Samish, lobbyist in the state legislature for the California State Brewers Institute. He brought records showing that he controlled a "public relations" fund for the Institute which totaled about $150,000 annually.

Half of the fund, Samish said, was treated as business expenses for income tax purposes. Kefauver said Samish's records were so incomplete that it was impossible for the Internal Revenue Department to know whether the deductions were legitimate.

Another witness, was Holden Sanford, Treasury intelligence agent at Fresno. He was asked about favors done him by a Fresno businessman who was in income-tax difficulties. Sanford said his actions may have been a mistake, but that they had been of no significance.

The Committee, returning home, held hearings March 9 in Washington during which Robert W. Winston, chairman of the North Carolina Beverage Control Board, Clarence Evans, Tennessee State Commissioner of Finance and Taxation, and Charles D. Redwine, Georgia Commissioner of Revenue, testified that large amounts of untaxed liquor were being shipped into the South.

In a March 11 hearing, Clarence G. Adamy, Amvets, told the Committee of the troubles his group had had in keeping Amvets posts free of slot machines.

Return To N. Y. C.

The Senate Crime Investigating Committee shifted to New York City, and opened public hearings there on March 12. Testifying were men said by the Committee to be among the leaders of the nation's largest gambling syndicates. The hearings reached a climax March 15 when Costello refused to answer any more questions by the Senate probers and walked out of the meeting.

Developments leading up to the walk-out started March 12 when George Morton Levy, president of the Nassau Trotting Association which operates the Roosevelt Raceway, testified that he had paid Costello $60,000 to keep bookmakers away from the track. Levy said he was a good friend of Costello, Frank Erickson, convicted gambler, and Joseph Schoenbaum, formerly with the Internal Revenue Bureau.

Erickson declined to answer questions about gambling casinos in Florida, and the Committee later, voted to cite him for contempt of Congress.

Charles Lipsky, Queens Republican, told the Committee that Costello had considerable political influence in New York City.

Joe Adonis, alleged by the Committee to be a big-time gambler, refused to answer questions on Constitutional grounds. Adonis did admit acquaintance with several local politicians.

Costello himself took the stand March 13. He said he had never been connected with bookmaking. He said he had been a friend of Levy but had done nothing to earn the money paid him to drive bookies out of the Roosevelt Raceway. Costello refused to reveal details of his personal finances.

Costello returned to the stand March 14. He revealed that he had about $50,000 in a strongbox at home and $90,000 to $100,000 in his bank. He denied that he had asked for a check of his phone after a wire-tapped conversation between himself and Thomas A. Aurelio, Democratic nominee for Supreme Court Justice, had been publicized in 1943. Aurelio had thanked Costello for his support.

James F. McLaughlin, former employee of the New York Telephone Company, testified later the same day that Costello hired him to check his phone for wiretaps at that time.

Costello Walks Out

Costello sat at the witness table for the third straight day March 15. But he claimed he was too ill to answer questions and requested a postponement. He showed a doctor's certificate that he should stay at home for a thorough rest.

The Committee pressed for responses. Costello, visibly angered, said he would leave the hearing if the Senators persisted. They persisted. He walked out. Chairman Kefauver said Costello could be arrested and also cited for contempt.

Another March 15 witness was Samuel Levine, U.S. Bureau of Narcotics Agent, who testified that narcotics smuggling into the United States increased after reputed vice leader Charles "Lucky" Luciano was deported to Italy in 1946.

The Committee March 16 looked into gambling at Saratoga, N.Y. John A. Gaffney, state police superintendent, testified that he had ordered an investigation into gambling at Saratoga in 1947 and said state police seldom extended their jurisdiction into metropolitan areas without a specific invitation. Gaffney said Gov. Thomas E. Dewey was not given a copy of the report later made on gambling in Saratoga.

Charles La Forge, State Police inspector, said he had made the investigation and had found several open gambling casinos. He said that in his opinion the casino owners had to have political influence to stay open.

Contempt Citations Urged

Costello appeared briefly March 16 — just long enough to tell the Committee his throat was still too sore to testify. The Committee insisted he answer questions, and Costello walked out.

John H. Crane, president of the local International Association of Firefighters (AFL) and of the Uniformed Firemen's Association, was asked about political contributions made by him in behalf of his organizations. He refused at the time to answer questions about contributions.

James J. Moran, Commissioner of Water Supply, and friend and political appointee of then-Mayor O'Dwyer, was asked about contributions given him for O'Dwyer. Moran said he knew nothing about campaign contributions. Moran said he had visited Costello occasionally, but not on political errands.

In a closed session March 17, the Committee voted unanimously to recommend contempt citations for Costello, Erickson and Adonis. The recommendation, Chairman Kefauver said, was based on their refusals to answer Committee questions about their alleged gangland activities.

O'Dwyer Testifies

O'Dwyer took the stand March 19, at his own request, according to Kefauver. In answer to questions, O'Dwyer said he had called on Costello once or twice on Army business when he (O'Dwyer) was a major during the war. He said he was checking possible fraud in uniform contracts.

During one of his visits to Costello's apartment, O'Dwyer said, several political leaders were present, but he said he had not discussed politics with them.

O'Dwyer described the activities of Murder, Inc., several members of which he had prosecuted for murder while Kings County District Attorney. O'Dwyer said the group carried out gangland executions for the nationwide underworld syndicate. Leaders in the syndicate, O'Dwyer said, were the late Bugsy Siegel, Meyer Lansky, and Lucky Luciano. He said he did not know of any connection Costello might have had with the syndicate.

He was asked why he had not successfully prosecuted Albert Anastasia, who O'Dwyer said was the leading "executioner" for Murder, Inc. O'Dwyer said the key witness against Anastasia in the murder of Longshoreman Peter Panto died in a fall from a window while under police protection.

Committee member Tobey asked if the witness, Abe Reles, had not been killed by one of the policemen. O'Dwyer scoffed at that theory and said Reles had fallen from a window while trying to escape.

Costello was back in good voice March 19 when he took the stand again. He said he was no politician and had contributed no cash to campaigns, but he added that he had had some success in "persuading" politicians behind the scenes. He said he was friendly with some Tammany Hall politicians, but that he didn't know why he should have any influence with them.

Queried on Reles Death

Ambassador O'Dwyer was questioned again March 20 about the death of Reles and about the special police squad under Seventh Deputy Police Commissioner Frank C. Bals. He was asked if the Bals squad had been set up to negotiate with gamblers wanting police protection.

O'Dwyer said he had heard no such rumor. He also denied that he had ordered an investigation into waterfront crime halted. Anastasia, he said, had been "boss" of the waterfront.

Four of the five members of the Senate Crime Committee voted for confirmation of William O'Dwyer to the post of Ambassador to Mexico in 1950. The Senate approved the nomination Sept. 18, 1950, on a 42-22 roll-call vote. For O'Dwyer were 38 Democrats and four Republicans; opposed were 22 Republicans.

Kefauver, Hunt, O'Conor, and Wiley voted for O'Dwyer; Tobey did not vote but announced he would have voted against O'Dwyer.

On a previous motion to send the nomination back to the Committee — in effect to delay or block confirmation — Kefauver, Hunt and O'Conor voted "no"; Wiley voted "yes" and Tobey announced he would have voted "yes."

(For details, see page 237 CQ Almanac, Vol. VI)

Costello returned to the stand March 20. He said he knew 14 Tammany leaders, but said he did not discuss politics with them. He refused again to tell the Committee his "present financial worth," saying the question was an invasion of his Constitutional rights.

Gift Charged, Denied

On the last day of the New York hearings, John P. Crane appeared again. This time he said he gave O'Dwyer $10,000 on behalf of the Uniformed Firemen's Association in 1949. O'Dwyer had denied to the Committee that Crane had given him money.

Crane also said that in 1946, 1947 and 1949 he had given a total of $55,000 to Water Commissioner Moran, at that time deputy fire commissioner, to get laws passed favorable to firemen. Moran at the March 16, 1951 hearing, denied he had received the money from Crane. Moran acceded to an order by Mayor Vincent Impelliteri to resign immediately after the hearing. Crane received an order from his Association to resign or be fired.

Crane said he also gave $3,500 for use in Gov. Dewey's presidential primary campaign in Oregon in 1948. Dewey, in a statement, said he knew nothing of the contribution at the time.

Costello was back again March 21. He was asked about possible criminal activities he might have engaged in prior to 1926, when he became a citizen. He denied that he had been a bootlegger before that date. Committee counsel Rudolph Halley intimated Costello's citizenship could be withdrawn, subjecting him to deportation, if it were proved he had been a bootlegger before he became a citizen.

After the New York hearings closed, Kefauver said the record would be studied with a view to prosecuting the "many cases of perjury" he believed came out during the investigation.

The best "attended" committee hearings in the history of the United States Congress then ended March 21 in New York City. Millions of persons had watched the television broadcasts of the Committee's examination of New York political and underworld figures. The hearings, carried on every major television network, won No. 1 audience ratings.

Washington Hearings

St. Louis "betting commissioner" James J. Carroll appeared in a Washington hearing March 22. Carroll had been called to testify in St. Louis Feb. 23, but refused to talk with television cameras trained on him.

He again argued about television and newsreels, Kefauver ordered that the cameras be trained away from Carroll's face. Carroll said he was still "frightened" by the lights and cameras, but went on with his testimony. The contempt citation which had been voted against him then was withdrawn.

Carroll was asked about the telephone service to his national "lay-off" betting shop in St. Louis. Carroll agreed that it was possible that telephone company executives knew the business he was in. Committee member Hunt said he was sure the executives knew the phones were used by a super bookie and demanded that they be called to testify.

He said that if bookies were denied telephone service, gambling could be reduced. Kefauver agreed that telephone executives knew what was going on. He said a list of long-distance calls to Carroll's establishment for one four-month period filled 228 pages, single-spaced. His phone bill was $120,000 in 1950, Kefauver said.

Carroll said he had no direct contact with the St. Louis lay-off shop. He said it was run by John Mooney and Michael Grady and had operated through an East St. Louis outlet. Carroll said he had received a $110,000 salary from the enterprise in one year to "give advice and furnish financing." Carroll denied that he had ever received or sought police protection.

Guzik Refuses Questions

Jacob (Greasy Thumb) Guzik, alleged gangster and money handler for the old Capone mob, was brought to the witness stand March 22 after a long search by the Committee. He refused to answer any questions, standing on his Constitutional rights.

After repeated refusals by Guzik to answer questions, including queries about his age and where had he been for the last six months, the Committee voted unanimously to recommend that he be cited for contempt of Congress. Guzik immediately was arrested by the Senate sergeant - at - arms and held on $10,000 bond.

Sidney A. Brodson, Milwaukee, told the Committee March 24 of his operations in betting on sports events. Brodson said he had bet as much as $1 million a year and usually won.

Most of the money was bet for him by agents scattered over the United States, he said. He studied sports pages to compile information on teams. He told the Committee that professional gamblers had long suspected that some Madison Square Garden games were fixed. He said there was talk of other fixes in Big Ten and Ivy League basketball games.

Brodson said gamblers would be handicapped if telephone and wire service were denied them but said they would find some way around the blocks.

Lew Farrell, Des Moines, Iowa, a wholesale beer distributor, was questioned about his part in attempts to raise bail in 1947 for reputed gangsters Charles and Gus Gargotta. Farrell said he had been asked by a boyhood friend of the Gargottas, Dr. D. M. Nigro, to put up the bail. Farrell declined to answer questions about his own alleged interest in a Des Moines gambling house.

McGrath, Hoover

Attorney General J. Howard McGrath and FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover appeared before the Committee March 26. McGrath suggested that the work begun by the Crime Committee be carried on by a special grand jury. He opposed a permanent national crime commission, saying it might lead to creation of a national police force that would "endanger our cherished liberties." Most enforcement, he said, should be local.

McGrath asked for a law requiring regulation of race wires by the Federal Communications Commission. Wayne Coy, FCC chairman, objected to such a law, which would make the FCC into a "quasi-judicial court" charged with "impossible" administrative decisions. He told the Committee he would favor a law making it a crime to transmit betting information on the wires. This, he said, would put enforcement up to the Justice Department.

Hoover agreed with McGrath that there should be no national police force. But he recommended that the Crime Committee be made a permanent Senate committee. Hoover also recommended local enforcement responsibility and said that all gambling could be eliminated in 48 hours if laws on the books were "earnestly and vigorously enforced."

Two witnesses refused to testify before the Committee March 26 while television cameras were trained on them. They were Morris Kleinman, identified by the Committee as a former big-time bootlegger, and Louis Rothkopf, said to be part owner of several gambling casinos.

They told the Committee that they were not actors, were not used to appearing before cameras. They said they were not protected against libel on television, and they protested being used to boost TV sales without adequate compensation. Both were arrested and released on payment of $10.000 bond. Kefauver said the Committee would make a legal test of the cases to determine the part television could play in Congressional hearings. (See page 354)

New Jersey Politician

Abner "Longie" Zwillman, New Jersey political figure, answered few questions put by the Committee March 26. He said he was having income tax trouble and could not reveal his business affairs. He conceded that he knew various underworld figures, but did not elaborate on his dealings with them.

Harry J. Anslinger, chief of the Bureau of Narcotics, Department of the Treasury, testified March 27 that narcotics smuggling and dope addiction had been on the upswing during the past two years. He urged that local police departments set up special narcotics squads and that sentences to dope peddlers be raised by courts.

Undersecretary of the Treasury Edward Foley read a statement by John W. Snyder, Secretary of the Treasury, March 27, announcing the creation of a "special fraud section" of the Treasury Department which would deal with tax returns of criminals. George J. Schoeneman, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, gave the Committee names of several hundred "alleged racketeers" who, he said, were being prosecuted for income-tax fraud.

Committee members told the witnesses that mobsters have received too much freedom from income-tax fraud prosecution. They said they were not convinced that officials were doing everything possible to nail down violators.

James H. Brink appeared before the group at a closed session March 27 and admitted ownership of several gambling casinos in Kentucky. He said that John Croft had been his partner in some of these enterprises. Croft declined to answer questions about the casinos when he testified in a closed session March 29. He was held under $10,000 bond pending possible contempt of Congress charges.

William G. O'Brien, Chicago, also named by Brink as a partner, refused to testify March 27 and was also held on $10,000 bail.

Extend Probe

The Committee was scheduled to finish work and turn in its final report by March 31. Late hearings, however, left the Committee pressed for time to prepare the report.

In a closed session March 29 Tobey and Wiley urged that the Committee ask for an indefinite extension. Kefauver maintained that the group should quit on schedule. Finally the Committee agreed to ask for a 30-day extension. This was a compromise, with the stipulation that a longer extension might be sought later.

The Committee then approved a resolution (S Res 108) to extend its life 30 days and later March 29 the Senate passed the measure on voice vote. The resolution also granted an additional $15,000 for the investigation.

Wiley on April 7 in a statement urged the Senate to extend the life of the group. He said, "There are whole areas of interstate crime which have not been even touched." He asked that the Committee be continued and that it look into narcotics peddling, prostitution and waterfront crimes.

Ten days later Wiley introduced a resolution (S Res 129) to extend the Committee to Jan. 15, 1952, and allow it another $150,000 for expenses. Arguing for his resolution April 18, Wiley said the group had considerable unfinished business.

Kefauver, however, said the group had all information necessary to write an interstate crime bill. He favored a "watchdog" group to check intermittently on interstate crime.

Accordingly, Kefauver, O'Conor and Hunt introduced bills April 23 to set up a joint Congressional committee to investigate interstate crime (S Con Res 28) and to establish a Federal crime commission (S J Res 65).

Democrats Meet

The Democratic Policy Committee met with Democratic members of the Crime Committee April 24 to try to reach a compromise. Kefauver agreed to back a temporary extension if he would be allowed to step down as chairman. The Policy Committee agreed to back a four-month extension of the Committee and to drop the resolutions establishing a joint investigating committee and a crime commission.

When his resolution reached the floor later April 24, Wiley modified it to fit Democratic views. Cut-off date was set at Sept. 1, 1951, and the group was authorized $100,000. It also was specified that all Committee records be turned over to the Senate Commerce Committee after the investigation was completed and that the Commerce Committee be authorized to carry on the probe if necessary.

The Wiley measure then was agreed to unanimously on voice vote.

On May 1 Kefauver stepped down as chairman of the Crime Committee and O'Conor took over.

Resume Hearings

The Committee resumed hearings May 28. George S. May, a Chicago efficiency engineer, and Rocco Fischetti and Murray Llewellyn (the Camel) Humphreys testified at a closed door session in Washington.

All three refused, on grounds of possible self-incrimination, to answer some of the questions asked. O'Conor said he would recommend that they be cited for contempt. May was questioned about the engineering firm he heads and about the Tam O'Shanter Golf Club, near Chicago.

The Committee returned to Miami June 21 for a three-day second look at crime in the area, and lambasted Gov. Fuller Warren (D) for his apparent "indifference to the grave, organized and criminal menace posed by the very evident widespread racketeering in Florida."

Warren invited the Committee to come to Tallahassee after declining two invitations from the group to testify in Miami. O'Conor, the new chairman, said it would be impractical to move the hearings to the state capital for the convenience of Warren. In a third request for the Florida governor to appear before the Committee, O'Conor wired Warren June 20 that the request was "urgent" and threatened further action unless Warren gave a "satisfactory response." Warren again declined to testify.

The Committee said June 21 that it wanted to question the Florida governor on whether he received campaign contributions from gambling interests and racketeers, whether he made commitments to such contributors to "tolerate" gambling operations, and whether he took steps after election to carry out such commitments.

The crime probers moved into Miami only three days after Jimmy Sullivan, sheriff of Dade county, resigned June 18 with a blast at "a campaign of abuse and smear" he said was directed against him. Sullivan, criticized by the Committee, was suspended from his post after a grand jury accused him of neglect of duty but was reinstated by Warren April 7. The Florida Supreme Court upheld Warren's action on a question of jurisdiction May 11.

Narcotics Study

The Committee June 27 opened a series of public hearings, complete with television trappings, on the narcotics racket.

Then Charles Siragusa, a federal narcotics agent, said the government had evidence indicating Charles (Lucky) Luciano, deported New York crime chief, was head of a huge international narcotics ring which he directed from his Italian home. An affidavit obtained from Luciano by Italian police showed that Luciano admitted he had received thousands of dollars and a car from American friends since he was deported.

Mafia, an international crime syndicate, found narcotics traffic its "most profitable" underworld activity, Siragusa said. "The Mafia mob" could buy a kilogram (a little more than two pounds) of heroin in Italy for from $1,000 to $1,500 in U. S. currency, and sell it wholesale in New York or Chicago for from $6,000 to $10,000, he said. A capsule of heroin retailed at from $1.50 to $4, the Committee was told.

Pasquale Matranga, who identified himself as a Brooklyn businessman, told the Committee June 26 that he delivered a car to Luciano in 1948 while on a trip to Italy.

George M. Belk, a federal narcotics agent, testified that he posed as a partner of Robert Kimbell, San Antonio night club operator and narcotics peddler, to try to break up a big interstate narcotics ring, with key spots in Detroit, Chicago and New York. Belk said June 27 he discovered that Benedict Prano, James Galici, Charles Paranello, "Fat Sam," and the "Old Man," otherwise unidentified, were "higher-ups" in Detroit narcotics traffic.

Ross B. Ellis, also a federal narcotics agent, testified June 27 that the arrest of a young, addicted girl of a wealthy Detroit family led to the indictment of 96 persons in the ring. About 50 were sent to prison, and the others forced out of the traffic, he said. He recommended "extremely severe sentences" for narcotics peddlers, and assignment of more men to combat narcotics traffic in large cities and port areas.

Harry J. Anslinger, Commissioner of the Narcotics Bureau, testified, June 27, that most marijuana illicitly in the country was from Mexico, but he said the Mexican government was doing "a very good job" of trying to stop it.

Drug Addicts Testify

A parade of narcotics witnesses, many of them minors, appeared before the Committee June 26-27. They were unidentified. Most were patients at a federal hospital at Lexington, Ky., for the treatment of addicts.

The younger addicts testified that they started smoking marijuana, known as "reefers," when in high school. Then they began to use heroin. When the heroin "kick" palled, they mixed it with cocaine. Addiction was quick, they testified.

Heroin addiction started within one month after steady use of the drug, according to Dr. Harris Isbell, research director of the Lexington Hospital. Addicts would commit all types of crimes to obtain drugs, testimony indicated, because the need of an addict was overwhelming. Isbell told the Committee June 26 that the use of narcotics led to temporary and sometimes permanent insanity. The use of barbituates, or sleeping pills, was habit-forming, he said.

Sees Epidemic

Dr. Victor H. Vogel, another medical officer, testified June 26 that "we're faced with an epidemic." He said there had been a 20-fold increase in the admission of minors to federal hospitals for treatment as drug addicts between 1947-50. Most came from large cities, he said.

James R. Dumpson, a New York welfare worker, testified June 26 that peddlers in Harlem were offering marijuana to children as young as nine years of age. An unidentified mother of an addict declared June 26, "I'd rather see him dead than using it (heroin)." She said parents who were suspicious of addiction should get in touch with federal authorities at their local post office. Danger signs were when a child stayed out late, developed a sudden urge for "money and more money," and became "disagreeable and cross," she stated.

Gambling Probe

The Committee June 28 heard witnesses tell of gambling activity in Reading, Pa. Ralph S. Kreitz said he operated about 100 slot machines there. His share of the take came to $60,000 yearly, he said. This netted him $30,000 annually. When State investigators came to Reading, the local police ordered all slot machines out and two "horse parlors" closed, and considered banning punchboards, Kreitz testified.

The Rev. James D. Matchette, a Methodist minister, told the Senators that gambling and crime were widespread and open in Reading. William P. Birney, Reading police chief for the last seven years, said the city policy was to raid gambling places only on specific complaints, or on direct orders of the mayor.

Three witnesses refused to answer questions on gambling in Reading. They were Abraham and Isadore Minker and Alex Fudeman.

Rep. George M. Rhodes (D Pa.), whose district included Reading, said June 29 that the Senate Crime hearings on gambling conditions in Reading was "a half-probe." He was "disturbed" because "of the lack of important witnesses."

The Senate Investigators began an inquiry into gambling operations in Baltimore and other parts of Maryland July 2 with a closed-door hearing. Since his home state was involved, O'Conor named Hunt and Wiley to alternate as chairmen during the Maryland inquiry.

At the July 2 hearing Bilson Ing, told the group about operations of Howard Sports Daily, a Baltimore race scratch sheet of which Ing was vice president. The Committee wanted to know about any tie-in Howard Sports had with Continental Press, a nationwide race wire service.

Refuse To Answer

John Maddock, Laurel, Md., real estate operator, refused to answer questions about any activity in horse racing. Thomas Aversa, a Baltimore night club operator, refused to talk about his income but acknowledged he was worth more than $100,000 in 1949.

Julius (Blinky) Fink reportedly refused to answer any material questions. Willie Adams and Edward Reitz, both of Baltimore, answered questions about betting activities.

Appearing at a closed session July 9 were Ike Sapperstein, Willis N. (Buzz) King, George Goldberg, and Leonard J. Matusky. Goldberg refused to answer virtually all questions.

King testified that in 1945 he had loaned $5,000 to Ralph H. Amrein, a lieutenant on the Baltimore police force and former head of the city vice squad.

Sapperstein refused to answer questions about numbers writing or lotteries, and denied being a bookmaker.

Matusky described the activities of the Worldwide News and Music Service, Inc., operating in Baltimore and Anne Arundel County, Md. According to Matusky, private customers of the telephone service received racing information, were known only by code number, and paid their bills in cash once a week. Tavern customers paid $40 a week for music, racing and other news.

Describes "Rotten" Setup

Sen. Hunt presided at closed hearings in Atlantic City, N.J., July 6 and 7. He described the situation as "pretty rotten," with a gambling-political set-up similar to that in Miami before the federal clean-up. He was especially critical of Police Chief Harry Saunders, stating that there was no doubt in the mind of anyone except Saunders "that there are 300 known bookies and more than 200 numbers writers operating openly." Hunt said he would recommend further hearings.

XUM

Other witnesses in addition to Saunders included Edward Nappen, James Boyd and Vincent Lane, Republican ward leaders, and Herman (Stumpy) Orman. Orman was described by Samuel Lane, special counsel for the Committee, as the man who "runs" Atlantic City.

Sen. Kefauver presided July 18 in place of O'Conor, at a closed session of the Committee which heard former Anne Arundel County (Md.), Police Chief John H. Souers and other county officers. Kefauver commented later that law enforcement in Anne Arundel County must have been "rather poor" to permit open gambling operations. He added that the Committee's evidence extended only to January 1951.

At an open hearing July 19 on gambling conditions in Atlantic City, Herman Orman admitted that he had transferred $41,220 from a New York trust company to one in Atlantic City, but denied he was "head of gambling" in Atlantic City.

An Atlantic City Police Patrolman, Fred J. Wahrlich, testified that numbers and other gambling operations were openly practiced and that he had been reprimanded and transferred to traffic duty for his attempts to curtail them.

$20 Million From Lottery

The Committee heard Pennsylvania State Police Capt. Harry E. McElroy say Aug. 7 that Louis Cohen, as head of an interstate lottery syndicate, made $20 million a year in the state. The Committee was unable to locate Cohen. McElroy named Joseph Size of Scranton as Cohen's chief lieutenant in his treasury-balance lotteries.

Size appeared before the Committee with his income tax records but refused to show them and refused to answer almost all questions. A Western Union official said Size had a contract to receive daily figures on the treasury balance.

Jimmy Mack of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., and Thomas Sesso of Scranton, Pa., admitted they had operated small numbers games, but Mack denied McElroy's charge that he tried to get police to "lay off" Cohen.

Joseph Baldassari, a partner in a Scranton amusement company, refused to answer questions on alleged attempts to bribe police and refused to show his business records to the Committee. Another witness, Joseph Scalleat, refused to answer any questions.

The District Attorney of Lackawanna County, Carlon M. O'Malley, said the Senate Committee had not turned up enough evidence for a grand jury investigation, but added his office is "keeping the eye" on violators in the area.

The Committee began a two-day hearing on Maryland crime conditions Aug. 8. Its first witness was Leonard J. Matusky, president of a Baltimore firm supplying news and music to taverns and other customers. Kefauver asked him about his connection with Continental Press Service, the nationwide distributor of racing news, and Matusky admitted he looked to Continental as the "daddy" of the business.

Hunt accused the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Co. of "aiding and abetting" Matusky's business of supplying information for illegal off-track betting.

Harry Bilson, manager of Howard Sports Daily, told the Committee that he supplied Continental race news for $300 a day. He was asked about his "territory" and about alleged $820 weekly payments to a "complete stranger," Al Gorman, for race results from Florida.

Sherman Faces Quiz

Irving Sherman, whom the Committee had sought for some time; testified Aug. 15 that he left New York at William O'Dwyer's request shortly before the 1945 mayoralty election to avoid being questioned about "a terrible blast in the newspapers."

Asked why it had been impossible to find him when the Committee wanted to question him in earlier phases of the investigation, Sherman said he didn't want to be "embarrassed" by getting up in front of the television and newsreel cameras. He added that he had decided finally to "come in and testify" on the advice of Rep. Arthur G. Klein (D N.Y.). Newsreels and radios were shut off during Sherman's testimony Aug. 15. No "live" television cameras were present.

Sherman, identified by the Committee as a "known gambler and intimate of racketeers," said he was told by a go-between that O'Dwyer wanted him to get out of town. He learned later, he said, that the newspaper "blast" was a charge by O'Dwyer's opponent, Judge Jonah Goldstein, that gambler Frank Costello, Sherman and other figures were backing O'Dwyer's candidacy.

Delving into the narcotics racket again the Committee Aug. 15 heard a medical professor and a string of ex-dope peddlers.

The professor, Dr. Henry K. Beecher of Harvard University, testified that synthetic drugs had been developed that were satisfactory substitutes for opium as pain killers.

Malachi L. Harney, Assistant to the Commissioner of the Federal Bureau of Narcotics, testified that it was easier to stamp out illicit manufacture of drugs than to control the growing of opium poppies.

The probers also called a number of New York City witnesses, who had been convicted on narcotics charges, apparently in an effort to prove that stiffer sentences would help stem the traffic.

Looking again at New Jersey affairs the Committee Aug. 16 heard a former Treasury agent describe Abner Zwillman, who had testified March 26, as head of a bootlegging syndicate that cleared $50 million in six years during prohibition. The agent, Edwin Baldwin, told how attempts to get Zwillman and Joseph Rheinfeld, an associate, on income tax charges were frustrated by the theft of an Internal Revenue Bureau report.

A former assistant to Elmer Wene, Democratic candidate for Governor of New Jersey in 1949, told of an offer of $300,000 from Zwillman through a middleman who said Zwillman "will do more for Wene than he did for John Kenny in Jersey City." Kenny defeated former Mayor Frank Hague of Jersey City. The offer to Wene was turned down, the witness said. Wene was defeated by Alfred Driscoll, now Governor.

Final Public Hearings

The Committee held its final public hearing Aug. 17, although two important witnesses did not apear. Chairman O'Conor said the Committee, due to expire Sept. 1, would need the final two weeks to make its report and recommendations.

One of the missing witnesses was Zwillman. Joseph Bozzo of Paterson, N.J., said he asked Zwillman to contribute to former Gov. Harold Hoffman's primary campaign against present Gov. Alfred Driscoll, but Zwillman refused. Driscoll won. Bozzo, a clothing manufacturer, also admitted knowing Frank Perrone. Willie Moretti and other New Jersey gamblers.

The other missing witness was Charles E. Nelson of Ritchie, Md., who had told the Committee Aug. 9 he didn't know that a business he had invested in was a numbers business, although he made $50,000 a year on a $5,000 to $15,000 investment. Sheriff Carleton G. Beall of Prince Georges County, Md., testified that Nelson told him he had paid $22,000 a month to the former county administration, but said his (Beall's) efforts to get a recording of an offer to himself were foiled by an amateur sleuth's announcement Aug. 14 that he had a recording of a tip - off on a raid on one of Nelson's numbers cars.

Sen. Kefauver said Nelson's business records included a $10,000 check with a stub marked "numbers business", as well as other substantial payments which Nelson had denied before the Committee. Kefauver said Nelson's records indicated an increase from $20,000 a week in 1942 to $50,000 a week for numbers operations in Washington. Samuel Huey, Nelson's accountant, and Mrs. Leona Weightman, his bookkeeper, both said they had nothing to do with Nelson's gambling operations.

Reports

The Crime Committee issued four reports during its 15 - month investigation, three of them in 1951. The reports said evidence had demonstrated conclusively that nation-wide organized crime syndicates existed and that their existence depended on support or tolerance of public officials. Legislation was recommended to cope with the situation. (CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, 1950, p. 439.)

Interim Report

The year's first report was filed Feb. 28. It summarized the evidence that pointed to nation-wide crime tie-ups.

The syndicates, the report said, were operating with the connivance and protection of law enforcement officials. "This secret government of crimesters," the report said, "is a serious menace which could, if not curbed, become the basis for a subversive movement which could wreck the very foundations of this country."

The two major syndicates, according to the report, were centered in Chicago and New York. The Chicago group was headed by Tony Accardo, "the Fischetti brothers" and Jake Guzik. The New York group was led by Frank Costello and Joe Adonis. Deported gangster Charles (Lucky) Luciano was named as the "arbitrer" of disputes between the two syndicates.

The report said "shocking" corruption existed "at all levels of government." Govs. Fuller Warren of Florida and Forrest Smith of Missouri, the report said, received campaign contributions from known gamblers. A connection was alleged between a Warren - appointed "investigator" and a Chicago mob which muscled into a lucrative Miami Beach bookie syndicate.

Smith, according to the report, appointed as Kansas City Police Board members men who favored a "wide-open town." The appointments, it was said, were made after slain gambler Charles Binaggio had contributed to Smith's campaign.

The report said the annual national income from illegal gambling was about $20 billion a year, and that much of the income was not taxed.

First 'Final' Report

The Committee released what had been designed to be the final report May 1. Congress, however, extended the life of the group, and the document became, officially, the Third Interim Report.

Conclusions

The Committee reached the following general conclusions, as outlined in the report.

1. Organized criminal gangs operating in interstate commerce were "firmly entrenched" in large cities, engaging in illegal gambling, narcotics rackets, prostitution, etc.

2. The crime syndicates "make tremendous profits" by bludgeoning out monopolies in their rackets — monopolies protected by public officials in some cities.

3. There were two major syndicates: The Accardo - Guzik - Fischetti syndicate operating out of Chicago and controlling or sharing rackets in Kansas City Dallas, Miami, Las Vegas, and on the West Coast; and the Costello - Adonis - Lansky mob operating in New York City, Saratoga, Bergen County, N. J., New Orleans, Miami, Las Vegas, the West Coast and Havana, Cuba.

4. The Mafia ties the major syndicates and smaller groups together and coordinated and supervised their efforts by "ruthless enforcement of its edicts."

5. Top - level hoodlums were "immune from prosecution" because of bribery, political power, creation of ties with apparently respectable business men and purchase of "public good will" through charitable contributions and press relations.

6. Gambling profits — money coming from "the $2 horse bettor and the 5-cent numbers player" — were the principal support of the mobsters.

7. Legalization of gambling would not end the predatory activities of the gangs. "The Committee has not seen any workable proposal for controlled gambling which would eliminate the gangsters or the corruption."

8. Race wire services, principally those of the monopoly Continental Press Service, were "indispensable to big - time bookmaking."

9. Western Union, which leased wires to Continental, had not been "fully cooperative" with law - enforcement officials.

10. "Crime is largely a local problem" and must be attacked at the local level with aid from state and federal authorities.

Urge Federal Aid

11. The federal government should help eliminate interstate crime and promote the exchange of information between various law agencies.

12. Wide-open racketeering, found in many places, "can easily be cleaned up by vigorous law enforcement."

13. "Venal public officials" who said they were elected to maintain "wide-open towns" were put in office by gamblers. The gamblers also "deliberately propagated," by "paid publicists," the myth that gambling was good for business.

14. The Treasury had been defrauded of "huge sums of money in tax revenues by racketeers."

15. Tax accountants helped prepare fraudulent returns for gamblers.

XUM

16. Lawyers became part of the mobs and advised members on how to break the law with impunity.

17. Crime syndicates infiltrated legitimate businesses by use of intimidation.

18. Some legitimate businessmen have aided the underworld in return for mob help in handling strikes and breaking unions; while some unions have been used by gangsters to further their rackets.

Recommendations

Based on its findings, the Committee made several recommendations:

1. Congress should for a short time continue to check on work by federal agencies to suppress interstate crime.

2. A "racket squad" should be organized in the Justice Department.

3. After the Senate Crime Committee disbanded, a federal crime commission should be set up to continue the check on organized crime.

4. Congress should support the Special Fraud Squad of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, recently set up to check income - tax returns of known gangsters.

5. The Bureau of Internal Revenue should enforce more vigorously regulations requiring taxpayers to keep adequate records.

6. Gambling casinos should be required to keep daily records of money won and lost, open at all times to the Internal Revenue Bureau.

7. Gambling expenses should be nondeductible for income - tax purposes.

8. Transmission of gambling information across state lines should be regulated.

9. Persons engaging in illegal enterprises should be required to file a statement on their net worth.

10. Transmission of bets or money to pay bets across state lines should be prohibited.

Ban Gambling Devices

11. All gambling devices such as punchboards and roulette wheels should be banned from interstate commerce.

12. Penalties against narcotic law violations should be increased.

13. Immigration laws should be changed to make deportation of criminal aliens easier.

14. Punishment should be provided for concealing illegal aliens.

15. The Attorney General should be allowed to revoke suspensions of deportation orders.

16. There should be more federal law officers and they should be better paid.

17. Perjury laws should be tightened.

18. Witnesses in a trial, grand jury or Congressional investigation should be given immunity, when necessary, against prosecution.

19. Laws allowing witnesses to be subpoena should be tightened.

20. Racketeers should be eliminated from the liquor industry.

21. Liquor licenses should list all "beneficial owners" and their arrest records.

22. The Interstate Commerce Commission should consider moral fitness of applicants for transportation permits.

Local Crime

The Committee report went into detail on interstate crime conditions found in the various cities visited by the group. Cities probed were Miami, Kansas City, Mo., St. Louis, Philadelphia, Chicago, Tampa, Cleveland, Detroit, New Orleans, Las Vegas, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Saratoga, N. Y. and New York City.

The report also analyzed various phases of interstate crime: the Mafia, race wire services, syndicated basketball, football and baseball betting, comeback betting, narcotics traffic, racketeers and legitimate business and official corruption.

Among public officials criticized was former New York Mayor William O'Dwyer. The report said, "Neither he nor his appointees took any effective action against the top echelons" of the rackets. It concluded: "His defense of public officials who were derelict in their duties, and his actions in investigations of corruption, and his failure to follow up concrete evidence of organized crime, particularly in the case of Murder, Inc., and the waterfront, have contributed to the growth of organized crime, racketeering and gangsterism in New York City."

Final Report

The final report of the Committee was issued Aug. 31, the date of the group's formal expiration.

The Committee emphasized in its final report that the crusade against crime should be carried on by a privately financed National Crime Coordinating Committee—with federal aid only at the start. It suggested that $100,000 be granted by Congress for the establishment of such a council and that government officials aid in its organization. After the organization period, operating funds would be derived from charitable groups and private contributions.

Florida's Gov. Warren received severe criticism from the group for his "persistent refusal" to testify under oath while the Committee was investigating the Florida underworld. "Throughout the Florida testimony," the report added, "the name of Governor Warren cropped up frequently in questionable connections."

Unlike the report of May 1 which criticized Ambassador to Mexico O'Dwyer directly, the Aug. 31 report referred to him only by indirection—by reciting testimony in which witnesses mentioned names of criminals as among the friends of O'Dwyer.

The District of Columbia was termed a possible "pivotal point for gambling operation of considerable size" by the Committee. There was also, the group added, evidence of "widespread traffic in narcotic drugs." It urged a thorough investigation of crime in the nation's capital which should emphasize any links between criminal elements in the District and adjoining areas.

Recommendations

The Committee also made the following recommendations:

1. A thorough overhauling of state and local laws to make them more effective.

2. A stronger attack on the narcotic traffic. Cooperation of state and local officials with federal authorities who now carry the bulk of the burden.

3. Creation of a special squad in the federal Narcotics Bureau to train local police in the techniques of enforcing the narcotic laws.

4. Doubling of the Narcotic Bureau staff.

5. More effective use of income tax reports in collecting evidence against criminals.

"Much valuable information on the activities of organized crime is available in state income tax returns," the report said. "Special staffs should be organized to screen this material in order to provide many leads."

(The Committee again endorsed pending legislation in Congress which would require criminals to keep detailed tax reports which, in effect, would confess their illegal transactions.)

6. Federal legislation to permit wiretapping by federal agents.

7. Adoption of Congress of a code of procedure for the broadcast or televising of Committee hearings.

Comparison of Cities

In reporting on the comparison of crime in large and small cities, the group declared, "The same pattern of organized crime found in larger metropolitan areas, exists in the medium cities, with similar evidence of official sanction or protection . . . The Accardos, the Guziks and the Costellos who direct the big city crime syndicates have their counterparts in the smaller cities."

Referring to contributions made by criminal forces to political campaigns of officials who will tolerate their activities, the report charged, "Sometimes these contributions will support a whole slate of officers in more than one political party, giving the racketeers virtual control of the governing body . . . Democracy vanishes in a captive community because the ordinary citizen for practical purposes has nothing to say about his government."

Legislation

Some 19 bills grew directly out of the crime investigation. One was passed by the Senate. Three were studied and approved by the Senate Commerce Committee. There was no action during the first session on the rest.

Other crime bills, not originating in the Committee, also were introduced during the session.

Passed Senate

Committee members introduced a bill (S 1899) July 25 designed to eliminate terrorism, extortion and racketeering from interstate transportation. It would direct the Interstate Commerce Commission to take into consideration any racketeering record of an applicant before any licenses or permits were issued.

The bill was approved by the Commerce Committee Aug. 29 without a hearing. The Senate passed it Oct. 1 on voice vote with little discussion. The measure than was referred to the House Commerce Committee.

Cleared Committee

The Senate Commerce Committee held hearings and then approved three Crime Committee bills which had been introduced May 29:

S 1563 to provide for licensing of persons disseminating in interstate commerce information concerning horse or dog racing and betting information concerning other sporting events. This was, according to Committee members, the keystone of their legislative program. It was aimed at control of the wire services which sent race information to bookies throughout the nation. The Justice Department would issue licenses only to legitimate news services.

S 1624 to prohibit transportation in interstate commerce or the mails of gambling materials, information or wagers. Its prime purpose was to suppress punchboards and pushboards.

S 1564 to ban transmission in interstate commerce of gambling information concerning a sporting event which was obtained without consent of the person conducting the sporting event. It was aimed at stopping surreptitious gathering of horse and dog race information for gambling purposes and was drawn so that it could be enforced by local officials.

Hearings

These bills were considered simultaneously with a measure (S 2116) by Edwin C. Johnson (D Colo.), chairman of the Commerce Committee, to prohibit transmission of gambling information in interstate commerce. The Johnson bill was similar in scope to the Crime Committee's S 1563. S 2116 had been drafted by the Justice Department in 1950. It would not exempt news services through a licensing arrangement, but would simply ban all dissemination of specified gambling information until after the completion of the event to which it related.

The hearings opened Sep. 19. First witnesses were Wayne Coy, chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, and Herschel Plaine, Justice Department. Plaine favored S 1563 and 1624. He opposed S 1564 and S 2116. Coy opposed S 1563 and favored S 2116. As originally introduced, S 1563 would have placed the licensing responsibility in the FCC. Coy said the Justice Department would be more suited for the job.

Representatives of Western Union and American Telephone and Telegraph Co., asked the Committee Sept. 20 to exempt their companies from the bills, saying they were cooperating to withhold service from gamblers.

Heard Sept. 25 was Roy Frank, Post Office Department, who asked for modification of S 1624. Spencer L. Drayton, Thoroughbred Racing Association, supported S 1563, S 1564 and S 1624, but opposed S 2116, saying that legitimate news services should not be banned from transmitting legitimate racing news.

W. W. Semingsen, Western Union, favored S 1563. John Hanselman, American Telephone and Telegraph Company, supported S 2116, J. Bond Smith, Hamilton Manufacturing Company, opposed S 1624 insofar as it applied to punchboards, which he said were "innocent games of chance."

Kefauver and O'Conor, sponsors of the first three bills, testified in support of their legislation Sept. 21. Both said they preferred S 1563 over S 2116. A licensing system, they said, would be more fair than a complete ban on gambling information. They also said regular news agencies should be permitted to transmit certain racing information.

Committee member Ernest W. McFarland (D Ariz.) said he saw no reason for exempting newspapers from a gambling news ban.

The Committee approved all four bills Sept. 26. The bills did not see floor action.

Bills Introduced

The Crime Committee sponsored the following bills which were not acted on during the year:

S J Res 65, introduced April 23, to set up a federal anti - crime commission.

S Con Res 28, April 23, to set up a joint Congressional committee on organized crime.

XUM

S 1529, May 23, to require gamblers to keep detailed records of their transactions for the inspection of tax collectors.

S 1530, May 23, to provide the alcohol tax administration with machinery for periodic review of licensed liquor dealers as a means to drive known racketeers out of the liquor industry.

S 1531, May 23, to require taxpayers to keep records needed for tax purposes for seven years.

S 1532, May 23, to deny the right to claim tax exemptions on business expenses incurred in or as a result of illegal betting.

S 1625 June 8, to provide that the government need show only that statements were contradictory to prove perjury.

S 1660, June 13, to require an individual who profited suddenly from illegal activities to show his new worth in his income tax return.

S 1661, June 13, to make it a criminal offense to smuggle into this country or conceal aliens who were not entitled to enter the United States.

S 1662, June 13, to permit the Attorney General to cancel suspension of deportation against an alien when new evidence comes up within five years of the time the alien received the suspension.

S 1663, June 13, to extend the 1936 Liquor Enforcement Act to restrict transportation of liquor through local option states as well as dry states.

S 1900, July 25, to increase the penalty for the sale of narcotics to persons under seventeen years of age.

S 2059, Aug. 27, to provide penalties for failure to comply with tax information required in regard to liquor sales and slot machine operation.

S 2061, Aug. 27, to ban certain lotteries.

S 2062, Aug. 27, to provide penalties for transportation of liquor into dry states.

Further Probe Rejected

A bill (S Res 207) providing $150,000 for a further investigation into interstate crime, to be made by the Commerce Committee, was rejected Sept. 26 by the Commerce Committee. Vote, in closed session, was reported to be 6-7 on party lines.

The bill was introduced Sept. 12 by Republicans Homer E. Capehart (Ind.) John W. Bricker (Ohio), Owen Brewster (Me.), James P. Kem (Mo.) and Charles W. Tobey (N. H.). All were members of the Commerce Committee.

Internal Security Commission

S J Res 70

On Jan. 23, President Truman issued an executive order creating a "President's Commission On Internal Security". As its head, he named Adm. Chester W. Nimitz, former Chief of Naval Operations. Others named to the Commission were:

Miss Anna Lord Strauss, vice-chairman; Rev. Dr. Karl Morgan Block; ex-Sen. John A. Danaher (R Conn.); Harvey S. Firestone Jr.; William E. Leahy; Russell C. Leffingwell; Charles H. Silver; and Rev. Emmett M. Walsh.

The group was to recommend ways of strengthening laws against treason, espionage, sabotage and other "subversive activities." Before the Commission was willing to undertake its job, however, it sought exemption from a law affecting certain civil servants.

Bill Disapproved

This was the so-called "conflict of interest" law which forbids persons associated with firms doing business with the government from working for the government. It was asserted that this law would have blocked the Nimitz Commission from hiring otherwise-qualified temporary assistants.

Accordingly, Rep. Francis E. Walter (D Pa.) introduced a seemingly-routine bill (HR 2829) granting the Commission the desired exemption. The House passed the bill March 19 without controversy.

But the Senate Judiciary Committee disapproved the House-passed bill April 30 by a 3-6 vote. Chairman Pat McCarran (D Nev.) said the vote didn't indicate any personal issue at all. On the contrary, he said, the Committee had "unqualified confidence" in the Commission members. The only issue, he said, was whether the laws should be complied with in full.

Rep. Walter, however, noted that similar exemptions had been granted to the Hoover Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government and also had been made in the 1950 Defense Production and Civil Defense Acts. He said "this means you're not going to be able to get an outstanding lawyer" since most prominent attorneys in Washington were likely to have some business before the government.

On the heels of the McCarran group's action, the Nimitz Commission resigned May 12, saying its inability to receive exemption from the conflict-of-interests law would hamper its activities.

Issue Revived

But the issue did not die. McCarran's Committee later framed a resolution (S J Res 70) which would have exempted from the same law Robert T. Murphy, Washington attorney whom the Senate Rules Committee wished to hire as a temporary counsel. The Senate passed the bill May 4.

When S J Res 70 reached the House, a Judiciary Subcommittee added a rider to the resolution. The rider would have granted exemption to the Nimitz board. The full House Judiciary Committee endorsed the amended resolution May 22 by a unanimous vote.

But when the double-barrelled resolution was taken up in the House June 18, Walter withdrew the portion affecting the Nimitz group. As the resolution then stood before the House, it would have exempted only Murphy from the conflict-of-interests statute.

It was pointed out in the ensuing debate that Murphy was being hired to help with a Senate investigation into the 1950 Senatorial campaign in Ohio. In that race, Sen. Robert A. Taft (R) handily defeated Joseph T. Ferguson (D), state auditor.

Rep. Clarence J. Brown (R Ohio), who was Taft's manager in the Senator's unsuccessful 1948 bid for the GOP Presidential nomination, led the opposition in the House to S J Res 70. Ultimately, the House backed him up. It declined to grant the exemption to Murphy, and defeated the Senate's resolution by a 120-164 roll-call vote June 18. (See p. 404.)

On Oct. 27, President Truman abandoned all plans for the Commission and deplored the congressional block of his project.

Contempt Citations

The Senate in 1951 approved 45 contempt of Congress citations, all requested by the Senate's Special Committee to Investigate Crime in Interstate Commerce. (See story on Crime Investigation, page 341). No other contempt citations were requested.

Under the terms of the resolutions making the citations, the records of the contempt were certified to United States attorneys for presentation to local grand juries. When a grand jury filed an indictment, the defendant was entitled to a jury trial. As 1951 ended, litigation was still in progress in most of the cases.

Background — In 1946 and 1947 a score of witnesses refused to answer House Un - American Activities Committee questions of political affiliation on Constitutional grounds of the right to free speech and of protection against compulsory self - incrimination. The House then approved contempt of Congress citations against the recalcitrant witnesses. These and later contempt citations were fought all the way to the Supreme Court, which in both 1948 and in 1950 refused to review them. The appeals were based mainly on the right of free speech. (For background on 1950 contempt of Congress citations, see CQ Almanac, Vol. VI, p. 423.)

However, in December, 1950, the Supreme Court reversed the conviction of Mrs. Patricia Blau for refusing on grounds of possible self - incrimination to tell a Denver grand jury of any connections with the Communist Party in Colorado.

Of that case, Justice Hugo L. Black said "the Constitution gives a witness the privilege of remaining silent" when testimony before a grand jury would "furnish a link in the chain of evidence needed for criminal prosecution."

Although the Supreme Court ruling in the Blau case did not bear directly on refusal of witness to testify before Congressional Committees, it left in doubt the outcome of some of the citations pressed by the House and Senate.

Senate Action

The first contempt citation resolution in 1951 was S Res 43, citing Joseph Doto, alias Joe Adonis. When it reached the Senate floor Jan. 23 Pat McCarran (D Nev.), Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, moved that it be referred to his unit for further study, arguing that a legal question was involved. The Nevada Senator pointed out the Supreme Court in the Blau case had upheld the right of witnesses to refuse to answer self-accusing questions under constitutional privilege, and Doto had protested his replies might incriminate him.

Sen Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) took the position that the witness had been asked questions which, if answered, could not have incriminated him for any offense of the law. He was supported in opposition to the McCarran motion by Sens. Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.) and Homer Ferguson (R Mich.)

The Senate rejected McCarran's motion by a roll-call vote of 12-59 (see page 399), then passed the contempt resolution by voice vote.

The Senate then went ahead and approved en bloc contempt citation resolutions (S Res 43-50) for other witnesses who, like Adonis, had refused to answer questions during the 1950 Crime Committee hearings. These included Anthony J. (Tony) Accardo, reputedly the late Al Capone's successor as underworld boss in Chicago; Jack I. Dragna of Los Angeles; and others from Chicago, San Francisco and New Jersey.

Regarding still other witness, Chairman Kefauver disclosed that the Committee had decided to withhold contempt proceedings against Meyer Lansky, involved in the Committee's New York probe in 1950, and William Weisberg and Harry Stromberg, alias Nig Rosen, figures in the 1950 Philadelphia investigation. Kefauver said they indicated through their attorneys that they were willing to answer questions in the hope of escaping contempt charges.

Asks More Citations

Following hearings in New Orleans and Cleveland in January, 1951, the Kefauver committee on Jan. 29 voted to request still more citations. It reported five resolutions (S Res 66-70) for this purpose Feb. 8 and eight (S Res 78-85) on Feb. 21. The Senate adopted all 13 by voice vote on Feb. 21.

The same day the Senate adopted a resolution (S Res 65) authorizing arrest warrants for 17 more witnesses accused by the Crime Committee of going into hiding to escape questioning.

Meanwhile, previous citation cases saw court action. Harry Russell, Chicago and Miami Beach gambler, went to trial in the U.S. District Court of Washington on Jan. 31. He faced a 60 - count contempt of Congress indictment, growing out of his 1950 testimony before the Kefauver Committee. The Senate had cited him Sept. 23, 1950.

But Russell was acquitted Feb. 5 on the grounds that he was within his Constitutional rights in declining to answer the Committee's questions.

Russell's attorney moved for a "judgment of acquittal." Judge F. Dickinson Letts granted the motion and freed Russell, explaining that Russell was "privileged to remain mute as he had reasonable grounds for apprehension."

Committee Chairman Kefauver said he would go ahead with other prosecutions for contempt. Karl E. Mundt (R S D.), however, said the acquittal would seriously hinder many Congressional investigations. Clyde R. Hoey (D N.C.) said he thought normal investigations would not be hampered by the legal decision.

In other actions involving 1950 contempt citations:

Federal district judges Feb. 26 ruled two officials of the United Electrical Workers guilty of contempt after hearings, without juries, in Washington. Thomas Quinn, 33, Pittsburgh, a UE field organizer, and Julius Emspak, 46, national secretary-treasurer, pleaded constitutional privilege for not answering questions of a House Un-American Activities Subcommittee during 1950 on grounds of possible self-incrimination. The judges held that in both cases the plea was defective. Quinn was sentenced to serve four months to a year and pay a $1,000 fine, while Emspak was committed pending sentence.

F. V. Field Freed

A federal judge March 8 acquitted James J. Matles, national organizational director of the United Electrical Workers, of contempt of Congress. Judge F. Dickinson Letts, who tried the case in Washington without a jury, said the record caused him to believe Rep. Morgan M. Moulder (D Mo.) had understood that Matles refused to answer seven questions because of possible self-incrimination.

The U. S. attorney contended Matles failed to state clearly his reasons for not answering when he appeared Dec. 5, 1949 before a House Un-American Activities subcommittee inquiring into alleged Communist infiltration of unions.
